Saving by Later Act of Rights Accrued under Earlier Act.]—See London and North-Western Railway v. Walker, 72 L. J. K.B. 578, ante, RAILWAY.

4. WHEN RETROSPECTIVE.

Intention.]—Retrospective effect ought not to be given to a statute unless an intention to that effect is expressed in plain and unambiguous language. Midland Railway v. Pye (10 C. B. (N.S.) 191) approved. Young v. Adams, 67 L. J. P.C. 75; [1898] A.C. 469; 78 L. T. 506—P.C.

The Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act, 1897, is not retrospective in its operation. Waverley Typewriter, Lim., In re; D'Esterre v. Waverley Typewriter, Lim., 67 L. J. Ch. 360; [1898] 1 Ch. 699; 78 L. T. 593; 46 W. R. 685; 5 Manson, 269—Wright, J.

"It is declared."—The use of the words "It is declared" in a statute does not necessarily import that the statute is merely declaratory of existing law, and therefore retrospective. Harding v. Queensland Commissioners of Stamps, 67 L. J. P.C. 144; [1898] A.C. 769; 79 L. T. 42—P.C.

Code of Civil Procedure.]—The principle that legislation is presumed not to be retroactive cannot, in the case of an alteration in the general law, be extended to all the consequences of the original enactment. Thus it does not operate to preserve the privileges of the grantor of a lease in respect of the judicial abandonment of property by a trader where those privileges have been curtailed by legislation subsequent to the date of the lease. Ross v. Beaudry, 74 L. J. P.C. 106; [1905] A.C. 570; 93 L. T. 315; 21 T. L. R. 735—P.C.

Criminal Procedure.]—Section 27 of the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904, which substitutes a limit of six months for the three months mentioned in the second proviso of section 5 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, deals with "procedure only. Therefore, after the Act of 1904 comes into operation a prisoner who previously committed an offence under section 5, sub-section 1 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, may, within the limit of six months from the commission of the offence imposed by section 27 of the Act of 1904, be prosecuted for the offence, although he committed it more than three months previously to the commencement of the prosecution, so that the limitation of time for commencing the prosecution imposed by section 5 of the Act of 1885 is exceeded. Rea v. Dharma, 74 L. J. K.B. 450; [1905] 2 K.B. 335; 92 L. T. 700; 53 W. R. 431; 69 J. P. 198—C.C.R.

Limitation of Actions—Right of Action Accrued before Statute Passed.]—The Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, applies to an action in respect of a right of action accrued before the Act was passed. The Ydun, 68 L. J. P. 101; [1899] P. 236; 81 L. T. 10; 8 Asp. M.C. 551—C.A.

By the Ribble Navigation and Preston Dock Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. cxv.), the defendants, the mayor, aldermen, and burgesses of the borough of Preston, are constituted the port and harbour authority for the port and harbour of Preston. By the Public Authorities Protection Act, which was passed on December 5, 1893, and came into force on January 1, 1894, an action against any person, in respect of any alleged neglect or default in the execution of any Act of Parliament or of any public duty or authority, must be commenced within six months next after the act, neglect, or default complained of. The plaintiffs, owners of a barque, issued a writ, on November 14, 1898, in an Admiralty action, against the defendants, for damages sustained by the grounding of their vessel on September 13, 1893, in the river Ribble within the port and harbour of Preston, through the alleged negligence of the defendants in inviting the vessel to come up when there was not sufficient water in the channel leading to the docks:—Held, that the defendants were acting in pursuance of their public duties, so that section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, applied, and as that statute, dealing with procedure only, was retrospective, the action was barred after the expiration of six months from the default complained of. Ib.

Agricultural Holdings.]—The Agricultural Holdings Act, 1900, gives tenants right to compensation, inter alia, for "laying down temporary pasture with clover, grass, lucerne, sainfoin, or other seeds, sown more than two years prior to the determination of the tenancy":—Held, that a tenant, whose tenancy terminated less than two years from the date of the Act, was entitled to compensation under this enactment. Hamilton Ogilvy v. Elliot, 7 F. 1115—Ct. of Sess.

Right of Appeal—Legislation Taking Away such Right.]—A right of appeal to a higher tribunal is a matter of substance, and not of procedure, and such a right, unless expressly or by necessary intendment retrospectively abolished, is not taken away by subsequent legislation. Thus the right of appeal to the King in Council, which was taken away by the Australian Commonwealth Judiciary Act, 1903, but is not retrospective, still subsists in a suit pending when the Act was passed. Colonial Sugar Refining Co. v. Irving, 74 L. J. P.C. 77; [1905] A.C. 369; 92 L. T. 738; 21 T. L. R. 513—P.C.

Declaratory Act is Retrospective.]—See Lovell and Collard's Contract, In re, 76 L. J. Ch. 246, ante, REVENUE.

Vested Interests—Act Dealing with, is not Retrospective.]—See The Langdale, 76 L. J. P. 154, ante, SHIPPING.

5. STATUTORY POWERS.

Local Authority Created by Statute—Purchase of Tramways—Running of Omnibuses—Ultra Vires.]—Where a corporation is the creation of statute its powers are confined to such as are expressly, or by necessary implication, conferred by the statute. Thus the London County Council, constituted by the Local Government Act, 1888, and having thereunder and in virtue of other statutes the power of acquiring and working tramways, is not entitled to run a service of omnibuses, such service not being a necessary incident of the business of a tramway company. London County Council v. Att.-Gen. 71 L. J. Ch. 268; [1902] A.C. 165; 86 L. T. 161; 50 W. R. 497; 66 J. P. 340—H.L. (E.)

Trespass—Mandatory Injunction.]—A public body invested with statutory powers must take care not to exceed or abuse those powers, and must act in good faith within the limits of its authority. Westminster Corporation v. London and North-Western Railway, 74 L. J. Ch. 629; [1905] A.C. 426; 93 L. T. 143; 54 W. R. 129; 69 J. P. 425; 3 L. G. R. 1120; 21 T. L. R. 686—H.L. (E.)

Public Body with Statutory Powers—Dedication of Highway on Land Acquired for Statutory Purposes.]—If land is vested by an Act of Parliament in a statutory body so that they are thereby bound to use it for some special purpose incompatible with its public use as a highway, such a body is unable in point of law to make a dedication of it; but if such use by the public be not incompatible with the objects prescribed by the Act, then such a body have the power. A public body is incapable of dedicating a right of way over the embankment of a reservoir where it is proved that the user by the public must ultimately lead to the destruction of the embankment unless great expense is incurred by the company for the purpose of preventing such a result. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway v. Davenport, 4 L. G. R. 425; 70 J. P. 129—C.A.

Land Acquired for Statutory Purposes—Railway Company—Power to Dedicate to the Public.]—A statutory body, such as a railway company, cannot alienate its rights in land (other than superfluous land) acquired for a statutory purpose, if such alienation may in the future prove incompatible with the use of the land for carrying out the company's statutory objects. Taff Vale Railway v. Pontypridd

Urban Council, 93 L. T. 126; 69 J. P. 351; 3 L. G. R. 1339—Buckley, J.

A railway company built and maintained a private accommodation bridge over its lines to connect the properties of a landowner that had been severed by the railway. The bridge in course of time came to be much used by the public, and the acts done in connection with it by the railway company would, if they had been the acts of a private owner, have constituted a dedication of the roadway to the public. Gas pipes were laid by the local authority in the roadway of the bridge on the footing that the bridge was a public road, and in exercise of the powers conferred by section 6 of the Gas Works Clauses Act, 1847. The railway company wished to alter the bridge, in order to lay down more lines on land acquired for that purpose, and adjacent to their existing lines at the bridge, and requested the local authority to remove the gas pipes:—Held, that the bridge in question was not a public road so as to enable the local authority to exercise therein the powers conferred by the above-mentioned section. Att.-Gen. v. London and South-Western Railway (21 T. L. R. 220) explained. Held, also, that this decision in the absence of the Attorney-General did not bind the Public. Ib.

A mandatory injunction compelling the local authority to remove their gas pipes was refused on the ground that the local authority might be entitled to retain them by virtue of section 7 of the Gas Works Clauses Act, 1847. Ib.

Land Acquired by Agreement for Purposes of Special Order — Proposed User of Part for Another Purpose — Refuse Destructor — Refuse as Fuel for Generating Station — Combined Scheme.]—It is ultra vires for a local authority, having acquired land for particular purposes under the powers of a special Act, to use the land so acquired, or any part of it, for another purpose, although such purpose may be within powers given to them under some other Act. Att.-Gen. v. Pontypridd Urban Council, 75 L. J. Ch. 578; [1906] 2 Ch. 257; 95 L. T. 224; 70 J. P. 394; 4 L. G. R. 791; 22 T. L. R. 576—C.A.

The defendant council had acquired land by agreement for the purposes of their special order under the Electric Lighting Acts, and were proposing to use a small part of such land as a site for a refuse destructor connected in such a way with their generating station that the refuse could be used as fuel for the purpose of generating electrical energy:—Held, that the land, having been acquired under the powers of the Electric Lighting Acts, and not under the powers of the Public Health Act, 1875, could only be used for the purpose of supplying electricity, and for such acts and things as might be necessary and incidental to such supply; that the refuse destructor was not a subsidiary part of or thing incidental to the supply of electricity, but was an independent work intended to enable the defendants to dispose of their refuse in compliance with their statutory obligations under the Public Health Act, 1875, and that the proposed user of the piece of land for this purpose was therefore ultra vires. Ib.

Use of Land—Injury to Adjoining Land—Imperative or Permissive Rights—Compensation.]—Wherever the Legislature has authorised a proprietor to make a particular use of his land, and the authority is permissive and not imperative, the Legislature must be held to have intended that the use sanctioned is not to be in prejudice of the common-law rights of others. Canadian Pacific Railway v. Parke, 68 L. J. P.C. 89; [1899] A.C. 535; 81 L. T. 127; 48 W. R. 118—P.C.

The owner of land exercising statutory rights, for the purpose of irrigating his own land, to divert under prescribed conditions unrecorded and unappropriated water from the natural channel of any stream, lake, or river adjacent to or passing through such land, is not entitled, where the language of the statute is permissive and not imperative, to use his water supply so as to damage adjacent lands, and is liable to adjoining proprietors, even in the absence of negligence on his part, for injury done to their land in the course of such irrigation. Ib.

Dedication — Whether Compatible with User of Railway.]—A railway company can dedicate a footway in the nature of a level crossing, so long as the user of such path is not inconsistent with the obligations of the company. Where, therefore, a railway company had dedicated such a footway across its line and there was no danger involved thereby to the user of the railway or to the safety of the public using the trains, the company were restrained from closing the footpath. Att.-Gen. v. London and South-Western Railway, 69 J. P. 110; 3 L. G. R. 1327; 21 T. L. R. 220—Farwell, J.

Interference with Tunnel under River Thames — Dredging Operations likely to Endanger Tunnel — Injunction.]—An injunction granted restraining the defendants from carrying out dredging operations likely to cause danger to the tunnel belonging to the plaintiffs, which was constructed under statutory authority. East London Railway v. Thames Conservators, 68 J. P. 302—Farwell, J.

Unreasonable Exercise of Statutory Powers.]—The defendants were authorised by statute to carry out certain works in connection with their undertaking, and were in the habit of carrying on work on the site of a proposed station by night as well as by day. The plaintiff, who occupied a house close to this site, brought an action to restrain the defendants from working at night, alleging that such work rendered his house uninhabitable, and was a vexatious and unreasonable abuse by the defendants of their statutory powers. He also claimed damages:—Held, that, upon the assumption that working at night was unreasonable and rendered the plaintiff's house uninhabitable, a good cause of action was disclosed. The fact that compensation could be obtained under section 63 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, did not exclude the regulating and restraining jurisdiction of the Court. Roberts v. Charing Cross, Euston, and Hampstead Railway, 87 L. T. 732—Farwell, J.

Damage Caused in Carrying out Statutory Powers — Absence of Negligence.]—Where a company or corporation is empowered by statute to do a certain thing, it is not liable for damage caused in carrying out its statutory powers, in the absence of negligence. Canadian-Pacific Railway v. Roy, 71 L. J. P.C. 51; [1902] A.C. 220; 85 L. T. 127; 50 W. R. 415—P.C.

Injury to Individual—Remedy.]—Where a public body, acting in the execution of their public duties for the public benefit, do an act which they are authorised by law to do, and the act, though done in a proper manner, causes special injury to a particular person, that person has no remedy unless one is given by statute. The appellants corporation, acting in pursuance of statutory powers, altered the gradient of a street in the town, and thereby seriously interfered with the access to the respondent's house. The Act under which the appellants acted made no provision for compensation in respect of consequential injury:—Held, that the respondent could not maintain an action against the corporation in respect of such injury. East Fremantle Corporation v. Annois, 71 L. J. P.C. 39; [1902] A.C. 213; 85 L. T. 732; 67 J. P. 103—P.C.

Exceeding—Injury.]—A shopkeeper sued a local authority for damages caused by loss of business at his shop through the road which gave access to the shop being unnecessarily and negligently obstructed by them. Under an Act of Parliament the defendants were empowered to obstruct the road temporarily while making a new street:—Held, that there being no evidence of any damage to the plaintiff arising out of any excess by the defendants of their statutory powers, the defendants were entitled to judgment. Quare, whether assuming a loss of business through such an excess, the injury to the plaintiff would have been actionable. Martin v. London County Council, 80 L. T. 866—C.A.

Where a private person is injured owing to works carried out by a public authority under statutory powers, even if such works are unnecessarily or unreasonably delayed, an action for damages will not lie unless the person aggrieved can shew he has been injured specially, directly, and substantially. S.C. 79 L. T. 170—per KENNEDY, J.

— Exercise of Statutory Powers—Injury Caused by such Exercise.]—When powers are given by statute to a person or corporation which necessarily imply that damage may be caused to others in their exercise, an action for damage at the instance of any one injuriously affected thereby is excluded; such powers, however, must not be exercised arbitrarily, carelessly, or oppressively. Southwark and Vauxhall Water Co. v. Wandsworth District Board, 62 J. P. 519—Kekewich, J. Affirmed, C.A., 67 L. J. Ch. 657; [1898] 2 Ch. 603; 79 L. T. 132; 62 J. P. 756; 47 W. R. 107. See col. 1656.

Nuisance.]—Where a nuisance is caused by a company in its execution of works under statutory powers, the company will not be restrained by injunction or made liable in damages if it is acting “reasonably” in the execution of the works. Ash v. Great Northern, Piccadilly, and Brompton Railway, 67 J. P. 417—Kekewich, J.

Construction of Electrical Tramway—Roadway and Pavement—Nuisance.]—A corporation, purporting to act in the exercise of their powers under their special Tramways Act, which incorporated the Tramways Act, 1870, and authorised the construction of an electric tramway, erected a pole and a fuse-box in the footpath close to the principal entrance of the plaintiffs' premises:—Held, that the defendants' statutory powers authorised them to use the pavement for the purpose of doing that which was necessary for making their tramway an electrical tramway; that the nuisance which the defendants were authorised to commit could not be interfered with unless the plaintiffs could prove that the powers conferred upon the defendants had been abused, which the plaintiffs had failed to do; and that therefore the action could not be maintained. Goldberg v. Liverpool Pool Corporation, 82 L. T. 362—C.A.

Electric Lighting Order—“Nothing in this Order shall exonerate the undertakers from any indictment action or other proceeding for nuisance in the event of any nuisance being caused by them” —Leakage of Electricity—Explosion—Damage to Property in Adjoining Premises—Liability of Undertakers.]—The defendants, a municipal corporation, were the undertakers for the supply of electricity to their district under the provisions of an Order made under the Electric Lighting Acts, 1882 and 1888, and confirmed by Parliament. By the Regulations of the Board of Trade made under the Acts and Order the defendants were required to constantly maintain a supply of electricity in their mains at the pressure fixed by the Order. The Order contained a clause that “nothing in this Order shall exonerate the undertakers from any indictment action or other proceeding for nuisance in the event of any nuisance being caused by them.” A leakage of electricity from one of the defendants' mains caused the bitumen in which the wire was encased to be fused, whereby a gas was generated which, escaping into the premises of the plaintiffs adjoining the street in which the main was laid, exploded there and damaged the plaintiffs' property:—Held, in an action by the plaintiffs for damages, that, apart from any question of negligence, the defendants had caused a “nuisance” within the meaning of the clause in their Order, and consequently that, the statutory authority conferred upon them under their Order being qualified by the condition contained in the Order, they were not thereby protected from liability to the plaintiffs for the damages sustained by them. Shelfer v. City of London Electric Lighting Co. (64 L. J. Ch. 216; [1895] 1 Ch. 287) followed. Midwood v. Manchester Corporation, 74 L. J. K.B. 884; [1905] 2 K.B. 597; 93 L. T. 525; 54 W. R. 37; 69 J. P. 348; 3 L. G. R. 1136; 21 T. L. R. 667—C.A.

6. STATUTORY DUTY.

Proceedings to Enforce.—Where powers are given to a statutory company for the supply of a commodity, the Act providing that in certain specified events the price is to be reduced, and the municipality is authorised to audit the company's annual statement and verify their accounts, an aggrieved consumer, in the absence of any pecuniary penalty for default or for the reservation of any right of action to individuals, has no right of action against the company for non-compliance with the provisions of the Act. To the corporation only in such a case is the duty confided of seeing that the Act is obeyed. Johnston v. Toronto Gas Consumers Co., 67 L. J. P.O. 33; [1898] A.C. 447; 78 L. T. 270—P.C.

Breach of Statutory Provision—Remedy.—See INJUNCTION, col. 1015.

7. CONFIRMATORY STATUTES.

Toll — Franchise — Confirmation of Customary Title by Statute—Substitution of Statutory for Customary Title—Extinction of Customary Title.—Where an Act of Parliament, according to its true construction, has embraced and confirmed a right which previously existed by custom or prescription, such right becomes thenceforth a statutory right, and the lower right by custom and prescription is merged in and extinguished by the higher title of the Act of Parliament. New Windsor Corporation v. Taylor, 68 L. J. Q.B. 87; [1899] A.C. 41; 79 L. T. 450; 68 J. P. 164—H.L. (E.)

Contract — Confirmation of — Vagueness — Remoteness.—Where an agreement between parties is confirmed by Act of Parliament, every clause in it has statutory validity, and no objection can be taken to any provision in it on the ground that it is void for remoteness or uncertainty. Manchester Ship Canal Co. v. Manchester Racecourse Co., 70 L. J. Ch. 468; [1901] 2 Ch. 37; 84 L. T. 486; 49 W. R. 418—C.A.

— Illegal—Statutory Confirmation of.—See CONTRACT, col. 522.

8. CONSOLIDATING STATUTES.

Ambiguity — Previous Legislation.—Where the wording of a consolidating Act of Parliament is ambiguous, the Court is entitled to look at previous Acts of Parliament passed in pari materia and see how the matter was there dealt with. Rea v. Abrahams, 73 L. J. K.B. 972; [1904] 2 K.B. 859; 91 L. T. 493; 68 J. P. 546; 20 T. L. R. 684—Lord Alverstone, C.J.

9. STATUTORY REMEDY.

Market—Statutory Regulation—Disturbance—Common Law Action—Injunction.—Where an ancient market is regulated by an Act of Parliament, an action at law will lie for disturbance of the market, notwithstanding provisions giving a summary remedy before a special tribunal. Stevens v. Chown, 70 L. J. Ch. 571; [1901] 1 Ch. 894; 84 L. T. 796; 49 W. R. 460; 65 J. P. 470—Farwell, J.

But the remedy formerly administered by the Court of Chancery by injunction was more extensive than any common law remedy, and may be invoked to prevent an invasion of proprietary rights, whether newly created or merely confirmed by statute, unless the statute expressly or by a necessary implication excludes that remedy, and the Court will not infer this intention from a provision for the purpose of protecting the right. Id.

Different Remedies — Limitation of Time — Lex Fori.—If in an Act of Parliament power is conferred to take remedy in divers Courts, as a general rule that remedy will, in each Court, be subject to the lex fori of that Court, including the limitation of actions. Blackburn Corporation v. Sanderson, 71 L. J. K.B. 590; [1902] 1 K.B. 794; 86 L. T. 304; 66 J. P. 452—C.A.

Remedy by Summary Jurisdiction—Jurisdiction of High Court.—Where by an Act of Parliament a claim thereunder is made enforceable by a Court of summary jurisdiction, it is not competent to enforce such claim by means other than those prescribed by the statute, or to have recourse to the High Court in order to determine the right. Barraclough v. Brown, 66 L. J. Q.B. 672; [1897] A.C. 615; 76 L. T. 797; 62 J. P. 275; 8 Asp. M.C. 290—H.L. (E.) See also Grand Junction Waterworks Co. v. Hampton Urban Council (No. 1), 67 L. J. Ch. 608.

Statutory Remedy not Exclusive.—See GAS.

10. STATUTORY PENALTY.

Prohibitory Statute — Illegal Contract.—Where by a statute a penalty is imposed—not solely for protection of the revenue, but solely or partly for that of the public—for doing or omitting any act, such act or omission is impliedly prohibited by the statute, and is illegal. Victorian Daylesford Syndicate v. Dott, 74 L. J. Ch. 678; [1905] 2 Ch. 624; 93 L. T. 627; 54 W. R. 231; 21 T. L. R. 742—Buckley, J. S.P., Bonnard v. Dott, 75 L. J. Ch. 446; [1906] 1 Ch. 740; 94 L. T. 656; 22 T. L. R. 399—C.A.

Special Agreement for Supply of Energy—Breach of Contract by Failure to Supply—Penalty Clause—Action for Damages.—By their private Act the defendants were bound to supply electrical energy to certain classes of persons. They were also empowered to supply other persons under special agreements. By clause 62 of their Act it was provided that "Whenever the undertakers make default in supplying energy to any owner or occupier of premises to whom they may be and are required to supply energy under this part of this Act they shall be liable in respect of each default to a penalty. . . ." A special agreement was made between the plaintiffs (who were not persons to whom the defendants were bound to give a supply) and the defendants for a supply of energy by the latter. The defendants, as the plaintiffs alleged, made default in the supply of energy, whereby the plaintiffs suffered damage, and thereupon the plaintiffs sued to recover damages for such default:—Held, that the action was maintainable, as the penalty section only applied in the case of consumers to whom the defendants were bound to make a supply. Morris & Bastert v. Loughborough Corporation, 77 L. J. K.B. 91; [1908] 1 K.B. 205; 71 J. P. 521; 6 L. G. R. 55—C.A. Reversing, 5 L. G. R. 269—Bigham, J.

11. LOCAL AND PRIVATE STATUTES.

Private Act — Special Obligations — General Act.]—Private Acts conferring special rights and imposing special obligations for special purposes are not overruled by general legislation, the application of which might interfere with the rights granted and the obligations imposed by the private Acts. Esquimalt Waterworks Co. v. City of Victoria Corporation, 76 L. J. P.C. 75; [1907] A.C. 499; 97 L. T. 492; 23 T. L. R. 762—P.C.

“Local or private Act of Parliament.”]—A railway company’s special Act is a “local or private Act” within section 13 of the Public Health Act, 1875, although in the special Act itself it is provided that “this Act shall be a public Act.” London and North-Western Railway v. Runcorn Rural Council, 67 L. J. Ch. 324; [1898] 1 Ch. 561; 78 L. T. 343; 46 W. R. 484; 62 J. P. 643—C.A.

Effect of General on Special Act.]—See Ash-ton-under-Lyne Corporation v. Pugh, ante, col. 1406.

13. REPEAL OF STATUTES.

Repeal by Implication—Earlier by Later Act.]—An Act of Parliament enacted that no lands in a city should be liable to contribute to any rate made by or in accordance with the precept of any board, authority, or person other than the corporation:—Held, that this enactment, though prima facie capable of exempting the lands in question from a rate made by the Commissioners of Sewers, had not that effect. Bristol Corporation v. Canning, 95 L. T. 183; 70 J. P. 528—Buckley, J.

Procedure Section—Procedure—Offence under Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1879—Power of Amendment.]—Where an Act creating an offence is kept in force, and the section providing procedure only is repealed, and other procedure is provided by the repealing Act, although an offence is committed while the repealed section is in force, if proceedings are not taken until after the repeal takes effect, they are governed by the requirements of the repealing Act. In such a case the old form of procedure is not kept alive by section 38, sub-section 2 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, as to offences committed under the earlier Act. Batt v. Mattinson, 82 L. T. 800; 64 J. P. 615; 19 Cox C.C. 532—D.

Effect of Saving Clause—Jurisdiction.]—Although by virtue of section 340 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, the Lords Justices have no power to make a vesting order of the trust property under that Act in the case of a criminal lunatic who is a trustee, there is jurisdiction to make such an order under section 5 of the Trustee Act, 1850. The powers of the Lords Justices under the Trustee Act, 1850, are, notwithstanding the repeal of section 5 by section 342 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, preserved, as regards criminal lunatic trustees, by the saving clause in the same section. *R. STOCK EXCHANGE.

Employment of Broker—Rules.]—Where a broker is employed to do business on a Stock Exchange, he must, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, be taken to be employed on the terms of such Stock Exchange. Forget v. Baater, 69 L. J. P.C. 101; [1900] A.C. 467; 82 L. T. 510—P.C.

Rules—Defaulting Broker—Collection of Assets—Money paid into Court in Action by Official Assignee in Name of Defaulter—Charging Order Subsequently Obtained by General Creditor of Defaulter—Assignment—Priorities.]—The official assignee of the Stock Exchange, in collecting, under the rules of the Stock Exchange, the assets of a defaulting broker, brought an action in the name of the defaulter against one of his clients, and succeeded in obtaining the payment into Court of part of the amount claimed. Subsequently, one of the defaulter’s creditors, whose claim did not arise out of any transaction on the Stock Exchange, recovered judgment against the defaulter and obtained a charging order nisi on the money paid into Court in the previous action. No proceedings had been taken to have the defaulting broker adjudicated bankrupt:—Held, that the charging order nisi must be discharged, as, under the rules of the Stock Exchange, there had been a valid assignment to the official assignee, which, being prior in date to the judgment creditor’s rights, took priority over them. Lomas v. Graves, 73 L. J. K.B. 803; [1904] 2 K.B. 557; 91 L. T. 616; 20 T. L. R. 657—C.A.

— Construction of—“Assets” of Defaulting

Member—Meaning of "Assets" in Rule 176.]—The words "the assets" in rule 176 of the Stock Exchange Rules, which provides that the official "assignees shall collect and pay the assets to the credit of their joint account at a banker's, and shall distribute the same as soon as possible," mean the whole of the assets of a defaulting member. Richardson v. Stormont, Todd & Co., 69 L. J. Q.B. 369; [1900] 1 Q.B. 701; 82 L. T. 316; 48 W. R. 451; 5 Com. Cas. 134—C.A.

Right of Official Assignee to Sue.]—The official assignee has such a right or interest in the assets of a defaulter as entitles him to sue in his own name to recover the same. Tomkins v. Saffery (47 L. J. Bk. 11; 3 App. Cas. 213) considered. Ib.

Loan on Shares by Jobber to Broker—Outside Principal—Default of Broker—Default of Principal—Rules.]—The rules of the Stock Exchange, whereby in the case of the failure of a member of the Stock Exchange, all members having transactions open with the defaulter are compelled to close them by buying or selling, as the case may be, the securities concerned at an official price, are rules affecting the relations of the members of the Stock Exchange only inter se. They will not apply to an outside principal, even though the failure which has caused the rules to become applicable was due to the default of the principal. Ponsolle v. Webber, 77 L. J. Ch. 253; [1908] 1 Ch. 254—Neville, J.

A broker obtained on behalf of an undisclosed principal a loan from a jobber until the following settling day, on the security of shares sold for that settling day to another broker acting for the same undisclosed principal. The purchasing and borrowing brokers both made default in respect of the transaction, owing to the failure of the undisclosed principal to put either of them in funds to meet their obligations in respect of the transaction:—Held, that, although by the rules of the Stock Exchange the lender was compelled as a result of the failures to take over the shares at an official price from the borrowing broker in part payment of his loan, he could not claim as against the principal to retain the shares for his own benefit, but, having subsequently sold the shares at an enhanced price, was bound to account to the principal for the proceeds of sale, after deducting his principal, interest, and costs. Ib.

SUNDAY.

Observance—Shopkeeper not Present in Shop.]—On an information under the Lord's Day Observance Act, 1676, it was proved that at 1.20 p.m. on Sunday, May 13, 1906, several persons went to the appellant's shop and purchased oranges, sweets, and eggs. At 1.30 p.m. a child purchased some currants and a youth tobacco. A police constable who was watching went into the shop and saw a young man, who was in charge of the shop, and the latter made a communication to him about the appellant. The young man was a railway clerk, and was seventeen years of age. The shop remained open until 10 p.m. He saw the appellant on May 14, 1906, on the subject, and he replied that he was doing nothing wrong so long as he himself kept away from the shop. In cross-examination the witness said that the appellant, in addition to the shop where he carries on business as a grocer and general dealer, was a beer retailer at Barnsley. He was also a cycle repairer. The Justices convicted the appellant:—Held, that the conviction was good. Connor v. Quest, 96 L. T. 28; 71 J. P. 62; 21 Cox C.C. 345—D.

Exercising Ordinary Calling—Chipped-potato Dealer—"Cook's shop . . . for such as otherwise cannot be provided."]—A tradesman in the course of his business cut up and cooked or fried potatoes, sometimes alone and sometimes with fish, which he sold hot on his premises to the poorer classes. He was charged with exercising his ordinary calling by doing this on a Sunday:—Held, that his premises came within the exception in section 3 of the Sunday Observance Act, 1677, as being a "cook's shop" for such as otherwise could not be provided, and that he was therefore not liable to the penalty imposed by section 1 of the Act. Bullen v. Ward, 74 L. J. K.B. 916; 93 L. T. 439; 54 W. R. 411; 69 J. P. 422; 21 Cox C.C. 28; 21 T. L. R. 753—D.

— Hairdresser—"Tradesman."]—A hair-dresser is not within section 1 of the Sunday Observance Act, 1677, which provides that "no tradesman, artificer, workman, labourer, or other person whatsoever, shall do or exercise any worldly labour, business, or work of their ordinary callings upon the Lord's Day." Palmer v. Snow, 69 L. J. Q.B. 356; [1900] 1 Q.B. 725; 82 L. T. 199; 48 W. R. 351; 64 J. P. 342; 19 Cox C.C. 475—D.

Institution of Prosecution—Consent in Writing—Bread Act.—The provision of section 1 of the Sunday Observance Prosecution Act, 1871, that no prosecution or other proceeding shall be instituted for any offence committed under 29 Car. 2, c. 7 (the Sunday Observance Act, 1677), except by or with the consent in writing of the chief officer of police of the district or with the consent in writing of two Justices of the peace or a stipendiary magistrate, has no application to prosecutions under section 16 of the Bread Act, 1822, for selling or exposing for sale bread on the Lord's Day. Re v. Mead, 71 L. J. K.B. 871; [1902] 2 K.B. 212; 87 L. T. 136; 50 W. R. 589; 66 J. P. 676; 20 Cox C.C. 337—D.

Telegraph.—62 & 63 Vict. c. 38 is the Telegraph Act, 1899.

Telephone Company—Power to Take up Streets—Licence of Postmaster-General—Consent of Person Liable for the Repair of Road—Tramway Company.—The Postmaster-General and his licensees have power to lay telegraph or telephone wires in that part of a public street or road which a tramway company is liable to repair, without obtaining the consent of the tramway company, under section 13 of the Telegraph Act, 1863. Bristol Tramways and Carriage Co. v. National Telephone Co., 68 L. J. Ch. 566; [1899] 2 Ch. 282; 80 L. T. 836—North, J.

Telephone Wires—Ownership of "Solum" by Road Authority.—The powers conferred on the Postmaster-General by the Telegraph Acts, 1863 and 1878, are powers of construction, and a licence granted by him to the National Telephone Co. to use lines when constructed is not a licence to exercise powers conferred on the Postmaster-General by the Telegraph Acts of 1863 or 1878; and, consequently, in such a case, section 5 of the Telegraph Act, 1892, has no application. Postmaster-General v. Edinburgh Corporation, 10 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 247—Ry. Com.

Section 13 of the Telegraph Act, 1863, only requires the consent of the landowner (to the laying of telegraph wires) in addition to the consent of the body having control of the street, where such landowner is liable, qua landowner, for the repair of the street, and where the landowner and the body having such control are separate persons. Ib.

The fact of a corporation having the ownership of the solum through which the wires are to be laid affords no reason for annexing pecuniary terms to their consent, inasmuch as the corporation is a public body, and the Postmaster-General must be held to be acting in the public interest. Ib.

—Conditional Consent of Road Authority—Public Interest—Pecuniary Terms.—The Corporation of Glasgow refused their consent to the laying of wires by the Postmaster-General except on the condition "that such consent was not to be made applicable to the purposes of any private company or individual, whose application if made direct to the corporation could be refused by the corporation without right of appeal." The Postmaster-General admitted that the wires when laid would be used by the National Telephone Co. as junction lines with the Post-Office trunk lines, and stated that this would be done in pursuance of a Treasury minute which had been laid before Parliament:—Held, that the Postmaster-General was carrying out a definite policy sanctioned by the Legislature, and must be assumed to be acting in the public interest in providing facilities for the telephone company; and that the corporation were not entitled to make it a condition of their consent that the Postmaster-General should not permit his wires to be used in a particular manner authorised by the law. Postmaster-

General v. Glasgow Corporation, 10 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 238—Ry. Com.

Held, further, that the Commissioners under section 3 of the Telegraph Act, 1878, as "the authority by whom the difference is to be determined, may . . . give their consent either unconditionally or subject to such pecuniary or other terms, conditions and stipulations as they may think just," and therefore may fix pecuniary terms where such terms are no part of the original difference. Ib.

The Corporation of Glasgow appealed to the Court of Session under section 17 of the Railway and Canal Traffic Act, 1888, on the ground that the words in the judgment "that the corporation were not entitled to make it a condition of their consent that the Postmaster-General should not permit his wires to be used in a particular manner authorised by the law," were founded upon an erroneous view of the law, and that this had prevented the Commissioners from considering the reasonableness of the conditions which the corporation sought to have attached to their consent:—Held (by the COURT OF SESSION), that these words did not decide any question of legal right, but merely expressed the view of the Court that the condition was an unreasonable one; and, there being no question of law, that the appeal was incompetent. Ib.—Ct. of Sess.

— Conditional Consent of Road Authority—Objections they may Take.—The Corporation of London (as successors of the Commissioners of Sewers of the City of London), on being applied to by the Postmaster-General under section 3 of the Telegraph Act, 1878, for their consent to the placing and maintaining of a line or lines of underground telegraphs under certain streets in the City of London, refused their consent, except on condition that the said line or lines of telegraphs should not be "laid for the use of the National Telephone company, unless the telephone company were prepared to provide an improved service at a reduced cost." This difference, after having been referred to the Judge of the City of London Court, was, in accordance with section 4 of the Telegraph Act, 1878, brought before the Railway Commissioners:—Held, that the following words in section 5 of the Telegraph Act, 1863—"any consent may be given on such pecuniary or other terms or conditions (being in themselves lawful) as the person or body giving consent thinks fit"—only entitled street authorities in withholding such consent to raise objections of a kind which concerned them as a street authority; and that the objection raised by the corporation was an unreasonable one, inasmuch as it did not apply to the public at large and did not affect the corporation's interests as a street authority at all. Postmaster-General v. London Corporation, 10 Ry. and Can. Traff. Cas. 234—Ry. Com.

Underground Wires—Road Authority—Power of, to Impose Conditions on Postmaster-General.—Section 9 of the Telegraph Act, 1863, provides that the company, which by a later Act includes the Postmaster-General, shall not place any telegraph under any street except with the consent of the bodies having the control of the streets; and section 5, sub-section 3, provides that any consent may be given "on such pecuniary or other terms or conditions as the person or body giving consent thinks fit":—Held, that the objections which the road authority are entitled to raise under section 5, sub-section 3, are objections as to matters only which concern them as a road authority, and that they cannot raise objections as to the modes or conditions of carrying on the service or the reasonableness of the charges for such service; and that they cannot therefore, when giving consent to the Postmaster-General to lay an underground telephone wire, impose the condition that the wire should not be laid for the use of a particular telephone company unless such company were prepared to provide an improved service at a reduced cost, as such condition would be not only outside the scope of their duties as a road authority, but also unreasonable. Postmaster-General v. London Corporation, 78 L. T. 120; 62 J. P. 380—Ry. Com. And see National Telephone Co. v. Tunbridge Wells Corporation, ante, LOCAL GOVERNMENT, col. 1414.

Exercise of Statutory Powers—Damage—Claim for Compensation—Condition Precedent—Proof of Absence of Negligence.—In order that a person may maintain a claim for compensation under section 7 of the Telegraph Act, 1863, for damage done by reason of the exercise of the powers of the Act as distinct from an action at law, it is not incumbent upon him to shew that the undertakers in doing the damage did not act negligently. St. James and Pall Mall Electric Light Co. v. Regem, 73 L. J. K.B. 518; 90 L. T. 344; 68 J. P. 288—Farwell, J.

Licence to Provide Telephonic Communication in Exchange Area—New Licence to Local Authority in Respect of same Area—Continuance of Powers to lay down Underground Wires required by Company by Agreement with Local Authority.—Section 3, sub-section 1 of the Telegraph Act, 1899—which provides, under certain circumstances, for the continuance of powers acquired by an existing company by agreement with the local authority before the passing of the Act to lay down underground wires in an exchange area, in the event of a new licence being granted to the local authority or to another company in respect of the same exchange area—applies only to the case where the powers of the company are in existence at the date of the grant of the new licence. Accordingly, where the local authority by virtue of a clause contained in the agreement conferring the powers has duly determined those powers before the date of the grant of the new licence, the section does not operate to continue them. National Telephone Co. v. Kingston-upon-Hull Corporation, 89 L. T. 291; 51 W. R. 617; 1 L. G. R. 777; 68 J. P. 62—Buckley, J.

The words in the section, "those powers shall continue for the period specified in the new licence for the duration thereof," refer to the duration of the powers, and not to the duration of the new licence. Assuming, therefore, that the powers of the company are in existence at the date of the grant of the new licence, they will be continued, not during the duration of the new licence, but during the period (if any) which the new licence specifies for their continuance. Ib.

Postmaster-General's Exclusive Privilege—Exceptions—Maintained "for private use"—Wires between Separate Establishments.]—External communications between two or more separate establishments, although made by special telegraph or telephone wire owned or rented by one of the parties exclusively, are not, by section 5 of the Telegraph Act, 1869, excepted from the exclusive privilege of transmitting telegrams conferred on the Postmaster-General by that Act. Postmaster-General v. National Telephone Co., 76 L. J. Ch. 353; [1907] 1 Ch. 621; 96 L. T. 632; 71 J. P. 221; 23 T. L. R. 401—Swinfen Eady, J.

Contract—Telegraphic Code—Mistake—Action on Contract—Onus probandi.]—Where parties have corresponded by means of a telegraphic code, it is for the plaintiff, in an action for breach of contract, to show that the proposal made by him and accepted by the defendant is so clear and unambiguous that the defendant cannot be heard to say that he misunderstood it. It is not a matter for the Court to construe. Falck v. Williams, 69 L. J. P.C. 17; [1900] A.C. 176—P.C.

Removal of Telephone Wires—Obstruction of Public Place.]—See LOCAL GOVERNMENT, col. 1415.

Rent of Telephone—Bankruptcy of Lessee—Preferential Claim of Postmaster-General.]—The bankrupt had rented a telephone service wire from the Postmaster-General under an agreement dated June 2, 1905, which contained a provision that if he should become bankrupt the Postmaster-General might terminate the agreement by notice in writing, and that on doing so the Postmaster-General should be entitled to recover forthwith, as liquidated damages, and not by way of penalty, a sum equal to the whole subscription, which would become payable between such termination and the expiration of the agreement. The adjudication took place on October 15, 1906, and notice of the termination of the agreement was served on November 14, 1906:—Held, that the Postmaster-General was entitled, as a preferential Crown debt, to the amount he claimed as liquidated damages in respect of the rent of the telephone up to June 18, 1908, the date at which the agreement would expire by efflux of time. Niblock, In re, [1907] 2 Ir. R. 559—K.B. D.

Rent in Advance—Disconnection of Telephone—Right to Full Rent.]—G. agreed to pay to the National Telephone Co. rent in advance for the use of a telephone. The company was to have the right to disconnect G., without prejudice to the other conditions of the contract, if he failed to observe the company's rules, or if any sum of money payable by him under the contract was in arrear. Further, the contract was terminable by the company in the event of any sum payable under it being in arrear. G. paid the first year's rent in advance, but upon the second falling due he declined to pay in advance for the future. Thereupon the company disconnected G., and claimed to be entitled to recover the full rent payable on the first day of the second year, although he had in fact enjoyed the use of the telephone during forty days of the second year, and no more:—Held, that the company were entitled to recover the second year's rent in full. National Telephone Co. v. Griffen, [1906] 2 Ir. R. 115—K.B. D.

Rival Systems—Right to Intercommunication.]—Defendants were licensees whose licence had been extended in respect of an exchange area under the provisions of section 3 of the Telegraph Act, 1899, and they were requested by the plaintiffs, who were subsequent licensees for the same exchange area, to provide intercommunication with their system:—The Court, after considering the report of a special scientific referee, who had by their order held a local investigation, made a declaration as to the facilities for intercommunication to be given by the defendants to the plaintiffs. Order of BUCKLEY, J. (74 L. J. Ch. 449), varied. Swansea Corporation v. National Telephone Co., 75 L. J. Ch. 407; 94 L. T. 565; 70 J. P. 366; 4 L. G. R. 809; 22 T. L. R. 471—C.A.

Protection of Submarine Telegraph Cables—Sacrifice of Anchor Fouling Cable—Compensation in Accordance with Submarine Telegraphs Convention—Measure of Damages.]—Where an anchor of a steamship fouled a submarine cable and was sacrificed by the captain on the faith of a public notice stating that the owner of the cable would compensate owners of vessels for loss of material by adhering to the Submarine Telegraph Act, 1885, Schedule, Art. VII.—which provides that shipowners who can prove that they sacrificed an anchor, &c., in order to avoid injuring a submarine cable shall receive compensation from the owner of the cable—the liability of such owner under the terms of the notice is to make compensation for the sacrifice of the anchor, but not further to pay the damages resulting from such sacrifice. Agin-court Steamship Co. v. Eastern Extension Telegraph Co., 76 L. J. K.B. 884; [1907] 2 K.B. 305; 97 L. T. 410; 12 Com. Cas. 302; 23 T. L. R. 490—C.A.

TENANT FOR LIFE AND REMAINDERMAN.

Unauthorised Securities—Income—Enjoyment in Specie—Power to Retain Investments.]—A testator gave 100,000l. upon trust to invest in trustees' securities and to pay the income to his wife for life, after whose death the said sum and the investments thereof were to fall into residue. He gave his residue upon trust to invest in like manner and to pay the income to his niece for life with a gift over of the said residue and investments after her death. He gave the trustees absolute power to retain existing securities, whether authorised or not, and to apportion any part to meet the 100,000l., the legatee to be entitled to any increase and liable to any decrease after apportionment:—Held, that the wife was entitled to the whole income of unauthorised investments apportioned to the 100,000l., and the niece to the whole income of other unauthorised investments retained under the power. Wilson, In re; *Moore v. Misappropriation by Trustee—Restoration of Capital with Interest at 5 per Cent—Capital and Income—Claim of Capital to Excess of Interest beyond Amount Obtainable from Authorised Investments.]—The sole trustee of a marriage settlement realised a sum of Consols which had fallen into possession and formed part of the settled funds, and in breach of trust applied the proceeds in paying off a private debt which bore interest at 5 per cent. Subsequently he restored the capital in full to the trust estate, and it was assumed that he had paid interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. to the tenant for life under the settlement, who made no claim against him:—Held, that the persons entitled under the settlement to the fund in remainder were not entitled, as against the tenant for life, to attribute to capital the excess of interest over the amount which would have been produced if the fund had been invested in authorised securities, and that the trustee had completely discharged himself. Slade v. Chaine, [1908] 1 Ch. 522—C.A.

General Power to Retain Investments—Wasting or Hazardous Security—Enjoyment in Specie.]—A testator bequeathed his personal estate upon trusts to correspond with those declared as to his real estate—namely, to his wife for her life with remainders in strict settlement—and by a codicil declared that his trustees might retain any investments belonging to him at the time of his death for such period as to them might seem proper. His personal estate consisted of shares in a prosperous colliery company, the objects of which included wide trading powers. The trustees decided to retain the shares as authorised by the testator:—Held, that the testator having said that the trustees were not bound to convert, this discretionary direction added to the list of authorised securities, and that the security in question being not a wasting security but a hazardous security which the trustees could retain under the general power, the tenant for life was therefore entitled to the whole of the dividends so long as the trustees thought fit to retain the investment. The rule of Howe v. Dartmouth (Earl) (7 Ves. 137) held not to apply. Sheldon In re; Nixon v. Sheldon (58 L. J. Ch. 25; 39 Ch. D. 50), discussed. Bates, In re; Hodson v. Bates, 76 L. J. Trust for Sale—Real Estate—Postponement of Sale—Mining Royalties—Interim Profits—Enjoyment in Specie.]—Where a testator directs sale and conversion of his real estate without power to postpone, and directs that the proceeds be held on trust for one for life and then for others, but gives no direction as to the income until sale, and where the sale is without any impropriety postponed, sums paid by a lessee under a lease granted by the testator in respect of areas of chalk-bearing land from time to time taken and quarried under a power in the lease belong absolutely to the person entitled to the income of the real estate after conversion. Brown v. Gellatly (L. R. 2 Ch. 751) distinguished. Searle's Settlement Trusts, In re (69 L. J. Ch. 712; [1900] 2 Ch. 829), followed. Darnley (Earl), In re; Clifton v. Darnley, 76 L. J. Ch. 58; [1907] 1 Ch. 159; 95 L. T. 706; 23 T. L. R. 93—Kekewich, J.

Annuity Given by Bond—Property Settled by Will—Tenant for Life and Remainderman—Income and Corpus—Apportionment.]—A testator gave his property in moieties in trust for his son and daughter at twenty-five for life, with remainders over. Before his death in 1888 he had covenanted to pay a life annuity to a person who was still alive in 1907, when the daughter, who was the elder, attained twenty-five. The annuity had till then been paid out of the general income:—Held, that, as to the half of the annuity chargeable against the daughter's moiety, the rule in Allhusen v. Whittell (36 L. J. Ch. 929; L. R. 4 Eq. 295) should be applied by dealing with each future instalment as it accrued, ascertaining what sum set aside at 3 per cent. on the daughter attaining twenty-five would have met the particular payment, and attributing that part of the payment to capital and the remaining part to income. Dawson, In re; Arathoon v. Dawson (75 L. J. Ch. 604; [1906] 2 Ch. 211), infra, and Henry, In re; Gordon v. Gordon (76 L. J. Ch. 74; [1907] 1 Ch. 30), not followed. Perkins, In re; Brown v. Perkins, 77 L. J. Annuity—Residuary Personalty—Testator's Covenant to Pay Annuities—Capital and Income—Apportionment.]—As between a tenant for life and remainderman, the periodical payments of an annuity covenanted to be paid by a testator ought to be borne by the tenant for life and remainderman proportionately, according to the values of their respective interests in the residue of the testator's estate as at the date of his death. Yates v. Yates (29 L. J. Ch. 872; 28 Beav. 687) followed. Allhusen v. Whittell (36 L. J. Ch. 929; L. R. 4 Eq. 295) applied. Dawson, In re; Arathoon v. Dawson, 75 L. J. Ch. 604; [1906] 2 Ch. 211; 94 L. Construction—Property “not actually producing income”—Mortgage—Interest—Payment Postponed—Capital or Income—Tenant for Life and Remainderman.]—By a mortgage which recited that the mortgagor was indebted to the mortgagee and it had been agreed that payment of the debt should be postponed, the mortgagor covenanted to pay on his (the mortgagor's) death the amount of the debt with simple interest, and, if the aggregate amount of such sum and interest should not then be paid, the mortgagor should pay to the mortgagee interest for such aggregate sum by equal half-yearly payments, the first of such payments to become due six months after the mortgagor's death. The mortgagee died, having made a will under which his widow was entitled to the income of his estate, which was to be converted, for her life, with remainders over. The will contained a power to postpone conversion, and a provision that the income of unconverted estate should be applied as if it arose from converted estate, and it was also provided that no property not actually producing income should be treated as producing income or as entitling any person to the receipt of income. The mortgagor having subsequently died in the lifetime of the widow, —Held, that the interest on the mortgage debt attributable to the period between the mortgagee's death and the mortgagor's death belonged to the mortgagee's widow and not to his remaindermen. Hubbuck, In re; Hart v. Stone 65 L. J. Ch. 271; [1896] 1 Ch. 754, considered and applied. Lewis, In re; Davies v. Harrison, 76 L. J. Ch. 539; [1907] 2 Ch. 296; 97 L. T. 636 —Warrington, J.

Incidence of Costs—Expense of Compelling Tenants to Repair.—The expenses incurred by trustees in compelling tenants of the settled property to fulfil their obligations to repair (such as costs of survey and of serving notices on the tenants) must be borne in fair proportion by the tenant for life and remaindermen, and that can be effected by raising the amount on a mortgage of the property. The principle laid down in Hotchkys, In re; Freke v. Calmady (55 L. J. Ch. 546; 32 Ch. D. 408), applied. McClure's Trusts, In re; Carr v. Commercial Union Insurance Co., 76 L. J. Ch. 52; 95 L. "Outgoings."—Such expenses are not "outgoings." Ib.

Bonus Paid by Company out of Reserve Fund—Capital or Income.—When a testator directs or permits part of his estate to remain as shares or stocks in a company which has the power either to distribute its profits as dividends or convert them into capital, and the company validly exercises this power, such exercise of its power is binding on all persons interested through the testator in the shares, and consequently what is paid by the company as dividend goes to the life-renter, and what is paid by the company to the shareholders as capital or appropriated as an increase to the capital stock of the concern enures to the benefit of all who are interested in the capital. Byth's Trustees v. Milne, 7 F. 799—Ct. of Sess.

Copyholds—Fines and Fees—Admission of New Trustees—Apportionment.—The fines and fees payable in respect of the admission of new trustees to copyhold estates devised to trustees in trust for a tenant for life, with remainders over to other persons, must be borne by the tenant for life and remaindermen in proportion to the value of their respective interests. Bullock's Settled Estates, In re; Lofthouse v. Haggard, 91 L. T. 651—Swinfen Eady, J.

Railway Bonds—Cumulative Interest—Payment out of Net Earnings of any Year Remaining Available—Deficiency of Earnings—Arrears of Interest—Sale of Bonds—Apportionment of Proceeds as between Capital and Income.—Bonds of a company were settled on trust for one for life, with remainders over. They contained a proviso for payment of interest "accumulative" at a rate per cent. twice in each year "as and when earned out of any net earnings of any year remaining after" certain other payments, "and if in any year the net earnings so remaining available . . . shall not be sufficient to pay such interest in full . . . any deficiency shall . . . be paid . . . out of the net earnings of any subsequent year or years as and when there shall be any net earnings available for such purpose." Coupons attached stated interest to be payable "only as and when earned out of any net earnings available." There were never sufficient earnings to pay the interest in full. The bonds were sold in the lifetime of the tenant for life for a sum not sufficient to pay both principal and arrears of interest:—Held, as between tenant for life and remainderman, that the sum was not apportionable between capital and income, but must be treated wholly as capital. *Taylor, In re; Matheson v. TENANTS IN COMMON.

New Lease—Fiduciary Relation.—When a lease held by tenants in common has expired, and the lessee's interest is determined, and no tenancy or interest continues or has sprung up in the former co-owners of the lease, there is no necessary incapacity which debars one of such tenants in common from obtaining a new lease to himself personally, if he does not abuse or take an inequitable advantage of his position, and if the lessor has power to give and intends to give it to him to the exclusion of the former co-owners. But such a tenant in common cannot claim to hold a new lease for his own benefit if it is established—first, that a fiduciary relation had been created by agreement or conduct between the tenants in common with reference to the old lease, or to an essential part of the subject-matter of the lease, or secondly, that the lessee had obtained the new lease after representing to the lessor and causing him to believe and intend that the new lease was to be for the benefit of all the co-owners; or thirdly, that the new lease was obtained by the use of a right or rights which a Court of equity would recognise as having been attached to the common property—for example, a licence and goodwill attached to licensed premises. *Hunter v. Sale by Tender.—“Highest net money tender”—Tender with Reference to other Possible Tender.—The liquidator of the defendant company invited sealed tenders for the purchase of certain property of the company, and stated “the highest net money tender I receive, . . . that tender I will at once accept.” B. offered 81,100*l.*, and the plaintiffs offered “such a sum as will exceed by 200*l.* the amount to-day offered by the other proposing purchaser”:—Held, that the plaintiffs’ offer did not answer the description of “the highest net money tender.” *South Hetton Coal Co. v. THEATRE.

Licence to Perform Stage Plays—Restrictions on Licence.—An application was made to the respondent authority for a licence to perform stage plays. The licensing authority heard the application, and took into consideration a rule made under section 9 of the Theatres Act, 1843, to the effect that “no spirituous liquors, wines, ale, porter, cider, perry, or tobacco shall be sold or disposed of in the building” for which a theatre licence is asked. A licence was granted to the applicants on an undertaking by them that they would not apply for an Excise licence for the sale of intoxicating liquors:—Held, on a rule for a mandamus to the licensing authority to hear and determine the application without any restriction, that the matter had been heard and determined, and that the rule should therefore be discharged. Reg. v. Sheerness Urban Council, 62 J. P. 563—C.A.

Lease—Metropolis—Damage by Fall of Adjoining Wall—Dangerous Structure—Order of Magistrate for Structural Repairs—“Closed by order of superior authority”—Suspension of Rent.—A lease of a theatre in the metropolis contained a provision that if and whenever during the term the theatre should be “closed by order of any superior authority or be destroyed by fire or so damaged by fire that the same cannot be continued to be used as a theatre,” the rent was to be suspended and cease to be payable until the theatre was reopened. The wall of an adjoining railway station fell upon the theatre, and so damaged it that a dangerous structure order was made by a magistrate at the instance of the London County Council requiring the lessee to take down and secure certain walls thereof. At the time of the accident the theatre was being rebuilt, and there was no licence for it from the Lord Chamberlain in existence. The Lord Chamberlain, in answer to an enquiry, stated that he would not permit the theatre to be opened until it was passed as safe by the London County Council:—Held, that the theatre was, by virtue of the order of the magistrate, “closed by order of a superior authority,” and that therefore the rent was suspended. Lennox v. Curzon, 22 T. L. R. 611—C.A.

Music-hall—Stage Play—Agreement to Produce—Illegality—Liability to Damages.—The plaintiff agreed with the defendant company to produce at their music-hall a sketch called The Fighting Parson for a period of six weeks, and the agreement contained a clause that “if it should be found that the artist’s performance is contrary to law, or is objected to by any licensing or other public authority, this engagement may be cancelled by the company.” After the plaintiff had produced the sketch at the music-hall for five weeks the defendants, in consequence of the decision of a magistrate that a somewhat similar sketch was a stage play, and that it was therefore contrary to section 11 of the Theatres Act, 1843, to present it at a place not licensed as a theatre, gave notice to the plaintiff cancelling the engagement:—Held, that, as the sketch was a stage play, and as it could not be legally performed at a music-hall, the defendants were entitled under the agreement to cancel the engagement. *Gray v. TIME.

How Computed—Compulsory Power to cease after Expiration of Three Years from Passing of Private Act—Service of Notice to Treat.]—By section 29 of the West Metropolitan Railway Act, 1899, the powers of a railway company for the compulsory purchase of lands for the purpose of the Act "shall cease after the expiration of three years from the passing of this Act." The Act received the Royal assent on August 9, 1899. On August 9, 1902, the defendants served on the plaintiffs a notice to treat for the purchase of part of the plaintiffs' land:—Held, that the notice to treat had been served in time, as the day on which the Act received the Royal assent must be excluded in the computation of time within which the powers of the defendants under the Act to compulsorily purchase land were to exist. Goldsmiths Co. v. West Metropolitan Railway, 72 L. J. K.B. 931; [1904] 1 K.B. 1; 89 L. T. 428; 52 W. R. 21; 68 J. P. 41; 20 T. L. R. 7—C.A.

Greenwich Mean—Sunset—Vehicles—Lights on Bicycles.]—The expression "sunset" in section 85 of the Local Government Act, 1888, is not an expression of time within the Statutes (Definition of Time) Act, 1880, and a bicyclist is not compelled under section 85 to light his lamp an hour after sunset according to Greenwich mean time, but according to the time of sunset as it varies at different places in England. Gordon v. Cann, 68 L. J. Q.B. 434; 80 L. T. 20; 47 W. R. 269; 63 J. P. 324—D.

Month—Lunar Month—Commercial Documents—Contract to Extend Time Implied from Contract.]—In legal documents the primary meaning of month is lunar month. There is no general exception making it mean calendar month in commercial documents. It can only bear that meaning in cases where, according to the ordinary rules of construction of documents, a secondary meaning can be admitted. The belief or subsequent conduct of the parties cannot affect the construction, but an agreement to extend the time may be inferred from conduct which would make it inequitable to insist on the limit to lunar months. Bruner v. Moore, 73 L. J. Ch. 377; [1904] 1 Ch. 305; 89 L. T. 738; 52 W. R. 295; 20 T. L. R. 125—Farwell, J.

TOLLS.

Bridge—"Sledge, drag or such like carriage"

—Bicycle.]—By a private Act for building a bridge over the river Severn, near Cressage, in Shropshire, which recited that the passage over the river at the place by a ferry was inconvenient and not suited to the accommodation of passengers, and that it "would be a great convenience to the public" if a communication were made across the river by a bridge and commodious roads were made to and from the same, it was provided that the trustees of the bridge to be erected might demand and take "before any passage shall be permitted through or over the same" the several sums following: "For every coach, chariot . . . or other such like carriage drawn by six horses, mares, geldings or mules, the sum of 2s. and drawn by four horses &c. 1s. 6d. and drawn by two horses &c. 1s. and drawn by one horse &c. 6d." "For every sledge, drag or such like carriage the sum of 6d." "And for every foot passenger 1d." :—Held, that a bicycle was not a sledge, drag, or other such like carriage within the enactment so as to be liable to a toll of 6d. Smith v. Kynnersley, 72 L. J. K.B. 357; [1903] 1 K.B. 788; 88 L. T. 449; 51 W. R. 548; 67 J. P. 125; 1 L. G. R. 393—C.A.

—User of—Carriage with Less than Four Wheels—Bicycles and Tricycles.]—A private Act (7 Geo. 3, c. lxiii.) authorised the following bridge tolls to be taken: "For every coach, chariot, berlin, hearse, chair, calash, waggon, wain, dray, cart, car, or other carriage whatsoever with four wheels the sum of 4d., and with less than four wheels the sum of 2d." :—Held, that a bicycle or tricycle is a "carriage" within the meaning of the Act, and, as such, liable to the toll imposed upon a carriage with less than four wheels. Cannan v. Abingdon (Earl), 69 L. J. Q.B. 517; [1900] 2 Q.B. 66; 82 L. T. 382; 48 W. R. 470; 64 J. P. 504—D.

"Carriage"—Bicycle.]—A local Act authorised the following tolls to be taken: "For every coach, chariot, hearse, chaise, berlin, landau, and phaeton, gig, whiskey, car, chair, or coburg, and for every other carriage hung on springs, the sum of sixpence for each wheel, and for each horse, or other beast of draught drawing the same, the sum of twopence" :—Held, that a bicycle is not a "carriage" within the meaning of the Act. The definition of a "carriage" formulated by PHILLMORE, J., in Cannan v. Abingdon (Earl) (69 L. J. Q.B. 517; [1900] 2 Q.B. 66) questioned. Simpson v. Teignmouth and Shaldon Bridge Co., 72 L. J.

— Bicycle.—By a local Act tolls were imposed on "every coach, chariot, hearse," &c., and "every other carriage hung on springs the sum of 6d. for each wheel, and for each horse or other beast of draught drawing the same 2d."; and "for every waggon," &c., "or other such like carriage, with or without springs, the sum of 6d. per wheel, and for each horse or other beast of draught drawing the same the sum of 2d."—Held, without deciding whether or no it was a "carriage hung on springs," that a bicycle was not a carriage within this section, as it only referred to carriages drawn by horses or other beasts of draught. Simpson v. Teignmouth Bridge Co., 85 L. T. 726—Wright, J.

"Sledge, drag, or such like carriage"—Bicycle.—A bicycle does not come within the words "sledge, drag, or such like carriage," occurring in a statute imposing a toll upon such vehicles. Smith v. Kynnersley, 66 J. P. 679—Wright, J.

Turnpike Road—Exemption—Carriage "Employed" in Her Majesty's Military Service—Private Carriage of Officer Used by Him on Duty.—The private carriage of an officer of her Majesty's regular forces, used by him in the discharge of his official duties, he not being in receipt of or entitled to any Government allowance for such a carriage nor entitled to hire such a carriage at the cost of the Government, is not "employed" in her Majesty's military service within the meaning of section 143 of the Army Act, 1881, and consequently, in passing along a turnpike road, is not exempted by that section from payment of a statutory toll payable on such road. Craig v. Nicholas, 69 L. J. Q.B. 608; [1900] 2 Q.B. 444; 82 L. T. 765; 49 W. R. 48; 64 J. P. 569; 19 Cox C.C. 526—D.

Private Line of Railway—Colliery Companies—Adjacent Owners—Wayleave.—The appellants and respondents were owners of adjacent collieries, and their respective predecessors in title had obtained a private Act of Parliament authorising them to construct and maintain a private line of railway for the use of their respective collieries. The Act provided that the railway should be open to the public upon payment of a toll to the two companies. The appellants subsequently acquired another colliery adjacent to their original holding, and brought coals from it over the joint line:—Held, that they were not liable to pay tolls to the respondents in respect of such coals. Caledonian Coal Co. v. Seaham Colliery Co., 70 L. J. P.C. 105; [1901] A.C. 554; 84 L. T. 785—P.C.

Confirmation of Customary Title by Statute—Substitution of Statutory for Customary Title—Extinction of Customary Title.—A franchise to take tolls becomes extinguished where a private Act dealing with such tolls does not operate as a mere recognition of the customary title to take such tolls, but gives a statutory title with different incidents to take tolls of the same amount. *Taylor v. Wrong Committed Abroad—Right of Action in England—Act of British Naval Officer under Authority of Foreign State—Foreign Territorial Waters.—In order to found an action in this country for a wrong committed abroad two conditions are necessary. First, the act complained of must be of such a character as to be actionable if committed in this country; and secondly, it must be without justification by the law of the place where it was committed. *Carr v. TRADE INJURIES.

1. Passing off Goods as Another's, 2524.
2. Trade Libel, 2527.
3. Combination to Injure, 2528.

1. PASSING OFF GOODS AS ANOTHER'S.

Evidence.—To entitle a plaintiff to succeed in a passing-off case, he need not prove fraud in the defendant, or give evidence that any single person was deceived. London General Omnibus Co. v. Lavell (70 L. J. Ch. 17; [1901] 1 Ch. 133) observed upon. Bourne v. Swan and Edgar, 72 L. J. Ch. 168; [1903] 1 Ch. 211; 87 L. T. 589; 51 W. R. 213—Farwell, J.

Advertisement by Trader—Imitation.—No trader is justified in taking the peculiar symbol, device, or mark by which another trader distinguishes his goods on the market, and so attracting custom to himself from his rival. Weingarten v. Bayer, 92 L. T. 511; 21 T. L. R. 418—H.L. (E.).

The appellants sold their goods in boxes, with the name of the article printed in a particular manner on a "scroll." The respondents sold precisely similar goods under the same name, also printed on a similar scroll, with the addition of their initials "C.B." There was no evidence that any customers were in fact deceived, and after the commencement of the action the respondents discontinued the use of the scroll:—Held (Lord Robertson dissenting), that the appellants were entitled to an injunction to restrain the respondents from using the scroll in connection with their goods, and to an account of profits derived by the respondents from the sale of goods in boxes distinguished by the scroll. Ib.

Apollinaris Salts.]—The plaintiffs had the sole right to sell in the United Kingdom water the product of a German spring. The defendants, who were chemists in England, sold preparations which they described in their catalogue as "salts for the production of natural mineral waters, prepared according to the most reliable analysis of the respective waters." Then followed a list of waters, headed by "Apollinaris per lb., 2s. 6d." The plaintiffs did not sell salts obtained from Apollinaris water. The defendants in fulfilling orders for their salts described them as "Apollinaris salts," and gave directions for dissolving the salts in a certain quantity of water. In an action to restrain the defendants from selling salts not obtained from such water or as capable of being made up into such water without distinguishing such salts from salts obtained from Apollinaris water,—Held, that the defendants did not pass off their salts as and for salts obtained from Apollinaris water, but merely represented that their salts would produce waters having the constituents of that water; nor did the defendants by what they had done cause or enable the purchasers of the salts to do that which they were not entitled to do. Apollinaris Co. v. Duckworth, 22 T. L. R. 744—C.A.

Use by Plaintiff of the Word "Trade mark" —No Registered Trade Mark—Title to Relief—Injunction.]—In an action to restrain the passing off of goods as those of the plaintiff, where the defendant has so imitated the general get-up adopted by the plaintiff as to be likely to deceive an unwary purchaser into the belief that the goods he is buying are the goods of the plaintiff's manufacture, the mere fact that the plaintiff has employed on packages of his goods the word "Trade mark," when in fact he has no registered trade mark, but is only entitled to a trade mark by user, is not sufficient to disentitle him to relief by way of an interlocutory injunction; for the use of the word does not necessarily imply that the person using it has a registered trade mark. Sen Sen Co. v. Brittens, 68 L. J. Ch. 250; [1899] 1 Ch. 692; 80 L. T. 278; 47 W. R. 358—Stirling, J.

To disentitle a plaintiff to relief in such a case there must be other circumstances, besides the use of the word "Trade mark," to imply, contrary to the fact, that he has a registered trade mark. Lewis's v. Goodbody (67 L. T. 194) distinguished. Ib.

Distinctive Words on Trade Mark.]—The

plaintiffs, a firm of distillers and wine and spirit merchants, had used a label with a cat and barrel depicted thereon since 1849. In 1879 they registered their mark in class 43 for fermented liquors and spirits as an old mark. There are two other cat and barrel marks on the register in the same class: one scarcely used in England by traders who sold in bulk or used a label without a cat and barrel; the other was a barrel and three cats, and no user in this country was proved. The plaintiffs' goods were well known as the "Cat and Barrel Brand," or the "Cat Brand." The defendant in 1899 commenced to sell sloe gin under a label whereon part of a cat and part of a barrel was depicted with the words "Cat Brand" underneath. The plaintiffs did not manufacture sloe gin at the date of the registration of their mark:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to—first, an injunction to restrain the defendant, his agents and servants, from infringing the plaintiffs' registered trade mark; and secondly, an injunction to restrain the defendant, his agents and servants, from selling or passing off sloe gin not of the plaintiffs' manufacture as and for the goods of the plaintiffs in any way whatsoever, and in particular by using the words "Cat Brand" in connection with the representation of a cat and a barrel, or any words, signs, figures, or devices which were calculated to enable the defendant's sloe gin or other liqueurs or goods of the defendant to be passed off as and for the goods of the plaintiffs. Boord v. Huddart, 89 L. T. 718; 20 T. L. R. 142—Swinfen Eady, J.

No Deception Probable — Injunction.]—A brought an action to restrain B from passing off his soap as A's soap by using wrappers which were alleged to have been copied in many respects from A's wrappers, and to be calculated to deceive, but no actual deception was proved. The Court came to the conclusion that the draughtsman who designed B's wrapper had used A's wrapper when doing so, but that there was no probability of deception in the ordinary course of business:—Held, that, notwithstanding the copying of A's wrapper, he was not entitled to an injunction as B's wrapper was not calculated to deceive. Judgment of Lord Macnaghten in Reddaway v. Banham, [1896] A.C. 219 distinguished. Lever Brothers v. Bedingfield, 80 L. T. 100—C.A.

Fraud—Appropriation of Testimonials Given to Rival.]—An interlocutory injunction refused to the inventor of a system of medical treatment (not protected by letters patent) against a rival inventor of a competing system who had appropriated the testimonials given to the former inventor, and by alterations in the text made them apparently applicable to the latter system, damage not being shewn, nor necessarily flowing from the act. Batty v. Hill (1 H. & M. 264) followed. Franks v. Weaver (10 Beav. 297) distinguished. Tallerman v. Dowling Radiant Heat Co., 68 L. J. Ch. 618; [1900] 1 Ch. 1; 48 W. R. 146—Stirling, J. See s.c. in C.A., 69 L. J. Ch. 46—C.A.

Infringement—Personal Name.]—In 1904 two brothers, Robert and J. F. Dunlop, who had since 1898 been in partnership in a cycle and motor repairing business in Kilmarnock under the name of R. and J. F. Dunlop, transferred the motor branch of their business to the Dunlop Motor Co., Lim., a company which had been formed with a capital of 500L., held by the two Dunlops and some of their friends. By the memorandum of association that company had power, inter alia, to deal in and make motor cars and motoring "accessories." In 1905 the Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co., Lim., a company registered in England, who were the makers of a well-known tyre for cycles and motors called the "Dunlop" tyre, the patent for which had recently expired, and who also manufactured cycling and motoring "accessories," took proceedings to have the Dunlop Motor Co., Lim., interdicted from carrying on their business under any name containing the name "Dunlop." The Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co., like the Dunlop Motor Co., had power to make motor cars, but neither company had ever, in fact, made any motor cars. The Court refused to grant interdict, holding that the respondents had not adopted the name Dunlop Motor Co., Lim., for the purpose of passing off their goods as the goods of the Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co., Lim., and that the name Dunlop Motor Co., Lim., was not calculated to deceive the public into purchasing their goods in the belief that they were the goods of the other company. Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co. v. Dunlop Motor Co., 8 F. 1146—Ct. of Sess.

On appeal, —Held, on the evidence, that the appellant company were not entitled to the exclusive use of the name "Dunlop," and had failed to prove that any one had been misled into the belief that the respondents' business was identical or connected with that of the appellants. Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co. v. Dunlop Motor Co., 76 L. J. P.C. 102; [1907] A.C. 430; 97 L. T. 259; 23 T. L. R. 717—H.L. (Sc.)

2. TRADE LIBEL.

Disparagement of Goods—Imputation of Misconduct.—In an action of libel the statement of claim alleged that the defendants, who were manufacturers of typesetting machines, published of the plaintiffs, who were rival manufacturers, the following written words: "The Empire Typesetter in America. The Union Printer and American Craftsman, the most wide-awake and spirited of American trade journals, has recently contained several references to the Empire" (the plaintiffs') "composing machines, which were installed in the office of the New York Evening Sun with such a flourish of trumpets. From these paragraphs we gather that five machines altogether have been employed in this office, the first being introduced some time in the month of February last, the other four commencing operations on March 9 last. So short-lived, however, does this installation appear to have been that we learn the machines were discontinued on Wednesday, April 29, and now the Empire Company" (the plaintiffs) "is in receipt of notice to remove them altogether in the course of a few days. This will be a very serious blow for this machine." There was no allegation of special damage:—Held (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., dissenting), that these words, besides being a disparagement of the plaintiffs' machines, which would not be actionable without proof of special damage, were also, when taken in their natural and ordinary meaning, capable of being understood by men of ordinary intelligence as conveying an imputation upon the plaintiffs in the way of the trade, and the question of libel or no libel was therefore rightly left to the jury. Empire Typesetting Machine Co. v. New York v. Linotype Co., 79 L. T. 8—C.A.

— Malicious Statement — Special Damage.]

—A statement by a trader that goods of his manufacture are superior to those manufactured by another rival trader, although untrue and made maliciously, is not actionable as a defamatory libel, nor does such a statement afford ground for an action for disparagement of goods, even if the plaintiff is damaged by it, and avers special damage. Hubbuck v. Wilkinson, Heywood & Clark, 68 L. J. Q.B. 34; [1899] 1 Q.B. 86; 79 L. T. 429—C.A.

3. COMBINATION TO INJURE.

Malice—Motive—Association to Induce Persons not to Deal with Traders.—By their statement of claim the plaintiffs alleged that the defendants combined with others to prevent them carrying on their trade, by inducing third persons not to deal with them:—Held (PHILLIMORE, J., dissentiente), that this did not violate any right of the plaintiffs, and therefore the statement of claim disclosed no cause of action. Held, per BIGHAM, J., that intention is immaterial if the acts themselves are not wrongful; per PHILLIMORE, J., that, given a combination, the motive and purpose make all the difference. Boots v. Grundy, 82 L. T. 769; 48 W. R. 638—D. And see CONTRACT, col. 537.

1. STATUTE.

5 Edw. 7 c. 15 is the Trade Marks Act, 1905.

2. REGISTRATION.

Essential Particulars—General Description—
"Combination of devices"—Subject-matter—
Whole Trade Mark not Visible at once.—In the case of the registration of a label, a general description, such as a "combination of devices," leaving parties to ascertain from the register what the mark is, is a sufficient description of the "essential particulars" required by section 64 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, as amended by section 10 of the Act of 1888. Crompton & Co.'s Trade Mark, In re, 71 L. J. Ch. 497; [1902] 1 Ch. 758; 86 L. T. 657; 50 W. R. 426—Swinfen Eady, J.

Two labels, *already separately registered, and a third label containing no distinctive features may be registered as a "combination of devices" to be used together as one trade mark. Id.

Where a trade mark consists of a combination of devices it is not necessary that each device should be visible at once. Id.

Registration in a Class—Partial User—Remedy of Party Aggrieved.—Where a trade mark has been registered in a class and the party registering deals in some only of the goods mentioned in that class, a party aggrieved by the registration may apply to have the register rectified by limiting the trade mark to the goods actually dealt in, but he cannot have the trade mark struck off the register. Id.

Registration for Entire Class—User for Many Years in Respect of Some Goods in Class—Alleged Intention to Use in respect of other Goods—Non-user—Exclusion of other Goods from Class.—Where a mark was in 1880 registered under the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 91), in respect of the whole of class 42—that is, "substances used in food or ingredients used in food"—and the mark had since that time been continuously used for some goods in that class, but never for condensed milk, which had always been dealt with in connection with other marks, the register was on the application of another dealer in condensed milk rectified by the exclusion of condensed milk from the class of goods in respect of which the mark was registered, on the ground that there never was at the time of registration any such intention to use the mark in connection with condensed milk as to bring the case within the principle requiring de facto user or immediate intention to use. Edwards v. Dennis; Edwards's Trade Mark, In re (55 L. J. Ch. 125; 30 Ch. D. 454), applied. Hart's Trade Mark, In re, 71 L. J. Ch. 869; [1902] 2 Ch. 621; 87 L. T. 426; 51 W. R. 107—Byrne, J.

3. WHAT MAY BE REGISTERED.

Intention to Use—Rectification.—No one can properly register or retain on the register a trade mark for goods in which he does not deal and has not, at the time of registration, some definite intention to deal. Batt v. Dunnett, 68 L. J. Ch. 557; [1899] A.C. 428; 81 L. T. 94—H.L. (E.)

Section 75 of the Patents &c. Act, 1883, as altered by section 17 of the Act of 1888, substitutes application for registration for previous user and reputation gained thereby; it does not mean that continued registration is equivalent to continued user. S.O. in C.A., 67 L. J. Ch. 576; [1898] 2 Ch. 432; 79 L. T. 206.

Natural Products of the Earth.—A trade mark may be registered in connection with vegetables and other natural products of the earth. Major v. Franklin, [1908] 1 K.B. 712—Jelf, J.

Design—Position of Trade Mark.—A device is capable of being registered as a trade mark, under the Trade Marks Act, 1905, notwithstanding the fact that it is also capable of being registered as a design under the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883. United States Playing-card Co.'s Application, In re, 77 L. J. Ch. 204; [1903] 1 Ch. 197—Swinfen Eady, J.

Fancy Word—Descriptive Name—Patented Article.—In 1881 an instrument for duplicating copies of manuscripts was invented and patented. Inked rollers and a special kind of paper were used in connection with it. The instrument consisted of a pen carrying a toothed wheel. The name "Cyclostyle," derived from κύκλος (circle) and στίλος (pen), was invented and applied to the instrument which became known by that name. In 1884 the word "Cyclostyle" alone was registered as a trade mark by a firm of stationers for stationery and apparatus for producing copies of manuscripts:—Held, that the word "Cyclostyle," being descriptive, had been wrongly registered under the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, s. 64, and could not now be registered under the Trade Marks Act, 1905, s. 9, as, though originally an invented word, and, as such, registrable even though descriptive, it had become the name of a particular article, and must therefore be removed from the register. Gestetner's Trade Mark, In re, 77 L. J. Ch. 299; [1908] 1 Ch. 513; 98 L. T. 121—C.A.

The name of a patented article is not a trade mark within section 3 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905, as it cannot be distinctive of the trade of a particular individual. Id.

The meaning of section 36 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905, is that no trade mark which has been registered under the earlier Acts shall be removed from the register on the ground that it was not properly registrable under those Acts if it would on such removal be registrable again under the Act of 1905. It does not mean that no trade mark which has been registered under the earlier Acts shall be removed from the register if it would have been properly registrable at the date of its original registration, supposing that the Act of 1905 had then been in force. Id.

The Court may, under section 35 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905, in an application by an aggrieved party to strike off the register, make an order varying the entry upon the application of the registered proprietor. Id.

"Invented word"—"Absorbine."—The word "Absorbine" used in connection with a veterinary preparation, which professed to absorb and remove certain equine ailments, is not an "invented word" within the meaning of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, s. 64, sub-s. 1, as amended by the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1888, s. 10, and therefore is not properly registered as a trade mark, and should be expunged from the register. Christy v. Tipper 74 L. J. Ch. 55; [1905] 1 Ch. 1; 91 L. T. 712; 53 W. R. 147; 21 T. L. R. 53—C.A.

"Hæmatogen"—Descriptive Word.—"Hæmatogen" as applied to a preparation of a drug called hæmoglobin held not to be an "invented word" within the meaning of section 64, sub-section 1 (d) of the Patents &c. Act, 1883, as amended by the Patents &c. Act, 1888, s. 10, sub-s. 1, and therefore not capable of registration as a trade mark. Hommel v. Bauer, 20 T. L. R. 585—Warrington, J.

— "Solio"—"Word . . . having no reference to the character or quality of the goods."—The word "Solio," which the appellants applied to register as a trade mark in connection with photographic materials, is an "invented" word within the meaning of the Act of 1888, s. 10, and therefore capable of registration. Sub-section 1 (d) and (e) of section 10, by the former of which an "invented word or words" may be registered, and by the latter "a word or words having no reference to the character or quality of the goods," are not to be read together, and if the word is "invented" it is no objection to its registration that it is descriptive of the goods to which it is applied. Farbenfabriken Application, In re (63 L. T. Ch. 257; [1894] 1 Ch. 645), overruled. Eastman Photographic Materials Co. v. Comptroller-General of Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks, 67 L. J. Ch. 628; [1898] A.C. 571; 79 L. T. 195; 47 W. R. 152—H.L. (E.).

— "Tachytype."—The word "Tachytype" is an "invented word" within the meaning of the Patents &c. Acts, 1883 and 1888, and as such is capable of registration as a trade mark. Under these Acts it is not essential that the applicant for registration should be the first and true inventor of the word, nor that there should have been no prior publication of the word within the jurisdiction. Linotype Co.'s Trade Mark, In re, 69 L. J. Ch. 625; [1900] 2 Ch. 285; 82 L. T. 794—Cozens-Hardy, J.

— Misspelling—"Word having no reference to character or quality."—A word such as "Uneeda," which merely consists of a misspelling of three common words put into one, is not "an invented word" within section 64, sub-section 1 (d) of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, as amended by the Act of 1888. If such a word or phrase suggests that the purchaser of goods will find them comforting or advantageous, it cannot be registered under sub-section 1 (e) of that section as "having no reference to the character or quality of the goods." National Biscuit Co.'s Application, In re; Uneeda Trade Mark, 71 L. J. Ch. 353; [1902] 1 Ch. 783; 86 L. T. 439; 50 W. R. 467—C.A.

— Secondary Meaning—Word Acquiring.]—Warrington, J., having held—first, that the word "hæmatogen" as applied to a preparation of a drug called hæmoglobin was not an "invented word" within the meaning of section 64, sub-section 1 (d) of the Patents &c. Act, 1883, as amended by the Patents &c. Act, 1888, s. 10, sub-s. 1, and was therefore not capable of registration as a trade mark; and secondly, that the word had not acquired a secondary meaning exclusively denoting the plaintiff's goods, the Court of Appeal held (there being no appeal upon the first point) that the decision of Warrington, J., upon the second point was right. Hommel v. Bauer, 21 T. L. R. 80—C.A.

— Similar Sound.]—Where a particular word cannot be registered as a trade mark, another word sounding exactly like it, but spelt differently, cannot be registered. Ripley's Trade Mark, In re, 78 L. T. 367—C.A.

— Word Representing Sound of Letters.]—The applicants were owners of an old trade mark consisting of the letters "V Z." An application by them for the registration of the word "Vezet" was granted. Whether a word which is merely a combination of the sounds of letters can be registered as a new mark, quære. Verschure & Zoon's Trade Mark, In re, 74 L. J. Ch. 684—Warrington, J.

Geographical Word.]—Motion for the rectification of the register of trade marks by removal therefrom of the words "Saint Raphael" or "St. Raphael" in respect of wine, or an entry thereon of a disclaimer of the words:—Held, that the words were not geographical. Clement & Co.'s Trade Mark, In re, 80 L. T. 230; 47 W. R. 407—Kekewich, J. See s.c. in C.A., supra.

— "Distinctive mark"—Word Distinguishing Goods as well as the Proprietor—Geographical Name—Undertaking to the Court.]—The clause of section 9 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905, which defines a "distinctive" trade mark for the purposes of registration under sub-section 5 of that section, refers to the distinction between the goods of one proprietor and those of another, and not to a distinction between the goods themselves; but if a trade mark does so distinguish the goods of a proprietor, it is immaterial that it also distinguishes the goods themselves. Apollinaris Trade Mark, In re, 76 L. J. Ch. 437; [1907] 2 Ch. 178; 96 L. T. 877; 23 T. L. R. 515—Kekewich, J.

The German Apollinaris Co., owning the well-known natural mineral-water spring in Rhenish Prussia, originally called the Apollinaris Spring, after the name of a saint, and situate near a hill called Apollinarisberg,—Held, entitled to registration of the word "Apollinaris" as a distinctive trade mark within the meaning of section 9, sub-section 5 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905, upon giving an undertaking not to use the mark except in respect of water from that particular spring and its neighbourhood. Id.

Descriptive Word—"Calculated to deceive or otherwise."—Under the Patents &c. Act, 1883, a trade mark for jams was registered by the plaintiffs consisting of a copy of a written signature with the word "Silverpan" added. The plaintiffs did not claim under the registration the exclusive use of the word "Silverpan." On motion by the defendants to rectify the register by removing the trade mark, or by adding a disclaimer of any right by the plaintiffs to the exclusive use of the word "Silverpan,"—Held, that the word "Silverpan" was not a "distinctive word" within the meaning of section 74 of the Patents &c. Act, 1883, and was "not calculated to deceive or otherwise" within the meaning of section 73 of the Act, and that the motion must be refused. Faulder's Trade Mark, In re, 83 L. T. 726—Kekewich, J.

— "Naptha"—Fels-Naptha Soap—Lady-

bird Naptha Soap.—The word "Naptha" as applied to soap, being a descriptive word, has not acquired in the market a secondary meaning denoting the plaintiff's goods, to the exclusion of the goods of all other manufacturers of soap. Fels v. Hedley, 20 T. L. R. 69—C.A.

— Secondary Meaning.—The term "Cellular," as applied to cloth and other like materials, is descriptive of the character and texture of the goods, and has not acquired a secondary meaning in association with the goods of particular manufacturers. Reddaway v. Banham (65 L. J. Q.B. 381; [1896] A.C. 199) distinguished. Cellular Clothing Co. v. Maxton, 68 L. J. P.C. 72; [1899] A.C. 326; 80 L. T. 809—H.L. (Sc.)

— "Tabloid."—In 1884 the word "Tabloid" was registered as a trade mark under the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, in respect of substances used in medicine and pharmacy. On a motion to expunge the trade mark from the register, —Held, that the word "Tabloid" was in 1884 "a distinctive fancy word not in common use," and was properly registered under section 64, sub-section 1 (c) of the Act, and should not be removed from the register. Burroughs, Wellcome & Co.'s Trade Marks, In re, 73 L. J. Ch. 474; [1904] 1 Ch. 736; 91 L. T. 58; 52 W. R. 581; 20 T. L. R. 415—C.A.

— Disclaimer—Disentitled to Protection.—A "distinctive" word in sub-section 1 (b) of section 74 of the Patents &c. Act, 1883, means something at the time of registration apparently chosen by the applicant for registration for the purpose of distinguishing his goods from the goods of others, and prima facie suitable for that purpose when used. Burland v. Broxburn Oil Co. (58 L. J. Ch. 816; 42 Ch. D. 274) approved. Faulder & Co.'s Trade Mark, In re, 71 L. J. Ch. 124; [1902] 1 Ch. 125; 86 L. T. 66—C.A.

In 1886 a firm of jam manufacturers registered in respect of preserves a mark consisting of the signature of the firm and the word "Silverpan" above it:—Held, that "Silverpan" was an "addition" to the trade mark within section 64 of the Act of 1883, and not part of it, and was a "distinctive word" within section 74, sub-section 1 (b), and a disclaimer of any right to the exclusive use of the word ought to have been entered. The mark was ordered to be removed from the register, the registered proprietors preferring that to the entry of a disclaimer. Smokeless Powder Co.'s Trade Mark, In re (61 L. J. Ch. 391; [1892] 1 Ch. 590), and Clement & Co.'s Trade Mark, In re (69 L. J. Ch. 52; [1900] 1 Ch. 114), distinguished. Ib.

Per COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—Quare, whether, after the registration of a trade mark has been completed, the Court can order a disclaimer to be entered nunc pro tunc. Ib.

"Distinctive device"—Mark in Common Use in the Trade—Bona Fide Intention to Use.—A trade mark consisting of the head and shoulders of the picture known as Gainsborough's "Duchess of Devonshire" was registered by the plaintiffs in January, 1892, in class 38, for

"hats, bonnets, and similar head coverings." It was alleged that the defendant, who also carried on a millinery business, had infringed the plaintiffs' trade mark by affixing to his premises, while in the course of erection, a board upon which there was a painted reproduction of the duchess; that he had also exhibited the same mark upon posters and advertisements in connection with his business, and that he used boxes for delivering millinery, &c., and notepaper containing reproductions of the plaintiffs' trade mark. The defendant alleged that he had for seven years past or thereabouts used representations of the duchess in various ways in connection with his business as a milliner. It was proved that the picture in question had from the year 1876 been in common use in the hat and millinery trade as an ornamentation upon various papers, circulars, &c., used by milliners in their business. The plaintiffs had never used the trade mark on the actual goods supplied by them, but they had often used it on labels affixed to the boxes in which the goods were delivered to customers, as well as on bills, receipts, &c. The defendant had used the mark which constituted the alleged infringement in a similar manner:—Held, that, in 1892, when the trade mark was registered, it was not "distinctive" or capable of distinguishing the goods of the plaintiff as his manufacture or selection from the goods of all other persons; that it was not therefore capable of registration, and that it must be expunged from the register. Semble, that, in order to justify the removal of a trade mark from the register on the ground of non-user, it must be shewn either (a) that at the date of registration there was no bona fide intention to use it, and that it has never in fact been used; or (b), if there was a bona fide intention to use and actual user for a short time, there has been actual abandonment over a long period of time. Louise & Co. v. Gainsborough, 87 L. T. 591—Farwell, J.

Word used before August 13, 1875—"Special and distinctive word."—To entitle a person to register a word used as a trade mark before August 13, 1875, as a trade mark, it is essential to shew, first, that it was "special and distinctive" of his goods; and secondly, that it was used as a trade mark. Wood's Trade Mark, In re; Wood v. Lambert (55 L. J. Ch. 377; 32 Ch. D. 247), followed. Bourne v. Swan & Edgar; Bourne's Trade Mark, In re, 72 L. J. Ch. 168; [1903] 1 Ch. 211; 87 L. T. 589; 51 W. R. 213—Farwell, J.

— Delay.—A delay of nearly five years from the time when the applicant first had notice that a mark was registered held not fatal to the application to rectify the register, the respondent failing to shew that he had been prejudiced by the delay. Ib.

— Costs—Proportional Apportionment.—As the apportionment of costs according to strict rights was impracticable, THE COURT directed the plaintiff to pay to the defendant a proportion of the aggregate amount of the costs of the motion to rectify and of the action. Pollard, In re; Pollard v. Pollard (W. N. (1902), 49), followed. Ib.

Intention to Use—Mark as Applicable to certain Goods—Mark Common to the Trade—Subsequent Application of Mark to other Goods—Rectification of Register.]—The plaintiffs registered a trade mark in 1878 in respect of substances used as food or as ingredients in food, except condensed milk, coffee and milk, chocolate and milk, and essence of coffee. The mark consisted of "a representation of a Swiss milkmaid holding a pail in one hand and with the other hand supporting another pail on her head"; above the figure were the words "Milkmaid Brand." At the time the mark was registered the plaintiffs had no real intention to use the mark for butter. In 1901 they commenced to sell butter and registered a trade mark with a similar representation of a milkmaid with the words "Milkmaid Brand." Such a device or representation was common and open to the trade in connection with butter at and prior to the registration of 1901:—Held, that the registration of the mark of 1901 must be restricted so as to exclude butter from the goods in respect of which it was registered, and that the mark of 1878 must either be struck off the register or be restricted by excluding butter. Anglo-Swiss Condensed Milk Co. v. Pearkes, Gunston & Tee, 20 T. L. R. 238—C.A.

Old Mark—Disclaimer.]—Section 64, sub-section 3 (ii.) of the Patents &c. Act, 1883, enables only those old marks, which do not contain any of the essential particulars defined in the previous clauses of the section, to be registered without any disclaimer. Therefore, where the old mark sought to be registered is a label consisting of a distinctive device and words or letters, it is registrable under section 64, sub-section 2, and the words or letters must be disclaimed, notwithstanding the circumstance that if the words or letters were used alone they could be registered as an old mark under section 64, sub-section 3 (ii.). Wright, Crossley & Co.'s Trade Mark, In re, 69 L. J. Ch. 589; [1900] 2 Ch. 218; 83 L. T. 150—Byrne, J.

An application by a firm for the registration of a mark used by it before August 13, 1875, need not contain a statement of the names of the firm for the time being since the first alleged user, or even the words "and their predecessors in business, members of the firm for the time being." Ib. And see infra, OLD MARK.

4. TRADE LABEL.

Distinctive Label—Words Forming Part of Label—Added Words—Disclaimer.]—A word or words, though not capable of being registered as a trade mark as a "fancy word or words not in common use" under section 64, sub-section (c) of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, may form part of a distinctive label properly registered as a trade mark under the same sub-section, and in that case need not be disclaimed as an addition to the trade mark under section 74. Smokeless Powder Co.'s Trade Mark (61 L. J. Ch. 391; [1892] 1 Ch. 590) followed. Clement & Co.'s Trade Mark, In re, 69 L. J. Ch. 52; [1900] 1 Ch. 114; 81 L. T. 400; 48 W. R. 67—C.A.

Colourable Imitation—Calculated to Deceive—

Evidence—Question for the Court.]—Where an action is brought to restrain a colourable imitation of the make-up of goods, it must be proved beyond question that the goods are so got up as to be calculated to deceive. No general rule can be laid down, and each case must be judged by its own circumstances. Payton v. Snelling, Lampard & Co., 70 L. J. Ch. 644; [1901] A.C. 308; 85 L. T. 287—H.L. (E.)

Whether a customer would be likely to be deceived is not a proper question to put to a witness, for it is for the Court (and not for the witness) to decide, after inspection of the exhibits and paying regard to the evidence, whether a customer would be likely to be deceived by the make-up of goods. It is not sufficient to shew that by a trick or device a retail trader might be able to pass off the goods of one for those of another. Ib.

"Calculated to deceive"—Words "Trade mark" on Label.]—Putting the words "trade mark" on a label which constitutes a trade mark is not in itself "calculated to deceive"; and it will not be taken, as a general rule, that the words were intended to designate the particular part only of the label on which they are placed. They may apply to that part only, but, even so, the label is not necessarily "calculated to deceive"—that is, reasonably calculated to injure somebody. In each case it must be seen whether the natural inference would be that the rest of the label, or the label as a whole, was not a trade mark; and the Court will not order the mark to be removed from the register unless it is shewn that it is reasonably likely to injure some one. Bass, Ratcliff & Gretton's Trade Mark, In re, 71 L. J. Ch. 779; [1902] 2 Ch. 579; 87 L. T. 408; 51 W. R. 86—C.A.

The decision in Apollinaris Co.'s Trade Marks, In re (61 L. J. Ch. 625, 644; [1891] 2 Ch. 186, 233), on this point was a decision upon a question of fact, not of law, and is not binding except in a case where the facts are the same. Ib.

5. SIMILARITY.

"Cottolene"—"Cocosoline."]—The plaintiffs, who were the registered owners of two trade marks, each of which consisted of the word "Cottolene," which was used to denote a butter substitute made from cotton-seed oil, sought an injunction to restrain the defendant from selling or advertising for sale any butter substitute under the name of "Cocosoline":—Held, that as the defendant had taken the word "Cocosoline" innocently, and without any intention of injuring the plaintiffs' business, and as no instance of anyone being deceived was proved, the action must be dismissed. N. K. Fairbank Co. v. Cocos Butter Manufacturing Co., 20 T. L. R. 53—Swinfen Eady, J.

"Motorine" already on Register—Application to Register "Motricine."]—The applicants, who carried on a large trade in petrol spirit under the name of "Motricine" abroad, and had registered the word there as a trade mark, applied to register the word in England for light mineral oils for driving motor cars and oil engines. The application was opposed and refused. They then applied to register the word as a spirit for motor-power purposes derived from petroleum. The application was again opposed and refused. The opponents were a firm who had registered the word "Motorine" as a trade mark for lubricating oil suitable for motor cars, disclaiming any right to the exclusive use of the word "motor." The applicants appealed against the refusal to register "Motricine." The evidence shewed that "Motorine" had come to be known as the lubricating oil manufactured by the opponents; that both the petrol spirit (which was highly explosive) and the lubricating oil were derived from petroleum, and were sold by, and to, the same classes of persons; and that there was, in fact, danger of confusion in use between the two.—Held, that the applicants, not having shewn that the trade mark which they proposed to register was not calculated to deceive, were, under section 11 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905, not entitled to register it. Principle of Eno v. Dunn (15 App. Cas. 252) applied. Compagnie Industrielle des Pétroles' Application, In re, 76 L. J. Ch. 646; [1907] 2 Ch. 435; 97 L. T. 235; 23 T. L. R. 672—Warrington, J.

Held, also, that "Motorine" was a word which had no direct reference to the quality or character of the goods in respect of which it was registered, and was therefore, under section 9, sub-section 4 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905, capable of being registered. Ib.

Sections 19 and 21 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905, apply to cases where the objection to a proposed trade mark is simply the existence on the register of another mark of another trader, and cannot be called in aid of a case falling within section 11. Ib.

Identical Mark for Different Goods — Same Proprietor — "Closely resembling" — Associated Marks — Assignability — Discretion — Costs.]—The Birmingham Small Arms Co., who were entered on the register of trade marks as proprietors of the trade mark "B.S.A." for small arms, applied for the registration of the same trade mark for goods in a different class—namely, cycles and automobiles. The Registrar of Trade Marks refused the application, unless the applicants agreed that the two marks should be "associated" in accordance with section 24 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905.—Held, on appeal, that section 24 had no application to cases of an identical mark of the same proprietor for such different goods as small arms and cycles, but applied only to cases where registration was sought for a mark "so closely resembling" a trade mark of an applicant already registered for the same goods or description of goods as to be calculated, in the case of an application by a stranger, to deceive or cause confusion. The Registrar was accordingly directed to proceed with the registration without "association." The discretion vested in the Registrar under sub-section 2 of section 12 of the Act must be exercised subject to the provisions of section 24. Birmingham Small Arms Co.'s Application, In re, 76 L. J. Ch. 571; [1907] 2 Ch. 397; 97 L. T. 330; 23 T. L. R. 650—Kekewich, J.

6. DISCLAIMER.

"Added matter."—On the registration, under the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1888, a disclaimer of any right to the exclusive use of such portion of a label as constitutes "added matter" must be made. Royal Baking-Powder Co.'s Trade Mark, In re, 50 W. R. 454—Farwell, J.

Double Registration—Time for Disclaimer.]—When a disclaimer is required under the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Acts, 1883–1888, it must be made in the application for registration, and cannot be made afterwards. Player & Sons' Trade Mark, In re, 70 L. J. Ch. 359; [1901] 1 Ch. 382; 84 L. T. 190—Cozens-Hardy, J.

When a trade mark has been registered with words the exclusive use of which is not claimed, and which are not essential to the trade mark, a second registration of the same mark will not be allowed with different words and other non-essential particulars. Ib. And see cols. 2533, 2535.

7. OLD MARK.

Application to Remove.]—Where a word has been registered under section 10 of the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, as being a "special and distinctive word . . . used as a trade mark before the passing of this Act," and an application is made to remove it, as having been improperly placed on the register, the burden of proof is on the applicants to shew that it should not have been registered, and not on the owners of the trade mark to defend the registration. Leonard & Ellis's Trade Mark, In re (53 L. J. Ch. 603; 26 Ch. D. 288), followed. Pearson's Application, In re; Cheesebrough Manufacturing Co.'s Trade Mark "Vaseline," In re, 71 L. J. Ch. 427; [1902] 2 Ch. 1; 86 L. T. 665—C.A.

Patented Article—"Special and distinctive word."]—In 1872 an inventor took out a patent in the United States for the manufacture of a substance which he stated to be "named by me 'vaseline'"; in 1874 he took out a patent in England for improvements in the manufacture of the substance which he said "I term 'vaseline.'" In 1877 he registered the word "vaseline" under the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, as an old trade mark. On an application to remove the mark from the register,—Held (dissentiente COZENS-HARDY, L.J.), that the language of the patents was ambiguous, as the meaning might either be that the name "vaseline" was given to the substance manufactured by the inventor and his successors, or that it designated the substance made according to the process described; that the burden was on the applicants to shew that it had the latter meaning; and that as, according to the evidence, they had not discharged this burden, the mark should not be removed. Linolium Manufacturing Co. v. Nairn (47 L. J. Ch. 430; 7 Ch. D. 834) distinguished. Ib.

Held, by COZENS-HARDY, L.J., that the word "vaseline" was an invented word to describe an invented thing, and that, as any one was at liberty to manufacture it when not protected by the patent and to call it by that name, it could not be treated as a "special and distinctive word" within section 10 of the Trade Marks Registration Act, 1875, and properly registered as an old mark. Per COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—The principle applied by Fry, J., in Lino-leum Manufacturing Co. v. Nairn (supra) to the case of a patented article after the expiration of the patent cannot be limited to that case. Ib.

—Proof.—When a trade mark is impeached after it has been for a long time on the register, and has been openly and largely made use of, the presumption is in its favour, and the onus of proof that it was improperly registered is on the persons who seek to have it removed. Cheesebrough Manufacturing Co.'s Trade Mark "Vaseline," In re (71 L. J. Ch. 427; [1902] 2 Ch. 1), followed. Burroughs, Wellcome & Co.'s Trade Mark, In re, 73 L. J. Ch. 474; [1904] 1 Ch. 736—C.A.

Mark Registered under Patents Act—Order to Expunge Simply—Not Subject to Application to Amend.—Semble, leave should not now be given to amend a bad trade mark which was originally registered under the Act of 1883. The Court rejected the owner's contention that an order to expunge his mark, which had been registered under the Act of 1883, should only be made subject to an application to amend being made by him within a reasonable time, but made an order to expunge the mark absolutely. Wills's Trade Mark (62 L. J. Ch. 545; [1893] 2 Ch. 262) not followed. Day v. Riley, 48 W. R. 556—Buckley, J.

Non-User of Mark—Non-Appearance of Proprietor—Removal from Register—Service Abroad of Notice of Motion.—A word was registered as a trade mark in 1891 upon the instructions and in the name of an American, giving Chicago as his address, with the name and address of an English firm of patent agents as his address for service. In 1899 an American company applied for the registration of the same word as their trade mark, they having used it for a long time in America and also more recently in England. This application was objected to by the comptroller in view of the previous registration. Thereupon enquiries were instituted by the company, with the result that the registered proprietor could not be found to have ever used the mark or done any business either in America or in England; that he could not be traced in Chicago or elsewhere; that letters addressed to him at Chicago were returned through the Dead-Letter Office; and that the patent agents named as the address for service could give no information with respect to him. The company then gave notice of motion to rectify the register by expunging the mark, and left a copy of this notice at the address for service, and sent another copy of it in a registered packet to Chicago by a letter as directed in Compagnie Générale d'Eaux Minérales et de Bains de Mer, In re (60 L. J. Ch. 728; [1891] 3 Ch. 451). On proof of these facts, and the registered proprietor not appearing, though more than twenty-eight days had elapsed since the despatch of the packet and letter to Chicago,—Held, that the mark should be expunged. Ashton's Trade Mark, In re, 48 W. R. 339—Stirling, J.

8. RECTIFICATION OF REGISTER.

Person Aggrieved—"Sufficient cause."—The words in section 90, "entry made without sufficient cause," do not only mean "made without sufficient cause at the time of registration," but apply to an entry which is at any time on the register without sufficient cause, and such an entry may therefore be expunged by the Court under that section. Batt v. Dunnett, 67 L. J. Ch. 575; [1897] 2 Ch. 432; 79 L. T. 206.

Competency of Rectification after Five Years.—Boord & Son, who had been for five years the registered proprietors of a trade mark, raised an action for infringement against Thom & Cameron, who defended the action, and raised a counter-action against Boord & Son, concluding, inter alia, for declarator that the trade mark was incapable of registration and should be expunged from the register in respect that it was common property before its registration by Boord & Son:—Held, that the lapse of five years was no bar to the removal of the entry, and that the question of Boord & Son's right to be on the register had been competently raised. Boord v. Thom & Cameron, [1907] S.C. 1326—Ct. of Sess.

In an action for infringement of a trade mark that has been on the register for five years, if the defender desires to plead as a defence either that the mark should not be on the register as being common property, or that he himself is entitled also to be put on the register as the owner of the same mark, he must take steps to have the register rectified by the expunging of the mark or the insertion of his own name as the case may be. Ib.

Where, in an action for infringement of a registered trade mark the defence of common property is put forward, the onus on the defender of proving common property is increased by the length of time the mark has been on the register; and he cannot discharge that onus by proof of a few isolated sales under the mark by persons other than the pursuer, but can only discharge it by proof that such a quantity of goods had been sold by such persons under the mark that the mark had come, in a certain market, to be associated with their goods. Ib.

Resemblance—Effect of Long Association of Complainers' Goods with a Certain Device.—A firm of spirit merchants, who had a registered trade mark consisting of a cat standing on a barrel, proved, in an action at their instance for infringement of this mark, that their goods had been so long associated with the mark that they had come to be known as the "Cat and Barrel" brand:—Held, that in considering whether certain labels amounted to infringement of the complainers' trade mark the effect of this long association must be taken into account; and that labels which shewed a cat and a barrel placed differently from those on the complainers' trade mark, and which did not bear a close resemblance to it, amounted to a practical infringement of the complainers' trade mark. Ib.

9. FALSE TRADE DESCRIPTION.

Watch—Parts Imported from Abroad—Finished in England—“English lever.”—The appellants sold a watch for 2*l.* 5*s.* to which they applied the description “English lever.” Certain parts were imported into this country from abroad in a more or less unfinished state. The value of these parts in their rough condition, including the mainspring, hairspring, and certain screws, was 8*d.* The price of these parts when finished in England was estimated to be 4*s.* 5*d.* All these parts were dealt with in this country to enable them to go into a watch, and the watch was put together here. The magistrate held that the imported parts were of foreign origin, and of such importance that a description which failed to indicate them was a false description in a material respect, and that the finishing operations in this country were not of such a character as to destroy the characteristics of the foreign country in which they were made and produced. He accordingly convicted the appellants of applying a false trade description to the watch:—Held, on remitting the case to the magistrate, that if he had come to the conclusion as one of fact on the evidence, and had simply stated the case to determine whether there was anything in point of law to prevent him coming to such conclusion, the Court would not disturb his decision; but that if he decided upon the view that the inclusion of certain parts partly manufactured abroad compelled him as a matter of law to hold that “English” was a false description, then his decision could not be supported. Williamson v. Tierney, 88 L. T. 592; 65 J. P. 70—D.

Misrepresentation—False Statement Made in Advertisements.—The plaintiffs by means of extensive advertising established a large business for the sale of certain pills of an oviform shape, called “Bile Beans for Biliousness.” Many of the advertisements contained a story to the effect that Bile Beans were compounded of ingredients which included a vegetable substance, of wonderful curative properties, which was found in Australia, but had only been recently discovered after thorough investigation by Charles Forde, an eminent scientist. The labels on the boxes described the Bile Beans as “Charles Forde’s,” but did not contain any specific reference to Forde’s discovery of the Australian vegetable substance. The plaintiffs claimed an interdict restraining the defendant from selling as “Bile Beans” pills which were not of the plaintiffs’ manufacture. It was proved that there was no such person as Charles Forde, and that the plaintiffs’ Bile Beans did not contain any ingredient which was peculiar to Australia:—Held, that the repute of “Bile Beans” had been established by fraudulent misrepresentations on the part of the plaintiffs, and therefore that they were not entitled to interdict. Bile Bean Manufacturing Co. v. Davidson, 8 F. 1181—Ct. of Sess.

Semble—“Bile Beans” is a descriptive name and not a fancy name of the plaintiffs’ invention. Ib.

10. MERCHANDISE MARKS ACTS.

Description Purely Verbal—Description Added to Invoice.—The Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, does not apply to trade descriptions purely verbal. Coppen v. Moore, 67 L. J. Q.B. 689; [1898] 2 Q.B. 300, 306; 78 L. T. 520; 46 W. R. 620; 62 J. P. 453; 19 Cox C.C. 45—D.

The addition in writing of a word to the invoice sent with goods sold which induces the purchaser to believe they are what he asked for, is a false trade description within the Act. Ib.

Criminal Liability of Vendor or Principal for Acts of Servants or Agents.—The Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, renders the master or principal criminally liable for the acts of his servants and agents in all cases within section 2, sub-sections 1 and 2, where the conduct constituting the offence is pursued by such servants or agents within the scope or in the course of their employment. The master or principal can only be relieved from criminal responsibility where he can prove that he had acted in good faith and had done all it was reasonably possible to do to prevent the commission by his agents and servants of offences against the Act. Ib.

Forged Mark Applied to China Sold by Auction—Suspicion of Forgery Entertained by Auctioneers and Suggested to Bidders—Absence of Mens Rea—“Acted innocently.”—To obtain a conviction under the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, the case must be one in which mens rea in fact exists; but although the burden of proof is shifted and the prosecution have not to prove mens rea, yet if the defendant can prove absence of mens rea, he is to be acquitted. Mens rea must be applied to the particular offence, and there may be an innocence of intention to infringe the Act, although there may be suspicion of the genuineness of the trade mark. Christie v. Cooper, 69 L. J. Q.B. 708; [1900] 2 Q.B. 522; 83 L. T. 54; 49 W. R. 46; 64 J. P. 692—D.

Thus, auctioneers who have a suspicion that Dresden china, sent to them as genuine and put up for sale at their rooms, is not genuine, but bears a forged trade mark, and who tell the assembled bidders that they sell the lot “for what it is,” thereby suggesting suspicion in the minds of the bidders as to its genuineness, act innocently within the meaning of sub-section 2 (c) of section 2 of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887. Ib.

“Applied” to Goods—Implied Representation.—The appellant asked for two half-pounds of tea at the respondents’ shop. The respondents’ salesman took two packets off the counter, wrapped them in paper, and handed them to the appellant, who paid for them. The appellant afterwards found that though each packet, including its paper wrapper, weighed more than half a pound, the tea in each packet weighed less than half a pound. On each packet was a printed statement that its weight including the wrapper was half a pound:—Held, that the handing over of the packets by the salesman to the appellant, who had asked for a greater weight of tea than the packets contained, did not amount to the application of a false trade description to the goods by the respondents so as to bring them within the provisions of section 2, sub-section 2 of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, which makes it an offence to sell goods to which such a description is applied. Langley v. Bombay Tea Co., 69 L. J. Q.B. 752; [1900] 2 Q.B. 460; 83 L. T. 175; 49 W. R. 27; 19 Cox C.C. 551—D.

False Trade Description—New Zealand Mutton—Letters Written upon Invoice.—The appellant went to the shop of the respondent, who carried on business as a butcher, and asked him for a leg of New Zealand mutton. The respondent having produced and weighed a leg of mutton, the appellant asked for an invoice, which was handed to him. The appellant asked the respondent to put a mark upon the invoice shewing that the mutton was New Zealand meat, and the respondent then wrote upon it the letters "N. M." The mutton was not in fact New Zealand mutton. Upon an information against the respondent under section 2, sub-section 2 of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, the Justices held that the letters "N. M." did not constitute a "trade description" within the definition contained in section 3 of the Act, on the ground that it was not established that "according to the custom of the trade" such letters were "commonly taken to be an indication of" the country in which the goods were produced:—Held, that the Justices were wrong, and that upon the facts as found the respondent ought to be convicted. Cameron v. Wiggins, 70 L. J. K.B. 15; [1901] 1 K.B. 1; 83 L. T. 428; 49 W. R. 237; 19 Cox C.C. 580—D.

False Trade Description—Invoice—Kilderkin.—G. having ordered one kilderkin of mild ale, received a cask of ale together with an invoice which stated: "Bought of North-Eastern Breweries Limited. Oct. 21, 1903. Kils. 1. Mild Ale B.M. Per Brl. 48s.—17." The cask held seventeen gallons one quart and one pint, and a kilderkin is a cask holding eighteen gallons. It was found as a fact that the appellants knew that the process of cooping casks had the effect of diminishing their holding capacity:—Held, that the appellants were rightly convicted of applying a false trade description within section 2, sub-section 1 (d) of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887. North-Eastern Breweries v. Gibson, 91 L. T. 78; 68 J. P. 356; 20 Cox C.C. 706; 20 T. L. R. 496—D.

Cigarettes—Label on Packet—Guaranteed "Hand-made."—The defendants sold machine-made cigarettes in a packet labelled "guaranteed hand-made by experienced workmen." The price was 2½d. a packet. The price of packets of cigarettes of the same quality made by hand was 2½d. The quality of tobacco, paper, starch, &c., used for the manufacture of the machine-made cigarettes was the same as in the case of hand-made cigarettes, and their construction was as proper:—Held, that the label was a false trade description in a material respect within section 3, sub-section 1 of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, and that the doctrine of equivalents—that the article sold under the false description was as good as that asked for by the customer—was inapplicable. Kirshenboim v. Salmon, 67 L. J. Q.B. 691; [1898] 2 Q.B. 19; 73 L. T. 658; 46 W. R. 573; 62 J. P. 439; 19 Cox C.C. 127—D.

Mineral-water Bottles—Trade Mark Embossed—Seller's Labels Affixed—No Actual Fraud or Deception Proved—"Innocently."—

The plaintiffs were manufacturers of mineral waters in D., which they sold to the trade in bottles embossed with their name, registered as a trade mark. The defendants, who were manufacturers of mineral waters in L., received in the course of trade from their customers a large number of the plaintiffs' bottles so embossed, which they filled with mineral waters of their own manufacture and sold to retailers, but with labels affixed bearing their own name and address as manufacturers, and stating the contents of the bottles. The defendants had not tried to pass off their mineral waters as the manufacture of the plaintiffs, nor was it proved that fraud was intended, or that any person had been deceived:—Held, that the defendants, by filling bottles bearing the plaintiffs' trade mark with mineral waters of their own manufacture, committed an offence against section 2 of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, and that placing labels bearing the defendants' own name on the bottles did not exonerate them. Thwaites v. M'Evilly, [1904] 1 Ir. R. 310—C.A.

"Soda crystals"—Mixture of Crystallised Carbonate of Soda and Crystallised Sulphate of Soda.—The appellant sold in the ordinary way of his trade a quantity of soda which was described in the invoice as "soda crystals." Upon analysis the soda was found to contain crystallised carbonate of soda mixed with crystallised sulphate of soda. The quantity of the latter substance varied in the different samples from 18 to 64 per cent. An information having been preferred against the appellant under section 2, sub-section 2 of the Merchandise Marks Acts, 1887, charging him with having sold goods to which a false trade description was applied, the Justices held that "soda crystals" meant ordinary washing soda, which upon the evidence consisted of crystallised carbonate of soda containing not more than 2 per cent. of sulphate of soda, and that it was a false trade description when applied to the mixture sold by the appellant. They accordingly convicted him:—Held (DARLING, J., dissenting), that the description "soda crystals" was a "false trade description" within the meaning of section 3 of the Act, and that the appellant was properly convicted. Fowler v. Cripps, 75 L. J. K.B. 72; [1906] 1 K.B. 16; 93 L. T. 808; 54 W. R. 299; 70 J. P. 21; 21 Cox C.C. 52; 4 L. G. R. 9; 22 T. L. R. 73—D.

"Natural mineral water"—Water Subjected to Process—Water Identical.—The description "natural mineral water" applied to water, which has been subjected to a process for making it fit for sale and consumption, which when offered for sale is in all essentials identical with the water as it exists in the spring from which it comes, is not a false trade description. Davenport v. Apollinaris Co., 89 L. T. 19; 67 J. P. 323; 20 Cox C.C. 502—D.

Tea Weighed with Paper—Gross Weight.—The respondent, having asked for a quarter of a pound of tea, was handed by an assistant of the appellants a packet already folded and tied with string. A ticket was inserted under the string, on one side of which was "Star Tea Company Limited. Quarter pound 2s. 8d. tea ticket . . ." and on the other a notice that every purchaser of a quarter of a pound and upwards was given some useful article. The tea was wrapped in a piece of lead paper, on which was printed, "Quarter pound gross weight." The tea by itself was short by $\frac{1}{4}$ oz. of a quarter of a pound, but with the paper was slightly in excess:—Held, that the appellants were rightly convicted under section 1, sub-section 2 of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, of applying a false trade description to the tea by means of the ticket. Star Tea Co. v. Whitworth, 91 L. T. 87; 68 J. P. 443; 2 L. G. R. 1000; 20 Cox C.C. 658; 20 T. L. R. 539—D.

Label—Tarragona Port.—The respondents sold to the appellant at the usual retail price of 1s. an imperial quart bottle of wine bearing the following label: "Stower's Tarragona Port (Blended with wine produced from finest foreign grapes)." Tarragona Port is a wine made in Spain, in the province of Tarragona, from fresh grapes grown there; it is a wine having a distinct taste, bouquet, and smell. One-third (in bulk) of the contents of the bottle sold to the appellant consisted of a special kind of high-priced Tarragona port called "Mistella," which is a very heavy wine not fit for drinking by itself, and imported for the purpose of being blended with other wines. The remaining two-thirds of the bottle consisted of a light wine made from "grape must." "Grape must" is made in Greece; it consists of the concentrated juice of fresh grapes grown in Greece. It is exported from Greece in concentrated form and converted in England into wine by adding a ferment and water. So produced the wine is red in colour, and is not of a high quality. An information was laid against the respondents under the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, for selling the wine to which a false trade description was applied by the label on the bottle. The magistrate having dismissed the information, —Held, that it was impossible to say that the magistrate had come to a wrong determination. Hooper v. Riddle, 95 L. T. 424; 21 Cox C.C. 277; 70 J. P. 417—D.

Absence of "intent to defraud"—Acting "innocently."—An aerated-water manufacturer and bottler was charged with selling beer in a bottle to which a false trade description was applied, in contravention of section 2, sub-section 2 of the Merchandise Marks Acts, 1887. The sheriff held that the accused had committed the offence knowingly, and convicted him, but found that he had acted "without intent to defraud." The accused appealed, on the ground that the finding that he had acted "without intent to defraud" was tantamount to a finding that he had acted "innocently":—Held, that, inasmuch as the appellant had acted "knowingly" he had not acted "innocently" in the sense of section 2, sub-section 2 of the Act, and that the conviction was right. Haddow v. Neilson, 2 F. (Just. Cas.) 19—Ct. of Justy.

11. CERTIFICATE UNDER TRADE MARKS ACT.

Certificate—Discretion.—The granting of a certificate, under section 77A of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Acts, 1883 to 1888, that the right to a trade mark has come in question, is discretionary. Bourne v. Swan & Edgar, 72 L. J. Ch. 168; [1903] 1 Ch. 211; 87 L. T. 589; 51 W. R. 213—Farwell, J.

Action for Infringement and Motion to Expunge Heard Together—Certificate that Right to Exclusive Use of Trade Mark Came in Question in Action.—When an action for infringement of a registered trade mark and a motion to expunge the trade mark from the register are heard together on the same evidence, the Court may certify that "the right to the exclusive use of the trade mark came in question in an action for infringement of a registered trade mark," under section 18 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1888—and this although the trade mark has been on the register for more than five years. Field v. Wagel Syndicate, 69 L. J. Ch. 365; [1900] 1 Ch. 651; 82 L. T. 231; 48 W. R. 390—Buckley, J.

TRADE NAME.

1. Generally, 2546.
2. Similarity, 2548.
3. Sale of Business, 2552.

1. GENERALLY.

Appropriate Words of Description—Exclusive Right to Use such Name.—In the absence of any such secondary meaning of appropriate words of ordinary description as has created a general association of the name of the product with the plaintiff, and of evidence of confusion between the goods of the plaintiff, the first user, and those of the defendant, caused by identity of name, no injunction can be granted to restrain the defendant's employment of such name to designate his own goods. Parsons v. Gillespie, 67 L. J. P.C. 21; [1895] A.C. 289—P.C.

Name of Locality — Natural Product.—Where goods are not manufactured, but are the natural product of a particular locality, the name of which necessarily forms part of any real description of the goods, the first user has no exclusive right to call his goods by the name of the place. Montgomery v. Thompson (60 L. J. Ch. 757; [1891] A.C. 217) distinguished. Grand Hotel Co. of Caledonia Springs, Lim. v. Wilson, 73 L. J. P.C. 1; [1904] A.C. 103; 89 L. T. 456; 52 W. R. 286; 20 T. L. R. 19—P.C.

The appellants were the owners of land on which there were natural springs, the water of which they sold for table and medicinal purposes. The respondents acquired adjacent land, from which by borings and pipes they obtained similar water:—Held, that the respondents were entitled to use the name of the place as part of the description of the water which they sold. Ib.

Name of Repute—Fraudulent Adoption—User—Absolute Injunction.—A name or surname adopted with the view of partially appropriating the general business reputation of another firm, though only in connection with a special class of goods not dealt in or likely to be dealt in by that firm, can never ripen by user and repute into a real name as against that firm quoad its actual business, and should the adopter after any length of time enter into a similar business likely to compete with that of the firm he may be absolutely restrained from the use of the name in connection therewith. Pinet et Cie. v. Maison Louis Pinet, 67 L. J. Ch. 41; [1898] 1 Ch. 179; 77 L. T. 613; 46 W. R. 506—North, J.

Unauthorized Use of—Holding out as Partner—Misrepresentation—Reasonable Probability of Risk and Liability.]—A dealer in cycles having advertised his goods in a manner which satisfied the Court that he intended the public to believe that the proprietors of the Times newspaper were either the vendors, for whom he acted as manager, or partners or in some way responsibly connected with the sale of "Times" cycles,—Held, on the authority of Routh v. Webster (10 Beav. 561), that as the plaintiffs, the proprietors of the Times, were exposed to some risk and liability by the unauthorized use of the name of their newspaper by the defendant, and that as there was a reasonable probability of the Times being exposed to litigation, and possibly being made responsible, had the plaintiffs not taken steps to disconnect the name of their newspaper from the advertisement and circulars issued by the defendant, an interim injunction ought to be granted restraining the defendant from in any way representing that the cycles offered by him for sale were in fact offered for sale by the plaintiffs, or that he was carrying on business as a department of the Times, or in any way holding out the Times to be the owners of or connected with his business. Principles on which injunctions are granted in cases of this nature discussed. Walter v. Ashton, 71 L. J. Ch. 839; [1902] 2 Ch. 232; 87 L. T. 196; 51 W. R. 131—Byrne, J.

Concurrent User—Discontinuance by One Party—Exclusive Right of Other Party.]—Where two firms have used the same trade name for similar goods concurrently for some time, but one firm has discontinued the user, and the name has come to be known in the trade as denoting goods made by the other, the firm which has discontinued the user will be restrained from resuming it. Daniel v. Whitehouse, 67 L. J. Ch. 262; [1898] 1 Ch. 685—Gorell Barnes, J.

Exclusive Right to Trade Mark—Colourable Imitation of Trade Mark—Firm Name.]—The firm of J. H. & Co., the sole partner of which was J. H., having been made bankrupt, the trustee sold the goodwill of the business, with the right to use the firm's name, to another firm. After his discharge, J. H., having intimated his intention of carrying on business again and using therein the firm name of J. H. & Co. and the trade marks, labels, &c., of that firm,—Held, that he must be restrained from using the firm name of J. H. & Co., or the trade marks or labels in any form of that firm. Melrose-Drover v. Heddle, 4 F. 1120—Ct. of Sess.

"Incorporated accountant"—Right to Use—Incorporated Society.]—The plaintiff society was incorporated in 1885 under the Companies Acts with the object of forming a body of accountants and enabling its members to acquire by means of examinations and other tests a certain status in the profession; and it recommended its members to adopt the professional designation of "incorporated accountant." By the time when the defendant society was established, in 1905, the term "incorporated accountant" had come to mean, in the minds of persons dealing with accountants, a member of the plaintiff society. The defendant society was established under the Companies Acts with an object similar to that of the plaintiff society.

It also recommended its members to use the professional designation of "incorporated accountant":—Held, that the title "incorporated accountant" was not a descriptive but a fancy term; and that the plaintiff society was entitled to an injunction to restrain a member of the defendant society from using the designation "incorporated accountant" in such a way as to lead to the belief that he was a member of the plaintiff society, and to restrain the defendant society from holding out that its members were entitled to use the designation in such a way as to represent that they were members of the plaintiff society. Society of Accountants in Edinburgh v. Corporation of Accountants (20 Ct. Sess. Cas. (4th Ser.), p. 750) followed. Accountants and Auditors Society v. Goodway, 76 L. J. Ch. 384; [1907] 1 Ch. 489; 96 L. T. 326; 23 T. L. R. 286—Warrington, J.

Limited Company—Corporate Name—Inadvertent Omission to Publish—Penalty—Right to Injunction.]—The inadvertent omission of a limited company, carrying on a business under a trade name, to publish at the same time its corporate name in compliance with the provisions of section 41 of the Companies Act, 1862, will not prejudice the company's right to have the use of its trade name protected by injunction, and it makes no difference whether the company itself created and established such trade name, or acquired it by purchase. The principle of Wright v. Horton (56 L. J. Ch. 873; 12 App. Cas. 371) applied. Pearks v. Thompson (18 Rep. Pat. Cas. 185; 17 Times L. R. 250) followed. Randall, Lim. v. British and American Shoe Co., 71 L. J. Ch. 683; [1902] 2 Ch. 354; 87 L. T. 442; 50 W. R. 697; 10 Manson, 109—Swinfen Eady, J.

2. SIMILARITY.

True Personal Name—Tendency to Deceive—Injunction.]—The plaintiffs were the proprietors and manufacturers of a preparation of meat juice, which for many years had been advertised and sold under a name whereof "Valentine" formed part. The defendant company was promoted by the defendant C. R. Valentine, who was appointed managing director, for the purpose of manufacturing and selling extract of meat in the shape of globules in a protecting cover, according to his patented invention. The globules were at first packed in boxes bearing labels describing them as "Valentine's Valtine Meat Globules," the word "Valtine" being a registered trade mark which was acquired by the defendant company, on its formation, from the defendant C. R. Valentine. Previously there was no preparation of meat juice or extract on the market connected with the name of "Valentine" other than that manufactured and sold by the plaintiffs. Accordingly they brought an action for an injunction to restrain the defendant company from carrying on business as manufacturers or vendors of any preparation of extract of meat or meat juice under any name or title of which the name "Valentine" or "Valentine's" formed part; and to restrain the defendant C. R. Valentine from carrying on any such business under any such name or title without clearly distinguishing that business from the business of the plaintiffs. Since the commencement of the action the description on the labels issued by the defendant company had been altered to "Valtine Meat Globules." The plaintiffs did not complain that the defendant company had got up their goods so as to resemble the plaintiffs', but only that they had made use of the name "Valentine" in such a way as to deceive the public into the belief that the goods sold by them were manufactured by the plaintiffs:—Held, that there was, in principle, no distinction between a case in which the name, of the use of which the complaint was made, was the name of the person who was carrying on the business and a case in which it was not; that in both cases the principle of Reddaway v. Banham ([1896] A.C. 199) applied; that the term "Valentine Extract" could not be used in connection with meat juice without representing the goods to be those of the plaintiffs; and that, therefore, they were entitled to the relief which they asked, and under the circumstances the injunction must extend to the use of the word "Valtine." Valentine Meat Juice Co. v. Valentine Extract Co., 83 L. T. 259—C.A.

Per COLLINS, L.J.—It is immaterial whether the deception arises from the use of a name which is, as it happens, the name of the defendant, or whether it arises from the use of any other description which in a sense may be accurate of that which he sells. For if the article which he sells has come to be known in the market as meaning something made by somebody other than himself, it is impossible for him to sell it simpliciter by that name, although it be his own, without misleading purchasers. Ib.

Two Firms of Same Surname—Name Identified with Manufacture of one—Right to Exclusive Use of—User without Qualifying Words—Tendency to Deceive.—Injunction granted restraining the defendants (who had acquired a distillery which had been carried on under the name first of William Jameson, then of Jameson & Robertson, and finally of William Jameson & Co.) from selling their whiskey under the name of "Jameson's Whiskey" without the prefix "William" or some other distinctive indication, such as they had previously employed, that the whiskey was not that manufactured by the plaintiffs, the Court being of opinion on the evidence that the name "Jameson's Whiskey" had become so identified with the plaintiffs' whiskey that the use of it by the defendants, without qualifying words, was likely to mislead purchasers into the belief that it was the plaintiffs' manufacture. Jameson v. Dublin Distillers' Co., [1900] 1 Ir. R. 43—V.C.

Same Name—Goods of Same Class—Misleading the Public.—A person cannot be absolutely restrained from carrying on business in his own name; he can only be restrained from carrying on business in his own name without taking reasonable precautions to prevent his business or goods being confounded with those of another person. Cash, Lim. v. Cash, 86 L. T. 211; 50 W. R. 289—C.A.

Imitation—Descriptive Name—Fanciful Name—Calculated to Mislead.—The plaintiffs, who were manufacturers of corsets in the United States, in May, 1900, adopted as a new distinctive designation for their corsets the term "Erect Form," and in March, 1901, introduced these corsets into the United Kingdom. These corsets were designated in the advertisements relating to them, upon the boxes in which they were sold, and generally, as "W. B. Erect Form Corsets," the words "Erect Form Corsets" being printed in special fancy type in the manner of a scroll. The letters "W. B." were the initials of the plaintiffs' firm, but having been warned that these initials had been for some time used by another firm, they abandoned them, and substituted the words "America's Leading," printed in ordinary type. About the month of October, 1901, when the plaintiffs had effected sales of their corsets to a substantial amount in the United Kingdom, and such corsets had acquired some reputation therein, the defendant company resolved to apply the title "Erect Form Corsets," together with the scroll, to goods of their own manufacture, and they proceeded to sell corsets of their own make, some being of a style imitated from those of the plaintiffs, but many others totally different, in boxes practically of the same size and shape, which had upon the lid the words "Erect Form Corsets," printed as a scroll, and placing the company's trade mark, the letters "C. B.," sometimes before and sometimes both before and after the scroll. The defendant company had previously advertised in the trade journals stating what they proposed to do:—Held (ROMER, L.J. dissenting), that the plaintiffs were not entitled to any relief, what the defendants had done not being intended to deceive, nor calculated so to do. Weingarten v. Bayer, 89 L. T. 56—C.A.

Company—Similarity of Names—Injunction.]

—A company or trading concern is not entitled to adopt a name which incorporates the whole of the name of a pre-existing concern carrying on a like business. North Cheshire and Manchester Brewery Co. v. Manchester Brewery Co., 68 L. J. Ch. 74; [1899] A.C. 83; 79 L. T. 645—H.L. (E.). See s.c. in C.A., infra.

The Manchester Brewery Co., Lim., was carrying on business at Manchester, and the North Cheshire Brewery Co., Lim., was carrying on business at Macclesfield, but the districts served by the two companies to some extent overlapped. A new company was formed to take over the business of the North Cheshire Co., called the "North Cheshire and Manchester Brewery Co., Lim."—Held, that the name of the new company would suggest to any one who knew the two old companies that they had been amalgamated, and so nearly resembled the name of the plaintiff company as to be calculated to deceive; and an injunction should be granted to restrain the use of it. Manchester Brewery Co. v. North Cheshire and Manchester Brewery Co., 67 L. J. Ch. 351; [1898] 1 Ch. 539; 78 L. T. 537; 46 W. R. 515—C.A.

— "Calculated to deceive."—A company, which is registered under a name which represents a word in common use at the date of registration, and which represents an article of commerce, cannot claim a monopoly of that name so as to prevent another company taking the word as part of its name, unless it is obvious that persons will be in fact deceived as to the identity of the two companies. North Cheshire and Manchester Brewery Co. v. Manchester

Brewery Co. (68 L. J. Ch. 74; [1899] A.C. 83) distinguished. Aerators, Lim. v. Tollit, 71 L. J. Ch. 727; [1902] 2 Ch. 319; 86 L. T. 651; 50 W. R. 584; 10 Manson, 95—Farwell, J.

— Rival Company—Deception—Injunction.—

The principles applicable in the determination of the question whether the name of a company is likely to deceive, having regard to the existence or use of another name, are closely analogous to those applicable in cases of the passing off of goods, when the Court has to determine whether a trade name or description or a description of a particular class of goods is likely to deceive, though it is possible that for certain purposes the application of the principles may vary. In determining whether words forming part of the names of two companies, and descriptive of the goods in which both deal, have acquired in the mind of the public a secondary or subsidiary meaning as denoting the goods of one of the companies, no great inference can be founded on the fact that there has been a connotation of the goods as being the goods of that company while it had a monopoly at law or in fact. If a company incorporates into its name words descriptive of the article in which it deals, it cannot claim a monopoly of the use of them, and runs the risk of having the articles similarly described in the trade name of rival traders. It is because no such monopoly can be secured that a descriptive name may be registered. British Vacuum Cleaner Co. v. New Vacuum Cleaner Co., 76 L. J. Ch. 511; [1907] 2 Ch. 312; 97 L. T. 201; 14 Manson, 231; 23 T. L. R. 587—Parker, J.

The plaintiff company was incorporated in 1903 to acquire and work an invention, patented in 1901, for the cleaning of carpets and other articles by suction caused by the creation of a vacuum. The defendant company was incorporated in 1906 to work another and later invention for the same purpose, but differing in material particulars:—Held, on the evidence, that “vacuum cleaner” and “vacuum cleaning process” had not acquired a secondary or subsidiary meaning as denoting the machine or process used by the plaintiff company; that the name of the defendant company was not likely to deceive; and that the word “new” sufficiently distinguished the defendant company from the plaintiff company. Aerators, Lim. v. Tollit (71 L. J. Ch. 727; [1902] 2 Ch. 319) followed. Dictum of LORD DAVEY in Cellular Clothing Co. v. Mauston (68 L. J. P.C. 72; [1899] A.C. 326) applied. Ib.

— Individual Transfer of Name to Company—No Goodwill Transferred—Possible Confusion.—

A new company with a title of which a personal name forms part has not the natural right of an individual born with that name to trade under that name where there is a possibility of confusion with an old company. Fine Cotton Spinners and Doublers Association v. Harwood Cash & Co., Lim., 76 L. J. Ch. 670; [1907] 2 Ch. 184; 97 L. T. 45; 23 T. L. R. 537; 14 Manson, 235—Joyce, J.

An individual, not transferring a business and goodwill, cannot confer upon a company a title to use his name as against persons liable to be damaged thereby. Trussard v. Trussard (59 L. J. Ch. 631; 44 Ch. D. 678) followed. Ib.

— Carrying on Business under Misleading Name—Descriptive Word with Special Trade Meaning—Monopoly of Ordinary Word of the Language.—A company was formed and registered in 1902 as the Electromobile Company, Lim. It dealt in electrically propelled carriages. At its formation and subsequently the word “Electromobile” was part of the language used in this country, and meant motor cars driven by electricity. The motor cars of this company became known in the trade as “Electromobiles.” In April, 1907, a company was formed and registered as the British Electromobile Company, Lim. It proposed to carry on the same kind of business as that of the former company. There was no evidence beyond that mentioned above that if the latter company carried on business in its name people would be induced to believe that its business was the same as that of the former company:—Held, that, in the absence of such evidence, the latter company would not be restrained from carrying on business in its present name. Electromobile Co. v. British Electromobile Co., 97 L. T. 196; 23 T. L. R. 631—Warrington, J. Cp. cases, sub tit. TRADE.

— Similarity—Fraud—Form of Injunction—Order to Change Name of Company.—It appearing that the words “Panhard et Levassor,” or “Panhard,” in connection with the manufacture and sale of motors and motor-cars designated the goods of the plaintiffs, and that the individual defendants had subscribed the memorandum of association, and had caused the defendant company, in which they were the only shareholders and directors, to be registered with a view to annex the benefit of the trade and name of the plaintiff company, THE COURT granted the following injunctions—first, an injunction to restrain the defendants and their agents or servants from using the names of Panhard and Levassor, or either of them, or any title or description including those names, or either of them, or otherwise colourably resembling the names of the plaintiffs in connection with the manufacture, use or sale of, or other dealing in, motor-cars or parts thereof; secondly, an injunction to restrain the seven defendant signatories from allowing the defendant company to remain registered under its present title, or any such title or description as aforesaid. Panhard et Levassor (Société Anonyme Anciens Etablissements) v. Panhard Levassor Motor Co., Lim., 70 L. J. Ch. 738; [1901] 2 Ch. 513; 85 L. T. 20; 50 W. R. 74—Farwell, J.

3. SALE OF BUSINESS.

— Adoption of New Name—Use of Original Name by Another—Injunction.—Where the assets and goodwill of a company in liquidation have been sold to purchasers who register the concern so purchased under a fresh name, no injunction can be granted against the use of the original company's name by a person who does not represent himself as the successor of such company, and whose use of the name has been acquiesced in by the liquidator of the old company and the purchasers of his goodwill. Montreal Lithographing Co. v. Sabiston, 68 L. J. P.C. 121; [1899] A.C. 610; 81 L. T. 135—P.C.

Purchaser's Right to Retain Old Name.]—Prior to a date in 1901 the trade reputation of the plaintiffs was so connected with the words "The Goupil Gallery" that a rival trader might have been restrained from calling his premises "The Goupil Gallery." The defendant having on that date purchased from the plaintiffs the premises known as "The Goupil Gallery," but not the goodwill of the business, and having agreed with the plaintiffs that he was to be their sole agent for the sale of the plaintiffs' pictures for five years, and also to be at liberty to trade there in pictures on his own account,—Held, in the absence of stipulation respecting the use of the words "The Goupil Gallery," that in 1907 the trade reputation of the defendant was so connected with the words "The Goupil Gallery" that he could not be restrained from so calling his premises after his agency had ceased; and, on the principles applied in passing-off cases, that the plaintiffs were not at liberty to call new premises, used for the same trade purposes as the defendant's premises, "The Goupil Gallery." Boussod v. Marchant, 97 L. T. 301; 23 T. L. R. 681.—Parker, J.

Goodwill and Exclusive Right to Use of Name.]—The defendant, who claimed to have been descended from an ancestor of the name of Pomeroy, and who carried on business under the name of Mrs. Pomeroy, assigned the business to a company with the goodwill and exclusive right to use the name of Mrs. Pomeroy as part of the name of the company, and to represent the company as carrying on the business in continuation of the firm of Mrs. Pomeroy:—Held, that the defendant must be restrained from carrying on a similar business under the name of Pomeroy or Mrs. Pomeroy or any other style of which the name Pomeroy formed part. Pomeroy v. Scale, 23 T. L. R. 170.—Parker, J.

TRADE SECRET.

Joint Owners of Trade Secret—Inspection—Secret Recipe.]—Where A and B, each claiming under assignments from C, had been held at the trial of an action between A and B to be joint owners of a secret remedy, and each entitled to make and sell the remedy, but the paper upon which the secret recipe was written had been destroyed,—Held, that A, to whom the recipe had never been communicated, was not entitled upon an application made under the liberty to apply given at the trial to demand from B either a copy or inspection of the secret recipe. Poisson v. Robertson, 86 L. T. 302; 50 W. R. 260—C.A.

Fraud—Appropriation of Testimonials Given to Rival.]—An interlocutory injunction refused to the inventor of a system of medical treatment (not protected by letters patent) against a rival inventor of a competing system who had appropriated the testimonials given to the former inventor, and by alterations in the text made them apparently applicable to the latter system, damage not being shewn, nor necessarily flowing from the act. Batty v. Hill (1 H. & M. 264) followed. Franks v. Weaver, (10 Beav. 297) distinguished. Tallerman v. Dowling Radiant Heat Co., 68 L. J. Ch. 618;

[1900] 1 Ch. 1; 48 W. R. 146—Stirling, J. See s.c. in C.A., 69 L. J. Ch. 46.

1. STATUTE.

6 Edw. 7 c. 47 is the Trade Unions Act, 1906.

2. REGISTRATION.

Registration under Companies Acts—Title to Sue.]—The Edinburgh and District Aerated-Water Manufacturers' Defence Association, Lim., was registered under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1890, for the object, as set forth in the memorandum of association, of protecting the bottles and boxes of members from being dealt with by persons not having lawful authority. By its articles and by-laws prohibitions were imposed on members with regard to the purchase and exchange of bottles, and to the employment of travellers formerly in the employment of other members, and provision was made for fines for breach of the rules or by-laws. The association, described as "incorporated under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1890," sued one of its members to recover a fine for breach of a rule:—Held, that the association was a trade union within the meaning of the Trade Union Act Amendment Act, 1876, that consequently its registration under the Companies Acts was void, and that as an unincorporated company it had no title to sue. Edinburgh and District Aerated-Water Manufacturers' Defence Association v. Jenkinson, 5 F. 1159—Ct. of Sess.

3. ILLEGALITY.

Action by Member—Rules—Restraint of Trade—Illegal Society.]—Under the rules of the Amalgamated Society of Tailors it was provided by rule xxxiv., "Trade Regulations," that during slack seasons a fair equitable division of trade shall be compulsory in all shops. That a fair equitable division of trade shall be understood to mean that each man shall get trade to the same value as his fellow-man, or as near it as possible. In no shop shall the dual system of piece work and day wage be allowed to exist. No member of this society shall in future be allowed to leave a workshop for the purpose of working outdoors or at home, except by the express permission of his branch committee, such permission only to be granted in case of physical inability to remain in the workshop, and to be in all cases indorsed by a general meeting of the members of the branch. Any member breaking the rules and allowing himself to run out of society and still work for a society shop, the branch shall have full power to deal with the matter as they deem best, subject to rules xxxii. and xxxiii. That a working week shall not exceed fifty-four hours, each district or town to regulate its own time of starting in the morning and leaving off in the evening, and that no overtime be worked except in cases of necessity. Time lost on one day cannot be made up on the following or any subsequent day. Members infringing this rule shall be dealt with as the branch directs, subject to rules xxxii. and xxxiii. By rule xxxii., if a member acted contrary to the interests of the society or its rules, he was to be fined or expelled:—Held, that the society was an illegal one, and that an action would not lie against it at the suit of one of its members. Cullen v. Elwin, 88 L. T. 686—D.

4. FUNDS.

Diversion of—Injunction to Restrain—Funds to Unauthorised Purposes—Action by Individual Member—Competency of Action.—An action by a member of a trade union to restrain the union from dealing with its funds in a manner contrary to its rules is not an action “instituted with the object of directly enforcing . . . an agreement for the application of the funds . . . (a) to provide benefits to members, or (b) to furnish contributions,” within the meaning of the Trade Union Act, 1871, s. 4, sub-s. 3. Observations upon Rigby v. Connol (49 L. J. Ch. 328; 14 Ch. D. 482). Yorkshire Miners' Association v. Howden, 74 L. J. K.B. 511; [1905] A.C. 256; 92 L. T. 701; 53 W. R. 667; 21 T. L. R. 431—H.L. (E.)

Unlawful Objects—Directly Enforcing Agreement—Infliction of Fine on Members—Jurisdiction of Court.—Where the executive committee of a registered trade union have passed a resolution inflicting fines upon members who have acted in a manner prejudicial to the welfare of the society by working in the same shop with a non-member, the society will not be restrained at the instance of the members on whom such fines have been stated to have been imposed from levying them, even on the assumption that the rules gave no direct power of fining. To prohibit the defendants from levying such fines at the instance of parties who still wish to retain the benefit of membership of the society with its attendant advantages would be entertaining legal proceedings instituted with a view to directly enforcing an agreement within section 4 of the Trade Union Act, 1871. Rigby v. Connol (49 L. J. Ch. 328; 14 Ch. D. 482) and Chamberlain's Wharf v. Smith (69 L. J. Ch. 783; [1900] 2 Ch. 605) followed. Howden v. Yorkshire Miners' Association (72 L. J. K.B. 176; [1903] 1 K.B. 309) (overruled: see preceding case) distinguished. Mullett v. United French Polishers' Society, 91 L. T. 133; 20 T. L. R. 595—Kekewich, J.

Application of Funds to provide Benefits to Members—Principal Object of Society—Division. II.

bility of Objects—Rules in Restraint of Trade—Illegal Society—Action by Member to Enforce Benefit Rules.—A society registered under the Trade Union Acts was governed by rules, some of which made provision for benefits to members, and the others were illegal as being in restraint of trade. A member brought an action against the officers of the society to enforce a rule of the society under which he claimed to be entitled to a superannuation allowance:—Held, upon the consideration of all the rules of the society, that the main object of the society was illegal at common law as being in restraint of trade, and that those rules which made provision for benefits to members were merely ancillary to that main object, and could not be separated from it. Held, therefore, that under section 4 of the Trade Union Act, 1871, the action must fail. Cullen v. Elwin, 90 L. T. 840; 20 T. L. R. 490—C.A.

Levy of Funds to Maintain Representative in Parliament—Ultra Vires—Irregularity of Levy—Internal Management of Union—Jurisdiction of Court.—The defendants, a trade union, of which the plaintiff was a member, provided by their rules that funds might be raised by entrance fees, contributions, levies, donations, and fines for, among other objects therein set out, paying the expenses of returning and maintaining representatives to Parliament and other public bodies. No rule provided how or by whom such levy was to be made. A majority of the members and all the governing bodies of the union agreed to make a levy, and a levy was made, paid by the plaintiff, and applied to the above purpose. The plaintiff sought an injunction to restrain the defendants from misapplying the funds of the union by such application, and also from continuing to make the said levy:—Held, that section 16 of the Trade Union Act Amendment Act, 1876, does not exhaustively define the powers and objects of trade unions, and that if the above purpose was not within that section it was not consequently ultra vires:—Held (by DARLING, J.), that it was within section 16. Steele v. South Wales Miners' Federation, 76 L. J. K.B. 333; [1907] 1 K.B. 361; 96 L. T. 260; 23 T. L. R. 228—D.

Held, also, that the fact that no machinery for making the above levy was provided by the rules did not entitle the Court to interfere in the internal management of the federation, the above object being lawful, and the levy being made with the consent of the members and governing bodies without fraud or oppression. Ib.

Person “wilfully withholding” Property of Trade Union—Summary Remedy for Recovery of Same.—The summary remedy by complaint before Justices given by section 12 of the Trade Union Act, 1871, against an officer or member of a trade union who “wilfully withholds” any money or other effects of the trade union, is limited to cases in which there has been some fraud or dishonesty by such officer or member.

5. ALTERATION OF RULES.

Sick Benefit — Member becoming Insane — Alteration of Rule during Insanity to Prejudice of Lunatic—Society not Liable.—Where, in accordance with a rule in that behalf, a rule of a trade union is altered during the insanity of a member who joined the society while of sound mind, the alteration of the rule is valid as against that member, although he is prejudiced thereby. Burke v. Amalgamated Society of Dyers, 75 L. J. K.B. 533; [1906] 2 K.B. 583—D.

Jurisdiction to Entertain Action against Trade Union for Benefits—Rules for Benefit of Members as well as in Restraint of Trade.—Quære, whether an action will lie against a trade union to enforce payment of benefit to members. Swaine v. Wilson (59 L. J. Q.B. 76; 24 Q.B. D. 252) discussed. Id.

6. EXPULSION OF MEMBER.

Tea Clearing-House — Benefit — Injunction — Right to Sue—Jurisdiction.—The Tea Clearing-house Association, which by its rules imposes restrictive conditions on the conduct of the trade or business of its members, is a trade union within the Trade Union Amendment Act, 1876, s. 16, and therefore by the Trade Union Act, 1871, s. 4, no action lies by a member to restrain the committee from expelling him from the association, and no interlocutory injunction for that purpose ought to be granted. Rigby v. Connol (49 L. J. Ch. 328; 14 Ch. D. 482) approved and followed. Chamberlain's Wharf, Lim. v. Smith, 69 L. J. Ch. 783; [1900] 2 Ch. 605; 83 L. T. 238; 49 W. R. 91—C.A.

7. INDUCING BREACH OF CONTRACT.

Strike — Principal and Agent — Powers of Branch Officials—Excess of Authority in Branches — Ratification.—Officials of an association are not agents thereof in respect of acts which in the rules are expressly excluded from their powers, and the association cannot be made liable to damages for such acts. Denaby and Cadeby Main Collieries v. Yorkshire Miners' Association, 75 L. J. K.B. 961; [1906] A.C. 334; 95 L. T. 561; 22 T. L. R. 543—H.L. (E.)

Branch officials of the respondent association induced men to break their contracts with the appellants and go out on strike. The terms upon which branches of the association were authorised to strike were defined in the rules, and had not been observed, and the governing body of the association expressed disapproval of the strike:—Held, that the officials were not agents of the association in procuring the breach of contract, and that the association was not liable for such breach. Id.

Held also, that the association was not liable to the appellants for payments made in aid of the strikers, although such payments were unlawful by the rules, and constituted a breach of trust as between the association and its members. Id. And see CONTRACT, col. 537; and MALICIOUS PROCEEDING, col. 1445.

Order on Officer to Pay Money—Committal.—See JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

8. PICKETING.

Watching or Besetting — Picketing.—The defendants stationed pickets to watch the plaintiffs' printing works for the purpose of inducing the workmen employed by the plaintiffs to join the union, and then to determine their employment by proper notices, the object being to compel the plaintiffs to become employers of union men and to abstain from employing non-union men. There was no evidence that the pickets invited the men to break their contracts. This was carried out without causing by violence, obstruction, or otherwise a common law nuisance:—Held, that this was not an offence within section 7, sub-section 4 of the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875, and an action would not lie in respect thereof. Per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., and FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J.—The object of section 7 is to give, in respect of certain specified classes of acts, for which there was previously a civil remedy, a criminal remedy by summary proceedings before Justices. Ward, Lock & Co. v. Operative Printers' Assistants Society, 22 T. L. R. 327—C.A.

— Maliciously Inducing Persons not to Enter into Contracts.—Although it is not illegal for the officers of a trade union to prevent a sub-manufacturer from working for a manufacturer by withdrawing the sub-manufacturer's workmen from his employ, it is illegal for such officers to watch or beset the sub-manufacturer's premises for the purpose of persuading or otherwise preventing him from so working, or for any purpose except merely to obtain or communicate information. Allen v. Flood (67 L. J. Q.B. 119; [1898] A.C. 1) considered and applied. Lyons v. Wilkins, 67 L. J. Ch. 383; 78 L. T. 618; 46 W. R. 461—Byrne, J.

Trade Union Sued as a Society—Application of Society's Funds towards Furtherance of Illegal Objects—Injunction.—Where an injunction is sought to prevent such a wrong, the trade union society in its capacity as a registered society is not properly made a defendant. The Court refused to grant an injunction against the trustees of such a society restraining them from applying the society's funds for such illegal purposes. Id. And see CRIMINAL LAW, cols. 626-628; MALICIOUS PROCEEDING, col. 1445.

9. LIBEL.

Liability of Trustees of Union for—Newspaper Carried on in Interest of Members—Right of Indemnity—Action brought against Trustees so as to bind Funds of Union.—The trustees of a trade union, appointed as provided by the Trade Union Act, 1871, are entitled to be indemnified out of the funds of the union in respect of a liability incurred by them by reason of a libel contained in a newspaper, of which as such trustees they are registered proprietors and which is carried on in the interests of the members of the trade union. Therefore, in an action brought against them for a libel contained in the newspaper, the trustees can be sued in their capacity of trustees so as to bind the funds of the trade union. Linaker v. Pilcher, 70 L. J. K.B. 396; 84 L. T. 421; 49 W. R. 413—Mathew, J.

10. PREVENTING WORKMAN OBTAINING EMPLOYMENT.

Liability of Union for Acts of Officers—Conspiracy.—Two or more persons, who have special power by virtue of their position (for example, as officers of a trade union) to carry out their design, commit an actionable wrong, and will be liable in damages, if they combine to prevent and in fact prevent a workman from obtaining employment in his trade or calling because they wish to compel him to pay a debt lawfully due from him. Giblan v. National Amalgamated Labourers' Union, 72 L. J. K.B. 907; [1903] 2 K.B. 600; 89 L. T. 886—C.A.

If the persons so acting are servants or agents of a trade union and commit the acts complained of in the service of the trade union, which is a creditor of the workman and approves of and takes the benefit of their acts, the trade union itself will also be liable in damages to the injured workman for the acts of its servants. Ib.

Per ROMER, L.J.—It is not essential to the plaintiff in order to succeed that he should establish that there was a combination of two or more persons to do the acts complained of. A single person wrongfully preventing a man from obtaining or holding employment will be liable for the damage suffered. Ib.

11. ACTION AGAINST.

A trade union registered under the Trade Union Act, 1871, may be sued in its registered name. Taff Vale Railway v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, 70 L. J. K.B. 905; [1901] A.C. 426; 85 L. T. 147; 50 W. R. 44; 65 J. P. 596—H.L. (E.) But see now the Trade Unions Act, 1906 (6 Edw. 7, c. 46).

12. DISSOLUTION.

Distribution of Fund Accumulated from Subscriptions—Resulting Trust.—Where a trade union, the rules of which provide for the payment of strike or lock-out pay to continuing members, but contain no provision for the distribution of the funds accumulated from the subscriptions of members, is dissolved, the funds so accumulated are to be distributed amongst those who were members at the date of dissolution in the proportion in which they have subscribed thereto. Printers and Transferrers Society, In re; Challinor v. Maskery, 68 L. J. Ch. 537; [1899] 2 Ch. 134; 47 W. R. 619—Byrne, J.

Deductions for Fines, Forfeitures, or Payments.—With a view to save expense, trouble, and delay, an account of the sums due from or received by sharing members, on account of fines, forfeitures, or strike or lock-out pay, was not directed. Ib.

1. CONSTRUCTION.

Breaking-up Streets—Electricity—Connecting Tramway with Generating Station by Cables—Generating Station not Property of Tramway Company and Situate Outside District of Local Authority.—By section 27 of the London United Tramways Act, 1901, "the company may execute all such works on or in connection with the tramways and in over or under the streets roads or bridges in or over which the same are laid as may be necessary or expedient for working the tramways by mechanical power as aforesaid and may lay down construct erect and maintain on in under or over the surface or bed of any street road footway bridge river or place and may with the consent in writing of the owner and occupier of any house or building attach to such house or building such posts conductors wires tubes mains plates cables boxes and apparatus and may make and maintain such openings and ways in on or under any such surface or bed as may be necessary or convenient either for the working of the tramways or for connecting any portions of the tramways or for providing access to or forming connections with any generating station or other stations engines machinery or apparatus . . .":—Held, that the second part of the section was in general terms, and that it authorised the company where "necessary and convenient" to break up streets in an intervening district for the purpose of laying cables to connect their tram system with an electric generating station situate outside the district in which the company were authorised to lay tramways, and to do so notwithstanding that the generating station was not their property but belonged to an independent company. *Wandsworth Borough v. — Footpaths.—By a provisional order, duly confirmed, a tramway company was empowered to "maintain on any street or road in which any of the tramways may be laid such posts and overhead electric wires as may be necessary and proper for working such tramway by electrical power":—Held, that this did not empower the company to break up the footpaths in the streets and lay thereunder electric feeders for the purpose of their tramways. Hyde Corporation v. Oldham, Ashton, and Hyde Electric Tramway, 64 J. P. 596—C.A.

"Works" — "Substantially commenced" — Evidence of Non-commencement.—Section 18 of the Tramways Act, 1870, provides that if within one year from the date of any provisional order under the Act to make a tramway "the works are not substantially commenced . . . the powers given by the Provisional Order to the promoters for constructing such tramway, executing such works, or otherwise in relation thereto, shall cease to be exercised, except as to so much of the same as is then completed, unless the time be prolonged by the special direction of the Board of Trade. . . A notice purporting to be published by the Board of Trade in the London . . . Gazette to the effect that . . . the works have not been substantially commenced . . . shall be conclusive evidence for the purposes of this section of such . . . non-commencement . . .":—Held, first, that the notice of the Board of Trade was not the exclusive or only evidence of the non-commencement of the works which the Court could receive. Dudley and Kingswinford Tramways Co., In re (63 L. J. Ch. 108), disapproved. Att.-Gen. v. Bournemouth Corporation, 71 L. J. Ch. 730; [1902] 2 Ch. 714; 87 L. T. 252; 51 W. R. 129—C.A.

Held, secondly, that "the works" in this connection meant physical works, and did not include steps taken towards the carrying out of the undertaking; and consequently, where the promoters had within the year purchased land for a generating station, but had commenced no work upon it, and had entered into contracts for the supply of dynamos and electric plant and cars for the purpose of the tramway, but nothing was done under the contracts within the year, the works had not been "substantially commenced" within the year within the meaning of section 18. Ib.

Buildings, &c., Suitable to and Used for Purpose of Undertaking.—A local authority which had served notice under section 43 of the Tramways Act, 1870, requiring the tramway company to sell the tramway lines within the area of the local authority were held bound to purchase a certain dépôt within the area, as being suitable to and used for the purpose of the undertaking within the meaning of section 43, although in certain previous proceedings the particular dépôt had been held to be suitable for the purposes of the undertaking in other areas. Manchester Carriage and Tramways Co. v. Ashton-under-Lyne Corporation, 68 J. P. 576—Bigham, J.

Valuation of Undertaking—Costs of Obtaining Parliamentary Powers—Costs of Opposing Bills.—In valuing a tramway undertaking, the sale of which is required by a local authority under section 43 of the Tramways Act, 1870, regard must be had to the Parliamentary costs and expenses incurred by the company in obtaining the right to construct and work the undertaking, but costs incurred by the company in opposing in Parliament applications for powers by rival companies cannot be taken into account in determining the value of the undertaking. Ib.

Alteration of Position of Pipes and Wires.—Section 30 of the Tramways Act, 1870, which empowers the promoters of a tramway undertaking to which the section applies, for the purpose of making, forming, laying down, maintaining, repairing, or renewing a tramway, where it is necessary, or appears expedient for the purpose of preventing frequent interruption of the traffic by repairs or works in connection with the same, to alter the position of gas mains, telegraphic wires, &c., is not confined to cases where the object of the alteration is to prevent interruption of traffic, but applies where the alteration is necessary to allow of the construction, &c., of the tramway. The powers of the section are not confined to alterations of pipes and apparatus in the road in which the tramway is authorised to be laid, nor to pipes, &c., within the promoters' limits of deviation; and the section by implication gives the promoters the power of entering on private land necessary to enable them to carry out the alterations it authorises. Semble (per BUCKLEY, L.J.), that overhead wires crossing a road, and supported by posts not standing in the road, are wires laid in the road within the meaning of subsection 1 of the section. Rhondda Urban Council and Taff Vale Railway, In re (No. 2), 97 L. T. 892; 72 J. P. 44; 6 L. G. R. 131—C.A.

Quere, whether in case of dispute between the promoters and the owners of the apparatus proposed to be altered under the section, the arbitrator to whom the dispute is referred under the section has power to award that the work shall be carried out by such owners at the expense of the promoters. Ib.

Reconstruction of Bridge—Adaptation for Use by Electric Tramway.—The plaintiffs sought to restrain the defendants from interfering with the structure of a bridge over the Regent's Canal:—Held, that the defendants had power under section 6 of the London County Tramways (Electrical Power) Act, 1900, to reconstruct the bridge as part of the work necessary to adapt the road passing over the bridge for use by tramways propelled by electricity, and that any question arising between the plaintiffs and the defendants must be determined by arbitration under section 33 of the Tramways Act, 1870. Regent's Canal Co. v. London County Council, 71 J. P. 201; 5 L. G. R. 956—Swinfen Eady, J.

Power to Obstruct Highway during Construction.—See WAY.

2. MAINTENANCE AND REPAIR.

Liability of Company to Keep Roadway in Proper Condition.—Under section 28 of the Tramways Act, 1870, a tramway company are bound not only to maintain and repair the part of the road for which they are responsible, but also to keep it in a proper condition for traffic. Where an accident occurred in consequence of a tramway company having neglected to sand the road in slippery weather,—Held, that they were liable for the consequent damages. Dublin United Tramways Co. v. Fitzgerald, 72 L. J. P.C. 52; [1903] A. C. 99; 87 L. T. 532; 51 W. R. 321; 1 L. G. R. 386; 67 J. P. 229—H.L. (Ir.)

Contract—Obligations of City and Company under Contract.]—Under a contract between appellants and the respondents the latter were bound “under instructions from the city” to “keep their track free from ice and snow”.—Held, that the company was not bound “also to remove or cause to be removed from the streets and convey elsewhere the snow which is so cleared from its tracks.” Ogston v. Aberdeen District Tramways (66 L. J. P.C. 1; [1897] A.C. 111) distinguished. Montreal City v. Montreal Street Railway, 72 L. J. P.C. 119; [1903] A.C. 482; 89 L. T. 30—P.C.

The appellants also granted to the company “all licenses rights and privileges necessary for the proper and efficient use by electric power to operate cars . . . in the manner successfully in use elsewhere”.—Held, that the city was not at liberty to prohibit the company from using electric sweepers which had been found successful in other cities. Ib.

— Transfer of Liability for Non-repair.]—Where a tramway company enters into a contract with the local authority under the Tramways Act, 1870, whereby the road authority undertakes the repair of the portion of the road upon which the tramway is laid, the liability of the tramway company under section 28 of the Act for damage caused by the non-repair of that part of the road is transferred to the road authority. Barnett v. Poplar Borough, 70 L. J. K.B. 698; [1901] 2 K.B. 319; 84 L. T. 845; 49 W. R. 574—D.

“Junction” between Pavement Maintained by Tramway Company and Surface Maintained by Local Authority.]—Section 57 of the Norwich Electric Tramways Act, 1897, providing that if the tramway company, by that Act authorised to carry on a tramway undertaking in the city of Norwich, fail to maintain, inter alia, “(5) the junction of the paving laid and maintained by the company with the surface laid and maintained by the corporation,” the corporation may, after notice, execute the necessary work and recover the expense from the company, does not merely provide machinery for enforcing obligations imposed on the company aliunde, but, at any rate, as regards the “junction” referred to in sub-section 5, imposes an additional obligation on the company. Norwich Corporation and Norwich Electric Tramway Co., In re, 97 L. T. 911; 72 J. P. 50; 6 L. G. R. 101—Bray, J.

The obligation of the company as regards such “junction” under section 57 extends to remedying the inconvenience to traffic due, in streets where the portion of the roadway maintained by the company is laid with granite setts and the rest of the roadway is paved with macadam, to the formation of a ridge in consequence of the circumstance that the macadam wears down faster than the setts, whether such

— By the Norwich Electric Tramways Act, 1897, the defendant company were to maintain and keep in good condition “the junction of the paving laid and maintained by the company with the surface laid and maintained by the corporation”.—Held, that the word “junction” could not only mean the mere point or place where the two surfaces met, but that the defendant company had to maintain the even contour of the road at the junction of the two surfaces. Norwich Corporation v. Norwich Electric Tramways Co., 91 L. T. 558—Phillimore, J.

Private Act—Incorporation of General Act—Reference of Matter in Dispute—Ouster of Jurisdiction.]—The Norwich Electric Tramways Act, 1897, provided by section 57, sub-section 5, that “if the company fail to maintain and keep in good condition to the satisfaction of the corporation . . . (5) the junction of the paving laid and maintained by the company with the surface laid and maintained by the corporation, the corporation may if they think fit themselves at any time after seven days’ notice to the company do the work necessary for the repair and maintenance of the road and the expense reasonably incurred by the corporation in so doing shall be repaid to them by the company with the addition of five per centum on such expense.” The Tramways Act, 1870, provided by section 22 for the incorporation of Parts II. and III. of that Act with any Provisional Order or Act of Parliament authorising a tramway, and by section 33 that any difference between the promoters and any local authority or road authority with respect to, inter alia, the propriety of or mode of execution of any work relating to any tramway, or the question whether any work is such as ought reasonably to satisfy the said authority, should (unless otherwise provided by that Act) be settled by an engineer or other fit person nominated as referee by the Board of Trade. The company having failed to maintain and keep in good condition to the satisfaction of the Norwich Corporation the junction of the paving laid and maintained by the company with the surface laid and maintained by the corporation, the latter brought an action against the company claiming 53*l.* 13*s.* 10*d.* in respect of expenses incurred in the repair and maintenance of certain roads, and for a declaration of their rights under sub-section 5 of section 57 of the Norwich Electric Tramways Act, 1897:—Held, that the action must be dismissed, inasmuch as the jurisdiction of the Court was ousted by section 33 of the Tramways Act, 1870, and that the objection to the jurisdiction was not taken too late in the Court of Appeal though not pleaded or taken in the Court of first instance. Norwich Corporation v. Norwich Electric Tramways Co., 75 L. J. K.B. 636; [1906] 2 K.B. 119; 95 L. T. 12; 54 W. R. 572; 70 J. P. 401; 4 L. G. R. 1114; 22 T. L. R. 553—C.A.

3. BY-LAWS.

Delivery of Tickets to Inspector—Passenger’s Refusal.]—The appellant, a passenger, in a tramway-car run by a local authority under statutory powers, paid his fare, but declined to accept a ticket upon the ground that it bore an indorsement purporting to limit the liability of the local authority in cases of accident or injury to passengers, and allowed it to fall on the floor of the car; and when the ticket inspector asked him for it, pointed it out, but refused to touch it or pick it up, or to pay his fare a second time:—Held, that the appellant could not be convicted under a by-law of the local authority requiring each passenger to deliver up his ticket when requested, or in case of failure to produce the ticket to pay the fare for the distance travelled by him. Wilson v. Fearnley, 92 L. T. 647; 3 L. G. R. 470; 69 J. P. 165—D.

— Inadvertent Loss of Ticket by Passenger.]

—A passenger on a tramcar who had paid his fare, but lost the ticket given him in exchange, was, in the course of the journey, called upon by a ticket inspector to produce his ticket, pay his fare, or leave the car, but not, in so many words, to “deliver up his ticket or pay his fare”:—Held, that by his refusal to comply with the inspector's request the passenger had infringed a by-law of the tramway company providing that “each passenger shall show his ticket (if any) when required to do so to the conductor, or any duly authorised servant of the company, and shall also, when required to do so, either deliver up his ticket or pay the fare legally demandable for the distance travelled over by such passenger.” Hunt v. Green, 96 L. T. 23; 5 L. G. R. 67; 71 J. P. 18; 23 T. L. R. 19; 21 Cox C.C. 333—D.

4. PASSENGERS.

Right of Passenger to Perform Journey on Successive Cars—Determination of Contract.]

The respondent, who was a passenger on a tramcar, paid for and obtained a ticket which entitled him to travel to a certain destination. He alighted at a stopping place short of that destination, and, having walked some distance, boarded another tramcar travelling to the same place to which he would have been entitled to go under the original ticket. The conductor demanded from him the legal fare for the journey, but the respondent refused to pay it, contending that, having already paid for and obtained a ticket, he was entitled to complete the journey by another tramcar:—Held, that the respondent had, by alighting from the first tramcar and allowing it to proceed, determined the contract of carriage, and that he was not entitled to travel on the second tramcar without paying the legal fare. Bastable v. Metcalfe, 75 L. J. K.B. 670; [1906] 2 K.B. 288; 70 J. P. 843; 4 L. G. R. 1073—D.

5. ADVERTISEMENTS.

Rents Payable in Respect of each “regular running” Car—Cars withdrawn for Re-painting or Repairing.]—By an agreement between advertising contractors and the Corporation of S. it was provided that the corporation should permit the contractors to have during a term of five years the exclusive privilege and right of fixing advertisements upon all the electric tramcars, trailer cars, and omnibuses then belonging to the corporation. The contractors were to pay to the corporation specified annual rents for each and every regular running electric tramcar, trailer car, and omnibus, such rents to be payable in advance quarterly upon the usual quarter days. The corporation reserved the right to discontinue the use of any of the cars and omnibuses then running and to substitute new ones; and the contractors were at their own expense to remove all advertisements from any vehicles which the corporation might direct to be re-painted or repaired, and to reinstate such advertisements after the completion of such re-painting or repairing, and the contractors were not to be entitled to any compensation in respect thereof. The rents were paid during the whole period of the five years. The contractors contended that they were not liable to pay rent in respect of a vehicle while it was not running, and brought an action against the corporation for an account of the number of regular running vehicles from time to time and of the moneys paid by the plaintiffs to the defendants:—Held, that “regular running” cars meant cars which at the beginning of the year were such in the sense that they were part of the regular effective rolling stock of the undertaking to be used during the year, and that a car was not the less a “regular running car” because it was sometimes withdrawn for the purpose of being re-painted or repaired. Griffiths & Millington v. Southampton Corporation, 4 L. G. R. 316; 70 J. P. 179; 22 T. L. R. 301—Buckley, J.

6. OBSTRUCTION OF TRAFFIC.

Single Tram-line—No Room for Vehicle to Pass on Near Side—Wilful Obstruction.]

Semble, In the case of a single tram-line which in parts of its route passes so near the kerb that there is no room for an ordinary vehicle to pass on its proper side, the drivers of both ordinary vehicles and tram-cars must act reasonably—drivers of ordinary vehicles, on the one hand, having no absolute right to insist upon keeping to their proper side at that particular part of the line, and thus put all tram-cars to great inconvenience; and tram-car drivers, on the other hand, having no absolute right to insist upon all other vehicles getting out of their way at whatever inconvenience. Hartley v. Chadwick, 63 J. P. 512—D.

7. RIGHTS OF OTHER COMPANIES.

Gas Company—Notice of Intention to Lay Tramways—Counter-notice to Alter Gas Mains—Time for Delivering Counter-notice—Arbitration.]

—Where a tramway company whose special Act incorporated the Tramways Act, 1870, have given seven days' notice under section 30 of the latter Act to a gas company of their intention to lay down their tramways in certain streets in which the gas company's mains are situated, and have also delivered a plan and section of the proposed work, the gas company are not bound to give, within seven days from the date of service of such notice upon them, their counter-notice under the same section (requiring the tramway company to alter the position of the gas mains) in order to entitle themselves to proceed to arbitration in respect of any difference between the two companies as to the necessity for the alteration. Hastings Tramways Co. v. Hastings and St. Leonards Gas Co., 76 L. J. Ch. 60; [1906] 2 Ch. 578; 95 L. T. 684; 70 J. P. 540; 5 L. G. R. 142; 23 T. L. R. 4—C.A.

Although section 30 does not expressly fix the time for giving the counter-notice, it does impose a certain limit of time by reason of the reference to the construction of the tramway "as proposed," and therefore the time for giving the notice is at an end as soon as the proposal has ripened into execution, but not before. Ib.

— Interference with Gas Mains and Service Pipes—Jurisdiction of Arbitrator.—An arbitrator appointed to determine a difference arising under section 30 of the Tramways Act, 1870, has jurisdiction to order gas mains already laid down to be lowered, so that any new service pipes might be carried horizontally underneath the concrete bed of the tramway; and he further can order such gas mains to be moved laterally to such a distance as to enable access to be obtained to them without interference with the concrete bed. Ilford Gas Co. and Ilford Urban Council, In re, 88 L. T. 236; 67 J. P. 239; 1 L. G. R. 213—D.

Telephone Company—Power to Take up Streets—Licence of Postmaster-General—Consent of Tramway Company.—The Postmaster-General and his licensees have power to lay telegraph or telephone wires in that part of a public street or road which a tramway company is liable to repair, without obtaining the consent of the tramway company, under section 13 of the Telegraph Act, 1863. Bristol Tramways and Carriage Co. v. National Telephone Co., 68 L. J. Ch. 566; [1899] 2 Ch. 282; 80 L. T. 836; 63 J. P. 583—North, J.

8. PURCHASE OF UNDERTAKING.

Notice to Purchase—Right to Possession—Injunction.—A tramway had been worked by a tramway company as a horse tramway. The tramway within the city of M. belonged to the corporation, but had been leased to the company until November 30, 1902. The tramway outside the city belonged to the company. The local authority gave notice to purchase under section 43 of the Tramways Act, 1870, and the amount of the purchase-money was to be ascertained by arbitration. The arbitrator made his award in the form of a Special Case, awarding different amounts. If the local authority was compelled to purchase the whole plant and stock of the company a much larger amount was payable than if the local authority was only bound to take over a proportion of the stock and plant bearing the same proportion to the whole stock and plant of the company that the tramway without the city bore to the whole tramway the company formerly worked. The local authority claimed to be entitled to take possession of the line of the company before the purchase-money had been finally ascertained:—Held, that, even if there had been a concluded agreement, it was impossible to say that property contracted to be sold could be treated as sold without payment of the purchase-money, and that an injunction must be granted restraining the defendants from taking or retaining possession of the plaintiffs' property. Manchester Tramways Co. v. Manchester Corporation, 87 L. T. 678—Swinfen Eady, J.

Arbitration—Computation of Price—Value of Tramway—Cost of Widening Streets.—A tramway company, in pursuance of statutory powers had laid its tramway through certain narrow streets. The local authority, under section 43 of the Tramways Act, 1870, gave notice to the company requiring the company to sell their undertaking to the local authority at the then value of the tramway and its appurtenances. In the meantime, between the incorporation of the company and the notice given by the local authority, it had become the practice of Parliament, in granting statutory powers to undertakers to lay tramways in narrow streets, to impose upon them the condition that they should contribute towards the cost of widening narrow streets:—Held, that in assessing the value of the tramway and its appurtenances under that section, the amount which the company, if constructing its tramway at the date of the notice to purchase, would have been required to contribute towards the cost of widening streets was not to be taken into account. London, Deptford, and Greenwich Tramways Co. and London County Council, In re, 74 L. J. K.B. 143; [1905] 1 K.B. 316; 92 L. T. 124; 53 W. R. 411; 69 J. P. 98; 3 L. G. R. 103; 21 T. L. R. 177—Bray, J.

Purchase by Local Authority under Tramways Act, 1870, or Earlier Local Act—Basis of Valuation.—The S. Street Tramways were constructed in pursuance of their private Act in 1877 (40 & 41 Vict. c. cxxi.), and by that Act the provisions of section 43 of the Tramways Act, 1870, were incorporated. By the Southampton Corporation Tramways Act, 1897, the corporation were to purchase the undertaking of the company, and in case of dispute the price was to be settled by arbitration under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Act. And by section 2 of the same Act "the undertaking of the company means the undertaking, works, lands, easements, plant, fixed and movable stock-in-trade, buildings, equipment, rights, powers, privileges, and authorities of the company, including the right to demand and take and recover tolls, rents, and charges":—Held, that in determining the price to be paid under the Act of 1897 the umpire should treat the undertaking of the company as defined by that Act as an undertaking which the company only enjoyed subject to the contingency of being compelled to part therewith under the terms of section 43 of the Tramways Act, 1870, and not as an undertaking which the company enjoyed free from all obligation to part therewith otherwise than under the terms of the Act of 1897 itself. Southampton Tramways Co. and Southampton Corporation, In re, 80 L. T. 236—D. Affirmed, 63 J. P. 788; 81 L. T. 652—C.A.

— Tramways within District—Land and Works outside District.—On the true construction of section 43 of the Tramways Act, 1870, the local authority purchasing a tramway within a district must pay for lands, buildings, &c., which are suitable to and used for the purposes of the undertaking within the district, even though such lands, buildings, &c., be outside the district. Manchester Carriage and Tramways Co. v. Swinton and Pendlebury Urban Council, 75 L. J. K.B. 839; [1906] A.C. 277; 93 L. T. 821; 70 J. P. 81; 4 L. G. R. 214; 22 T. L. R. 154—F.L. (E.).

— Purchaser of Part—“Lands, buildings, works, materials, and plant suitable to and used” for Undertaking.]—By section 43 of the Tramways Act, 1870, a local authority is empowered under certain circumstances to purchase compulsorily the tramways within its district “upon terms of paying the then value . . . of the tramways and all lands, works, materials, and plant of the promoters suitable to and used by them for the purposes of their undertaking within such district.” Where part of the tramways within a local authority’s district already belonged to the authority, but were worked by the promoters of the rest of the tramways within the district jointly with such promoters’ part, on the local authority purchasing the promoters’ part it is bound under section 43 to take all the lands, works, materials, and plant used by the promoters for the joint working of the whole system as “lands, works, materials, and plant of the promoters suitable and used by them for the purposes of” the part of the tramways belonging to the promoters. Manchester Carriage and Tramways Co. and Manchester Corporation, In re, 87 L. T. 504; 67 J. P. 14—Bigham, J.

— Tramway on Private Land—Easement.]—A portion of a tramway belonging to a tramway company ran for some distance over private land and into the company’s car factory. The urban council having purchased the tramway company’s undertaking and “all lands, buildings, works, materials and plant of the company suitable to and used by them for the purposes of their undertaking within [the urban council’s] district,” a referee was appointed to fix the amount payable for such purposes. He found that the car factory was not suitable to and used by the company for the purposes of their undertaking within the district, but he gave a sum in respect of the portion of the permanent way of the tramway which was on private land:—Held, that the urban council must pay not merely for the materials of the tramway, but likewise for some easement over the private land; and as that apparently had been included in the amount awarded, the award would not be remitted back. North Metropolitan Tramways Co. v. Leyton Urban Council, 71 J. P. 536; 98 L. T. 136; 6 L. G. R. 1—D.

TRESPASS.

To Land—Possessor’s Right against Wrongdoer—Taking Goods—Jus Tertii.]—The appellants cut timber on land afterwards licensed to the respondent, and removed the timber after the actual grant of the licence to the respondent, their contention being that the logs having been cut before the commencement of the respondent’s title were not his property, but the property of the Crown:—Held, that the appellants were wrongdoers, and that the respondent’s possession was good as against them, and they were not entitled to set up a jus tertii against the respondent. The Winkfield (71 L. Laying Tramway without Requisite Consents—Damages.]—A company had statutory power to lay a second line of tramway on obtaining certain consents. Without obtaining such consent they laid the rails:—Held, that they were liable for a trespass, and that as damages they were liable in any event for the cost of restoring the road. *Bideford Urban Council v. Father and Son—Parental Obligations—Injunction.]—A son, aged thirty-five, strong in body, and by education capable of earning his living, insisted on visiting his father’s house and staying there contrary to his father’s wishes. The father was willing to maintain him elsewhere. In an action brought by the father against the son for an injunction restraining the son from entering or remaining, &c.,—Held, that a case for granting an injunction had not been made out; it was inadvisable to put it in the power of a father to get his son committed to prison for coming to visit him. TROVER.

Conversion — Non-negotiable Instrument — Estoppel—Negligence.]—Where a signed form of order for delivery of goods, in which the number of parcels to be delivered is left blank, has been entrusted by those entitled to them to a third person, who is at the same time authorised to fill it up by inserting a given number of parcels, warehouse keepers are justified in delivering the whole number of parcels appearing on the face of the order, and are not liable in trover, notwithstanding that such third person's authority was limited to a less number of parcels than the actual number he inserted, and that he had fraudulently exceeded his authority by inserting a greater number. Union Credit Bank v. Mersey Docks and Harbour Board, 68 L. J. Q.B. 842; [1899] 2 Q.B. 205; 81 L. T. 44—Bigham, J.

Secus where the signed form of order was duly filled up with a certain number of parcels to be delivered before it was entrusted to such person, and he, fraudulently taking advantage of a blank space in the form immediately above the signature of those who entrusted him, has inserted an additional number of parcels. Ib.

Where such third person to secure an advance from his bankers, who act in good faith, transfers the goods, the subject of his fraudulent insertion in the delivery order, into their names in the warehouse keepers' books, and, having subsequently paid off the advance, procures a delivery order from his bankers addressed to the warehouse keepers, by means of which he obtains actual possession of the goods and makes away with them, the constructive possession of the goods by the bankers during the period they are so pledged is not a conversion, nor does it render them liable to an action in trover. Young v. Grote (5 L. J. (o.s.) C.P. 165; 4 Bing. 253) considered. Ib.

Stolen Goods—In Possession of Police—Acquittal of Person Charged—Demand by True Owner—Delivery by Police to Other than True Owner.]—When a subordinate police officer having the possession of stolen goods, after a demand by the true owner for their delivery to him, delivers the same to a person other than the true owner, he is liable in trover, although he acted upon the orders of a superior officer. A bought a gig. It was stolen from him, and afterwards found by the police in the possession of B. B was indicted for larceny of the gig and acquitted. B on his acquittal wrote to the police officer in possession of the gig demanding delivery of it to him, and A afterwards by letter and personally applied for its delivery over to him. The police officer, acting on the instruction of his superior officer, after giving notice to A of his intention to do so, delivered the gig to B as the person from whom it had been taken by the police:—Held, that the police officer so delivering it was liable in trover to A, who was found to be the true owner of the gig. Hollins v. Fowler (L. R. 7 H.L. 757) and Stephens v. Elwall (4 M. & S. 259) followed. Winter v. Bancks, 84 L. T. 504; 49 W. R. 574; 65 J. P. 468; 19 Cox C.C. 687—D.

Pledge—Knowledge of Pawnor—Statute of Limitations—Action against Executor.]—In September, 1889, the plaintiff pledged a piano with the husband of the defendant. The same year he converted it to the knowledge of the plaintiff. In March, 1897, he died, and the plaintiff then tendered the money to the present defendant, his executrix and widow, and demanded the return of the piano:—Held, that the defendant could not be liable, and that, as she never had possession of or any property in the piano, no action of conversion would lie against her. Hinchcliffe v. Sharpe, 77 L. T. 714—D.

Letter—Publication of Letter by Stranger—Wrongful Act—Claim by Receiver of Letter for Damages for Conversion—Measure of.]—The defendant wrongfully communicated to another person a letter which had been written by a third person to the plaintiff and which had got into the defendant's possession, and the plaintiff brought an action to recover damages for the detention and conversion of the letter:—Held, that the plaintiff could recover substantial damages, and not merely the value of the thing converted. Thurston v. Charles, 21 T. L. R. 659—Walton, J.

Conditional Order for Payment of Money—Damages—Money Had and Received—Negligence.]—The owner of a conditional order in writing for the payment of money may recover the amount realised by its conversion as money had and received; and, semble, the measure of damages for its conversion may be the face value of the document. Bavins v. London and South-Western Bank, 69 L. J. Q.B. 164; [1900] 1 Q.B. 270; 81 L. T. 655; 48 W. R. 211; 5 Com. Cas. 1—C.A.

The plaintiffs were the owners of an order in writing for payment of 69l. 7s., provided that a receipt form at the foot thereof was duly signed. This receipt form was never duly signed. The order was stolen from the plaintiffs, and was negligently received by certain bankers for collection. The amount was collected by the bankers and credited to a customer in a running account:—Held, that the plaintiffs could recover from the bankers the 69l. 7s. as money had and received. Quere, whether, alternatively, as damages in trover. Ib.

Waiver of Tort—Election—Joint Tort-feasors—Compromise with One—Reservation of Rights against the Other.]—An agent wrongfully sold his principal's goods to a purchaser and paid the proceeds into his account at a bank. The principal issued one writ against the agent and the bank, claiming—first, against the agent damages for conversion, and alternatively a sum of 1,500l. standing to the agent's credit at the bank as money had and received, and an injunction to restrain him from dealing with that sum; and secondly, against the bank payment of the 1,500*l.* and an injunction to restrain the bank from parting with that sum. He then filed an affidavit stating his belief that the 1,500*l.* represented the proceeds of the sale of part of the goods, upon which he obtained an interim injunction restraining the agent and the bank from dealing or parting with the 1,500*l.* until the trial of the action. The purchaser of the goods bought them knowing that the agent was improperly dealing with them. The principal issued another writ against him for conversion, claiming 5,000*l.* damages. He then compromised the action against the agent and the bank, receiving part of the 1,500*l.* in full settlement of all claims against the agent, but reserving all rights against the purchaser:—Held, that the proceedings against the agent and the bank did not constitute a conclusive election by the principal to waive the tort, but that he could proceed in his action against the purchaser and recover such damage as he had sustained after giving credit for what he had recovered from the agent and the bank. Morris v. Robinson (3 B. & C. 196; 5 Dowl. & Ry. 34) and Burn v. Morris (3 L. J. Ex. 193; 4 Tyrw. 485; 2 Cr. & M. 579) followed. Rice v. Reed, 69 L. J. Q.B. 33; [1900] 1 Q.B. 54; 81 L. T. 410—C.A.

2. CREATION OF TRUST.

Land in Trust—Numerous Allottees—Beneficial Ownership.—The use of the word “trust” is not always sufficient to create an equitable right or obligation which can be enforced by legal proceedings. Thus, where lands were granted to an individual to be held in trust for an unascertained and practically unascertainable class of loyal natives, no beneficial ownership is conferred on individual members of such a class. Te Tiera v. Te Roera Tareha, 71 L. J. P.C. 11; [1902] A.C. 56; 85 L. T. 558—P.C.

Registered Holder of Shares—Assignment of Beneficial Interest—Calls—Liability of Assignee—Indemnity.—The relation of trustee and cestui que trust is established as soon as it is shown that the legal title is in one and the equitable title is in another; and where the only cestui que trust is sui juris the trustee's right to indemnity by the cestui que trust against liabilities incurred by the trustee, as such, is not limited to the trust property, but also imposes on the cestui que trust a personal obligation enforceable in equity to indemnify his trustee, and the obligation attaches not only where the cestui que trust has created the trust, but where he has accepted a transfer of the beneficial ownership with a full knowledge of the facts. Hardoon v. Belihios, 70 L. J. P.C. 9; [1901] A.C. 118; 83 L. T. 573; 49 W. R. 209—P.C.

Incomplete Gift—Subscriptions—Testimonial for Past Services.—A number of persons, principally in the county for which B. was M.P., subscribed to present him with a testimonial. The amount subscribed was transferred to treasurers, the present defendants, to be retained by them until a meeting should be held at which a public presentation of the testimonial was to be made to B. Before the meeting took place political differences arose between the subscribers and B., in consequence of which the defendants refused to give B. the amount subscribed:—Held, that there was no trust created in favour of B. O'Brien v. McMeel, [1898] 1 Ir. R. 366—C.A.

Voluntary Settlement—Realty—Common-law Grant—Covenant for Further Assurance—No Power of Revocation Reserved—Disclaimer of Trustee by Deed—Effect on Settlement—Subsequent Mortgage by Settlor—Marshalling.—Where real estate was in 1866 settled by a voluntary deed operating by way of common-law grant, and containing a covenant by the settlor for further assurance, but no power of revocation, and the trustee, who had not executed the settlement, in March, 1867, by deed disclaimed the trusts, and the settlor by deed-poll in April, 1867, purported to revoke the settlement, and in 1888 conveyed certain of the estate comprised in the settlement by way of mortgage, and died in 1898, and the mortgage was in 1899 transferred to the executors of his will in trust for his estate, the mortgagee having been paid off out of his assets, it was held that the settlement had been duly constituted, and that the legal estate in the settled realty passed to the trustee and continued in him up to the time of his disclaimer, and that upon such disclaimer the trust created by the settlement was not destroyed, but that the settlor thereupon became the trustee thereof; and further, that, under the doctrine of marshalling, the persons claiming under the settlement were entitled to have the amount of the mortgage thrown primarily on the unsettled estate. Sheppard's Touchstone (Preston's Ed.), p. 285, explained. Jones v. Jones (9 L. J. N.C. 150; W. N. (1874), p. 190), followed. Hales v. Cox (32 Beav. 118) applied. Mallott v. Wilson, 72 L. J. Ch. 664; [1903] 2 Ch. 494; 89 L. T. 522—Byrne, J.

Express Trustees — Executors — Statute of Limitations.]—In the absence of special circumstances, executors were not, prior to the Executors Act, 1830, regarded by Courts of equity as express trustees, and the trusteeship created by that Act was not intended to be different in its nature from that which previously existed. Lacy, In re; Royal General Theatrical Fund Association v. Kydd, 68 L. J. Ch. 488; [1899] 2 Ch. 149; 80 L. T. 706; 47 W. R. 664—Stirling, J.

Where a testator, who died in 1873, gave all his property, which included freeholds and leaseholds, to the trustees of a charity, charged with certain annuities, and appointed an executor, to whom he bequeathed a legacy for his trouble, and the executor read over the will to the testator's heir-at-law and sole next-of-kin, but did not inform him of his rights under the testator's will in respect of the gift to the charity, and subsequently entered into possession and received the income of the real and personal estate on behalf of the trustees of the fund for nearly twenty years, it was held that the claim of the heir-at-law to the freeholds was barred by the Statute of Limitations, and that the executor was not an express trustee for the next-of-kin, and that consequently the title of the latter to the leaseholds was barred by the Law of Property Amendment Act, 1860, s. 13. Ib.

Salter v. Cavanagh (1 Dr. & Wal. 668) and Patrick v. Simpson (59 L. J. Q.B. 7; 24 Q.B. D. 128) distinguished. Ib.

Intended Transfer of Money—Deposit Receipt—Invalid Declaration of Trust.]—On June 15, 1905, O. lodged a sum of 60*l.* on deposit receipt in a branch bank, the receipt being in the following form: "Received from the parish priest of B. the sum of 60*l.* for masses to be accounted for at our office here." On the same day he lodged on deposit receipt in the same bank in a similar form 50*l.* for the parish priest of B. for repairs and building to church; and he also lodged two sums of 385*l.* each in the joint names of himself and each of two nieces. This was done in consequence of a conversation with the bank manager, during which O. stated that he wished to give the two sums of 50*l.* and 60*l.* for the purposes mentioned, but he did not wish to make a will. Two days after O. drew out the 50*l.* lodged on deposit receipt for repairs to the church and placed the amount to the credit of his current account. On September 21, 1905, O. lodged 100*l.* on deposit receipt in the same bank for the parish priest of B. for repairs and building to church. This was done in consequence of a conversation with the bank manager, at which two other persons were present, in which O. stated that he desired to leave this money to his successor for repairs to the church. This 100*l.* was made up by taking 50*l.* from each of the deposit receipts in favour of the nieces. O. died on November 15, 1905:—Held, that as the money on deposit receipt remained in the possession and under the control of O. during his life, the relationship of the bank and O. was that of debtor and creditor and that a valid trust had not been created. O'Flaherty v. Browne, [1907] 2 Ir. R. 416—C.A.

3. CLASSES OF TRUSTS.

(a) Secret Trust.

Wishes Confided to Wife.]—A testator left all his property to his wife, resting satisfied that she would faithfully carry out his wishes regarding the same in the interest of their children, the particulars of which she was aware of. The will was witnessed by two of the children. The testator about the same time wrote a letter addressed to his wife, which stated his wishes as to the disposal of the property he had left to her by his will, and contained the following sentence: "I think this disposition is as fair as I can make it, and I hope it will satisfy all; but you, of course, may modify it if you think or find it desirable." Shortly afterwards the testator read out the will and letter in the presence of his wife and children, and she acquiesced in it:—Held, that the circumstances were such as make would the letter a binding trust if it were intrinsically capable of creating a trust; but that, by reason of the sentence in question, there was no binding trust. Sullivan v. Sullivan, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 193—M.R.

Creation by Will.]—See WILL.

(b) Constructive Trust.

Lease of Partnership Premises—Purchase of Freehold Reversion—Trustee.]—The principle of Keech v. Sandford (Select Ca. Ch. 61), as extended by Phillips v. Phillips (54 L. J. Ch. 943; 29 Ch. D. 673), that a trustee, or person

n a fiduciary position, cannot purchase for his own benefit the freehold reversion expectant on the determination of a lease, being part of the trust property, only applies in the case of leases renewable by contract, or where there is a reasonable expectation that the lease will be renewed. Randall v. Russell (3 Mer. 190) and Longton v. Wilsby (76 L. T. 470) followed. Bevan v. Webb, 74 L. J. Ch. 300; [1905] 1 Ch. 320; 93 L. T. 298; 53 W. R. 651—Warrington, J.

Leasehold Property of Intestate—New Lease Obtained by Next-of-Kin.]—The rule in Keech v. Sandford (Select Ca. Ch. 61; 2 Wh. & Tud. L. C. 693) as to the benefit of a renewal lease, does not apply to one of the next-of-kin taking a new lease in his own right after the expiration of a former lease which formed part of an intestate's estate; and in the absence of unfair dealing he is entitled to hold the new lease for his own benefit. Grace, Ex parte (1 Bos. & P. 376), Rauve v. Chichester (2 Amb. 715), and Palmer v. Young (1 Vern. 276) discussed and distinguished. Biss, In re; Biss v. Biss, 72 L. J. Ch. 473; [1903] 2 Ch. 40; 88 L. T. 403; 51 W. R. 504—C.A.

Per ROMER, L.J.—Where a person renewing a lease does not occupy a fiduciary position, he is only held to be a constructive trustee of the renewed lease if in respect of the old lease he occupied some special position, and owed by virtue of that position a duty towards the other persons interested. Id.

Contract to Convey Real Estate—Refusal to Execute Conveyance—Vesting Order.]—A (a Scotch peer) was entitled to the lands of H. in the county of Wexford in fee-simple; he was also entitled, as first heir of entail by Scotch law, to a sum of 80,000*l.*, of which his eldest son B was next heir of entail. This sum of 80,000*l.* represented the balance of the purchase-money of a settled estate in Perthshire, which had just been sold. By agreement in writing dated March 30, 1892, A agreed with B that in consideration of B consenting to disentail the 80,000*l.*, and agreeing that out of that sum the debts of A to the extent of 9,000*l.* should be paid; that an annuity of 1,000*l.* should be secured for the lives of A and his wife and the survivor; that the remainder of a sum necessary to secure portions for younger children should be provided; and that the balance of the fund should be secured for B. A agreed to convey the lands of H. to trustees upon certain trusts with a power of sale. The terms of the agreement had all been carried out, except the conveyance of the H. estate which A refused to execute. An action was brought in the Court of Session in Edinburgh, in which a decree was obtained ordering him to execute the conveyance; but he refused to do so. On an application under section 26 of the Trustee Act, 1893, for an order vesting the H. estate in the trustees of the agreement,—Held, that A was a trustee within that section, and that a vesting order should be made. Rutliven's Trusts, In re, [1906] 1 Ir. R. 236—C.A.

Tenant for Life—Mortgage—Purchase from Mortgagee—Fiduciary Relation.]—Where a tenant for life in possession of mortgaged houses purchases the houses from the mortgagee under a power of sale contained in the mortgage, he holds the houses as trustee for the remaindermen and is not entitled to deal with them as his own property. The principle of Keech v. Sandford (Select Ca. Ch. 61; 2 Wh. & Tu. L.C. (7th ed.), 693) applied. Griffith v. Owen, 76 L. J. Ch. 92; [1907] 1 Ch. 195; 96 L. T. 5; 23 T. L. R. 91—Parker, J.

(c) Precatory Trust.—See WILL.

(d) Resulting Trust.

Money Placed in Name of Third Person.]—The testatrix placed a sum of 500*l.* on deposit at a bank in the name of her niece, towards whom she was not in loco parentis. She retained the deposit note in her own possession, and did not inform her niece of the fact of the deposit having been made. The testatrix subsequently made a codicil to her will purporting to dispose of the money:—Held, that there was a presumption of a resulting trust in favour of the testatrix and no evidence to rebut the presumption. Howes, In re; Howes v. Platt, 21 T. L. R. 501—Swinfen Eady, J.

Will—Construction—No Residuary Bequest—Trustees—Executors—Undisposed-of Surplus.]—A testatrix gave, devised, and bequeathed to four persons all her moneys and securities for money, plate, linen, &c., and also her freehold property, consisting of two farms, upon trust to sell the same, and out of the proceeds to pay her "funeral and testamentary expenses and debts, and then the legacies following"; and after mentioning the legacies, and declaring that the trustees might reimburse themselves out of the moneys coming to their hands, she appointed the same four persons executors of her will. After all payments had been made, there remained a considerable surplus of the personalty, and also the proceeds of the realty:—Held, distinguishing Croome v. Croome (59 L. T. 582), that the surplus residue did not go to the trustees beneficially, but went to the co-heirs and next-of-kin of the testatrix by virtue of a resulting trust. West, In re; George v. Grose, 69 L. J. Ch. 71; [1900] 1 Ch. 84; 81 L. T. 720; 48 W. R. 138—Kekewich, J.

Fund Subscribed "for or towards the education of B.'s children"—Surplus—Division among Adult Beneficiaries.]—A fund having been subscribed to defray the educational expenses of certain children, various sums had been spent out of their father's estate, to which they were entitled equally, upon their education and maintenance during their minorities. Upon a summons taken out by them when all of full age asking for a division of the remaining subscribed fund proportionate to the respective expenditure on each child,—Held, that there was no resulting trust in favour of the subscribers, and that the children were not entitled to be recouped the expenditure upon them respectively, but that the balance of the fund belonged to the children absolutely, and must be equally divided between them. Sanderson's Will, In re (26 L. J. Ch. 804; 3 K. & J. 497), distinguished. Andrew's Trust, In re; Carter v. Andrew, 74 L. J. Ch. 462; [1905] 2 Ch. 48;

Subscriptions to Charity for Support of Indigent Persons—Unapplied Surplus.]—A fund was collected for the support of two ladies and was supplemented by annual subscriptions and donations. The circular inviting subscriptions stated that the object was to enable the two ladies, who had been deprived of means of support, to reside in lodgings in Cambridge, and to provide for their very moderate wants, and that annual statements would be furnished to donors. No accounts were in fact ever furnished to the donors. At the death of the survivor of the two ladies there remained a surplus unapplied:—Held, that the proper inference was that the subscribers contributed on the footing that the fund would be applied for the benefit of the ladies, and not that they were to become the absolute owners of the fund, and that there was accordingly a resulting trust of the surplus in favour of the subscribers. Abbott Fund, In re; Smith v. Abbott, 69 L. J. Ch. 539; [1900] 2 Ch. 326; 48 W. R. 541—Stirling, J.

4. TRUST PROPERTY.

Trust Fund—Policy of Insurance—Security—Addition to Value of Policy—Payment of Additional Premium by Trustee out of His Own Money—Participating Policy—Profits.]—A trust fund of 1,000*l.* was put in settlement on the marriage of T., who took a life interest therein. The trustees of the settlement, who had very wide powers of investment, lent the trust fund to T., who gave his bond and warrant of attorney and contracted to insure his life for 1,000*l.* He also by deed directed and appointed that the trustees should during his life stand possessed of an annual rent-charge of 50*l.*, in the first place for the payment of premiums. No policy of insurance for 1,000*l.* was effected, but instead thereof there were two separate policies for 500*l.* effected. One of the trustees of the settlement, out of his own money, paid for several years an additional 1*l.* annual premium on one 500*l.* policy, and thus converted it from a policy without profits into a participating policy, and so entitled to profits or bonus. After the death of T. there were profits or bonus to the amount of 326*l.* paid in respect of this 500*l.* policy:—Held, that the sum of 326*l.*, representing profits or bonus, did not belong to the cestuis que trust under the settlement, but went to the representative of the trustee who paid the additional 1*l.* annual premium. Flynn v. Dalgleish, [1901] 1 Ir. R. 255—M.R.

Compromise—Distribution of Fund amongst Bondholders—Absent Parties—No Limit of Time Originally Fixed—Application to Limit a Time, within which Absent Parties must come in.]—In a bondholders' action to administer a trust fund, the Court in 1894 sanctioned a scheme of compromise binding upon absent parties under Order XVI. rule 9A, whereby a sum of money was appropriated for distribution in respect of 61,383 outstanding bonds when and so soon as the holders thereof should be ascertained, at the rate of 2*l.* 10*s.* per bond. The bonds were issued by a railway company and were to bearer. The holders of all but 1,700 of the outstanding bonds had been ascertained, and had come in under the scheme. After the lapse of six years, the railway company applied for an order limiting a short time within which the holders must come in or be deemed to have elected not to take the benefit of the scheme:—Held, by RIGBY, L.J., and STIRLING, L.J. (dissentiente VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.), that it would be wrong to introduce a time-limit into the scheme to the disadvantage of the unascertained bondholders, and that no order ought to be made. Held, by VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., that a reasonable time-limit ought to be read into the scheme and a proper order now made on that footing. Collingham v. Sloper, 70 L. J. Ch. 361; [1901] 1 Ch. 769; 84 L. T. 289; 49 W. R. 404—C.A.

Distribution of Trust Fund—Assignee of Cestui que Trust—Deed of Assignment—Right to Custody.]—Where a trustee is distributing a trust fund of personalty, some shares of which have been assigned by the cestuis que trust, he is not entitled, on paying such shares to the assignees, to require the deeds of assignment to be delivered up to him. Palmer, In re; Lancashire and Yorkshire Reversionary Interest Co. v. Burke, 76 L. J. Ch. 406; [1907] 1 Ch. 486; 96 L. T. 816—Swinfen Eady, J.

Assignment of Reversionary Interest—Settlement—Notice to One only of Three Trustees—Death of Trustee—Subsequent Assignment—Priority.]—One only of the three trustees of a will had notice of the settlement of a reversionary share in funds comprised in the will. He predeceased his co-trustees without having imparted this knowledge to them. A subsequent assignee of the share under the will, who made all proper enquiries as to incumbrances and was not told of the settlement, gave notice of his assignment to all the existing trustees of the will. On the share falling into possession, —Held, that the subsequent assignee was entitled to it in priority to the beneficiary under the settlement. Freeman v. Laing (68 L. J. Ch. 586; [1899] 2 Ch. 355) followed. Phillips' Trusts, In re, 72 L. J. Ch. 94; [1903] 1 Ch. 183; 88 L. T. 9—Kekewich, J.

5. POWERS AND DUTIES OF TRUSTEES.

(a) Generally.

Power to Deal with or Affect the Trust Property—Personal Discretion.]—Every power given to trustees which enables them to deal with or affect the trust property is prima facie given to them ex officio as an incident of their office, and passes with the office to the holders or holder thereof for the time being. Whether a power is so given ex officio or not depends in each case on the construction of the document giving it, but the mere fact that the power is one requiring the exercise of a very wide personal discretion is not enough to exclude the prima facie presumption. Smith, In re; Eastick v. Smith, 73 L. J. Ch. 74; [1904] 1 Ch. 139; 89 L. T. 604; 52 W. R. 104; 20 T. L. R. 66—Farwell, J.

The testator's reliance on the individuals, to the exclusion of the holders of the office for the time being, in order to be effectual, must be expressed in clear and apt language. Ib.

Disclaimer—Trustee of Will Comprising Property in England and Abroad—Disclaimer as to English Property only—Validity.—A trustee of a will comprising property in England and abroad cannot disclaim the trusts relating to the property in England only, and unless he disclaims the trusts in toto he remains a trustee for all purposes. Lord and Fullerton, In re, 65 L. J. Ch. 184; [1896] 1 Ch. 228—C.A.

Power of Advancement—Discretion—Improper Exercise of Power—Advance to Daughter of Money to be Applied in Payment of her Husband's Business Debts to Trustee—"Presumptive share."—A testator by his will left all his property to trustees to stand possessed of the income thereof in trust for his two daughters in equal shares, and upon certain other trusts after their death. There were trusts for their maintenance up to the age of twenty-one, and after attaining that age they were to be paid the income for their separate use and not by way of anticipation. The trustees were further empowered "to apply in or towards the advancement in life of each daughter a sum not exceeding 500*l.* of her presumptive share," and they were to be "the sole judges of the advisability of such payment and of what the term 'advancement in life' might signify." After the daughters had each attained the age of twenty-one (their respective shares having in consequence become vested) and the younger daughter had married, the trustees, at their request, paid to them two sums of money, under the power of advancement above set out, which they handed to the husband of the married daughter, to be used by him for the purposes of his business, and he, with their consent, paid these two sums over to one of the trustees to whom he owed money in respect of his business:—Held, that, even assuming the trustees to be empowered to make such a payment at a time when the shares were actually vested, notwithstanding the use of the words "presumptive share" in the advancement clause, the payment was not made bona fide for the advancement in life of the daughters, and that the trustees in making it were guilty of a breach of trust. Molyneux v. Fletcher, 67 L. J. Q.B. 392; [1898] 1 Q.B. 648; 78 L. T. 111; 46 W. R. 576—Kennedy, J.

Expenditure—Sanction of Court—Devise of Mansion-house—Repairs—Salvage.—Testator devised a freehold house to trustees in fee-simple upon trust for successive tenants for life, with remainders upon trust for their respective sons in tail, with a condition that each tenant for life should keep the house in substantially the same repair as that in which it was at the testator's death. The trustees had no powers of management over the property. The testator also bequeathed personal estate to the trustees upon trust to invest and hold on corresponding trusts. The house at the testator's death was in a general state of disrepair. On an application by the trustees as to whether they could apply the capital of the personal estate in putting the house in good repair,—Held, that the Court ought not to authorise the proposed expenditure either under the terms of the will or on the doctrine of salvage. Willis, In re; Willis v. Willis, 71 L. J. Ch. 73; [1902] 1 Ch. 15; 85 L. T. 436; 50 W. R. 70—C.A.

Equitable Tenant for Life—Bare Legal Estate in Trustees—Settled Land Acts.—In the case of mere legal estates or of equitable estates (where the trustees take a bare legal estate only without powers of management) the Court will not sanction expenditure out of capital on the application of the tenant for life, unless the expenditure is such as is authorised to be made out of capital moneys by the provisions of the Settled Land Acts. The rule laid down by CHITTY, J., in De Teissier, In re; De Teissier v. De Teissier (62 L. J. Ch. 552; [1893] 1 Ch. 153), approved and followed. Ib.

Power to Retain Testator's Assets in Partnership Business—Partners Trustees of a Deceased Partner—Retirement of One Partner—Discharge from Liability—Breach of Trust—Continuing Liability of Retired Partner—Following Trust-money.—Power in a testator's trustees to lend trust funds to a firm does not authorise a loan to what is constituted a new firm by the retirement of a partner, and on the insolvency of the new firm the retired partner, who has notice of the breach of trust, is still liable to make good the trust estate, although the trustees have affected to grant him a discharge. Still less is such a loan authorised when the trustees of the will were the testator's partners. Smith v. Patrick, 70 L. J. P.C. 19; [1901] A.C. 282; 84 L. T. 740—H.L. (Sc.)

The substitution of new trustees is no bar to an action against the retired partner to make good the trust fund, though the old trustees are neither parties nor witnesses, and there are concurrent remedies both against the partnership estate and the estate of the retired partner. Ib.

A testator appointed two of his partners his trustees, and empowered them to leave his estate in the business. A third partner retired and received the value of his share. The two trustees executed a discharge of all liability in favour of the retiring partner, treating the trust fund as a debt due from the continuing partners. At this time the business was solvent. Subsequently it became unable to meet its obligations; new trustees were appointed, and they sued the retired partner to make good the deficit of the testator's trust fund:—Held, that the retired trustee, having been party to a fraudulent breach of trust, was liable to make good the trust fund. Ib.

Shares in Company—Reconstruction—Exchange for Shares in New Company—Sanction of Court—Jurisdiction—Compromise.—As a rule the Court has no jurisdiction to give its sanction to the performance by trustees of acts with reference to the trust estate which are not authorised by the terms of the instrument creating the trust; but where peculiar circumstances have arisen not expressly provided for by the trust instrument, and not anticipated by its author, the Court, in the emergency that has arisen, has jurisdiction, for the benefit of the estate, to sanction acts by the trustees which in ordinary circumstances they would have no power to do. New's Settlement, In re; Langham v. Langham, 70 L. J. Ch. 710; [1901] 2 Ch. 534; 85 L. T. 174; 50 W. R. 17—C.A.

Shares in a limited company were held by trustees, and circumstances arose which made it desirable in the interests of all the shareholders to reconstitute the company and substitute for its shares shares in a new company to be formed to take over its business. The trustees had no express power to enter into the reconstruction agreement and exchange their shares for those in the new company:—Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to allow the trustees to enter into the reconstruction agreement. Crawshaw, In re; Dennis v. Crawshaw (60 L. T. 357), and Morrison, In re; Morrison v. Morrison (70 L. J. Ch. 399; [1901] 1 Ch. 701) distinguished. Ib.

Appropriation of Specific Assets—Will—Residue—Settled Shares—Infant.—Executors or trustees have power to appropriate specific assets to answer settled shares of residue, though the interests of infants are concerned. Lepine, In re; Doussett v. Culver (61 L. J. Ch. 153; [1892] 1 Ch. 210), and Richardson, In re; Morgan v. Richardson (65 L. J. Ch. 512; [1896] 1 Ch. 512), applied and extended. Nickels, In re; Nickels v. Nickels, 67 L. J. Ch. 406; [1898] 1 Ch. 680; 78 L. T. 379; 46 W. R. 422—Stirling, J.

Right to Pay—Mortgagee to Receive Whole of Fund Mortgaged.—Trustees of a fund which is mortgaged are, under section 22, sub-section 1 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, if they act honestly, and without notice of anything wrong, safe in handing over the money to the mortgagee upon his receipt, and are not concerned to enquire whether any money remains due on the mortgage or not. They are not, however, obliged to do so in all cases, and if there is any circumstance which makes it reasonable for the trustees to decline to be satisfied with the statutory receipt they will be justified in paying the money into Court under the Trustee Act, 1893. Bell, In re; Jeffery v. Sayles (65 L. J. Ch. 188; [1896] 1 Ch. 1), approved. Hockey v. Western, 67 L. J. Ch. 166; [1898] 1 Ch. 350; 78 L. T. 1; 46 W. R. 312—C.A.

Mortgage of Sheep Farm—Power to Trustees to Raise Money on Mortgage—Salvage.—A sum of 125,000*l.*, portion of trust property held in trust for beneficiaries (the shares of some being in settlement and some of them being infants), was invested in a mortgage on a sheep farm in Australia. The mortgagor had purchased the farm for 450,000*l.*, and had expended considerable sums thereon. Owing to drought, the farm deteriorated, and the mortgagor got into difficulties and became unable to pay interest on the mortgage. There was an attempted sale by the mortgagor, but there was no bidding, and the farm was unoccupied. The trustees of the trust property had taken proceedings in the Australian Court for foreclosure, and the decree would shortly be made absolute. The vacant farm was deteriorating, but rain had fallen, and there was a promise of better seasons. The mortgaged property was subject to land tax and certain penalties for not keeping down rabbits:—Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to, and would, allow the trustees to raise by mortgage of the sheep farm itself 80,000*l.* for the expenses of working and managing the farm and paying outgoings. Neill v. Neill, [1904] 1 Ir. R. 513—Kenny, J.

Reconveyance by Married Woman—Trustee—Mortgagee—Concurrence of Husband—Separate Acknowledgment.—Under section 16 of the Trustee Act, 1893, a married woman who, as sole surviving trustee, is mortgagee of a mortgage executed before the Married Women's Property Act, 1883, is competent to reconvey the property without the concurrence of her husband or a deed of separate acknowledgment. Howgate and Osborn's Contract, In re, 71 L. J. Ch. 279; [1902] 1 Ch. 451; 86 L. T. 180—Kekewich, J.

Powers—Appropriation of Assets.—See EXECUTOR, col. 842.

(b) Investments.

Investment Clause—"Securities"—Power to Vary or Transfer—Purchase of Ground-rents—Implied Power to Sell—Trustees for Purposes of Settled Land Acts.—Under a marriage settlement the trustees were directed to stand possessed of certain scheduled shares, stock, and securities upon trust at any time, with the usual consents, to sell the same and invest the proceeds in various investments, including "the purchase of freehold ground rents," with power from time to time "to vary or transfer such stocks, funds, shares or securities into or for others of the same or a like nature." The trustees purchased freehold ground-rents, and in 1901 the tenant for life under the settlement agreed to sell the same. The purchasers objected to the title on the ground that the trustees were not trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts:—Held, that the word "securities" in this settlement meant anything to be purchased under the power, and that, having regard to the power to vary and transfer the "securities," the trustees had power to sell the ground-rents, and were consequently trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts. Tapp and London and India Docks Co.'s Contract, In re, 74 L. J. Ch. 523; 92 L. T. 829—Kekewich, J.

Will—"Any corporation or company municipal commercial or otherwise."—The will of an English testator authorised investment of the trust fund in the public funds of Great Britain or India or any British colony or foreign country, or upon freehold, copyhold, leasehold, or chattel real securities in Great Britain, or on life interests in real or personal property, or in Bank of England stock, or in the stocks, funds, or securities of "any corporation or company municipal commercial or otherwise," or in Indian annuities, or in any trustee securities authorised by English law:—Held, that the trustees had power to invest in the stocks, funds, or securities of companies, incorporated and unincorporated, formed or registered within the United Kingdom but carrying on business abroad, and also of companies formed or registered outside the United Kingdom. Stanley, In re; Tennant v. Stanley, 75 L. J. Ch. 56; [1906] 1 Ch. 131; 93 L. T. 661; 54 W. R. 103—Buckley, J.

Power with Consent of Tenant for Life to Lend on Personal Credit without Security—Advance to Tenant for Life.—Trustees having power with the consent of the tenant for life to lend upon personal credit without security can lend trust money on the personal credit of the tenant for life, provided the tenant for life is a person to whom such an advance might otherwise be prudently made. The contrary statement of the law in Lewin on Trusts (10th ed.), 335, disapproved. Keays v. Lane (Ir. R. 3 Eq. 1) disapproved. Laing's Settlement, In re; Laing v. Radcliffe, 63 L. J. Ch. 230; [1899] 1 Ch. 593; 80 L. T. 228; 47 W. R. 311—Kekewich, J.

Convertible Securities—Bearer Bonds—Custody.—Where trustees are expressly authorised to retain or invest in convertible securities, such as bonds transferable by delivery with coupons attached, they may deal with them in the way usual with prudent men of business, and may deposit them in their joint names with the bankers to the trust upon a simple acknowledgment by the bankers of the receipt thereof. Field v. Field (63 L. J. Ch. 233; [1894] 1 Ch. 425) distinguished. De Pothonier, In re; Dent v. De Pothonier, 69 L. J. Ch. 773; [1900] 2 Ch. 529; 83 L. T. 220—Cozens-Hardy, J.

Land—Power to Invest in Purchase of—"Securities"—"Investments"—Power to Vary and Transpose Securities—Purchased Land—Power of Sale.—A testator authorised his trustees to invest trust moneys in the purchase or upon mortgage of freehold or leasehold properties, or in or upon Government stocks or funds, or debentures or preferential stocks of certain railway companies, or in or upon trustee investments authorised by law, with "power to vary and transpose such securities for other securities of any of the descriptions hereinbefore authorised." On the sale by the trustees of real estate purchased by them out of the trust funds, —Held, that the testator had used "securities" as synonymous with "investments," and that, by virtue of the power to vary and transpose securities, the trustees could sell the real estate in question and give the purchaser a valid receipt for the purchase-money. Gent and Eason's Contract, In re, 74 L. J. Ch. 333; [1905] 1 Ch. 387; 92 L. T. 356; 53 W. R. 334—Farwell, J.

— "Freehold ground-rents"—"Leasehold ground-rents"—Power to Purchase.—A testator gave his estate and effects upon trust for conversion and to invest, amongst other things, "upon freehold ground-rents or upon leasehold ground-rents not having less than 60 years unexpired and held direct from the freeholder." The will contained no trust or power for conversion of freehold or leasehold property purchased by the trustees:—Held, that the investment clause authorised not mortgages upon the security of, but purchases of, freehold and leasehold ground-rents. Mordan, In re; Legg v. Mordan, 74 L. J. Ch. 319; [1905] 1 Ch. 515; 92 L. T. 488; 53 W. R. 599—C.A.

— Real or Heritable Security—Harbour Rates—Insufficiency of Security—Liability.—A harbour bond in which there is an assignment of "the rates, duties, and other revenues" of the trust, with power to appoint a judicial factor in case of default, but no assignment of the undertaking itself, is not a "real or heritable security" within the meaning of the Trusts (Scotland) Amendment Act, 1884. Nor is such an investment a loan "secured on rates or taxes levied under the authority of an Act of Parliament by a municipal corporation." The accountant of Court has no power to approve improper investments, and his audit will not exonerate a curator bonis from liability. Hutton v. Annan, 67 L. J. P. C. 49; [1898] A. C. 289—H. L. (Sc.)

Bond or Debenture of "public company corporate, municipal, commercial, or otherwise"—Investment in Bond of Unincorporated Body.—A power to invest trust moneys in "bonds, mortgage debentures, debenture stock, preference or other shares of any public company or body corporate, municipal, commercial, or otherwise," is confined to such investments in public companies and bodies duly incorporated. A trustee invested trust funds subject to such a power in the bond or debenture of a body called "The Trustees for the Town and Harbour of Whitehaven," which at the time of investment were unincorporated:—Held, that the word "corporate" was attached to the word "body," so that the clause should read "any public company or body corporate, whether municipal, commercial, or otherwise," and consequently such an investment was a breach of trust. As to whether the trustee might be relieved from liability under the Judicial Trustee Act, 1896, s. 3, quære. Wood v. Middleton, 79 L. T. 155—Stirling, J.

"Nominal debenture."—The special power of investment in "nominal debentures or in nominal debenture stock issued under the Local Loans Act, 1875," conferred by section 5, sub-section 3 of the Trustee Act, 1893, upon trustees already "having power to invest money in the debentures or debenture stock of any railway or other company," is conferred only upon trustees possessing this previous power by the special provision of the instrument creating the trust. It is not conferred upon trustees possessing this previous power merely by virtue of section 1, sub-section (g) of the same statute, even assuming—which is questionable—that the statutory powers conferred by this last section do really amount to a "power to invest money in the debentures or debenture stock of any railway." Tattersall's Trusts, In re; Topham v. Armitage, 75 L. J. Ch. 680; [1906] 2 Ch. 399; 95 L. T. 553; 54 W. R. 603; 4 L. G. R. 1083; 70 J. P. 537—Swinfen Eady, J.

Shares in Company—Power to Retain in "present form of investment"—Shares in Reconstructed Company.—Testator, by his will, gave all his residuary real and personal estate to his trustees upon trust to sell and convert, and authorised them to retain any part thereof "in its present form of investment." At his death he was the holder of 750 fully paid ordinary shares of 5*l.* each in a limited company. The shares being of considerable value, the trustees retained 520 of them. Subsequently, with a view to increasing its capital, the company was reconstructed, its assets being transferred to a new company with the same name, and the original company wound up. Under the scheme of reconstruction provision was made for the issue of one preference share of 5*l.* and one ordinary share of 5*l.* (both fully paid) in the new company for every ordinary share in the old company; but no option was given to the shareholders of the old company to take cash instead of shares. The trustees accepted preference and ordinary shares in the new company in exchange for the shares held by them in the old company:—Held, that the ordinary shares fell within the words "in its present form of investment" in the retainer clause in the will, and that the trustees were justified in retaining them unsold. Smith, In re; Smith v. Lewis, 71 L. J. Ch. 885; [1902] 2 Ch. 667; 51 W. R. 11—Buckley, J.

Shares in Company Illegally Formed to Hold Shares in other Companies—Transformation of Shares—Settlement—Power to Retain "in the present state of investment"—Accretion of Premiums or Profits.—Part of the husband's fund settled by a marriage settlement consisted of shares in an American company formed to hold as investments the securities of other corporations. The trustees of the settlement were empowered to retain existing investments or to invest in certain authorised investments (not including American companies), and in case any preferential right to take "any new or other shares or stock in any company should be offered to the trustees as holding any shares or stock in such company," they might in their discretion give up such right absolutely or in favour of the tenant for life, or otherwise subscribe for such new or other shares, and apply the profits as income. The American company having been held illegal as to its constitution, its shares were converted by an arrangement under which stock in two American railway companies was delivered against surrendered stock, and options were also given to take up new shares in the railway companies:—Held, that the shares in the railway companies were not shares which the trustees were authorised to retain, and that the tenant for life was not entitled to the benefit of the options and sale of rights in new shares as accretions to trust investments. Smith, In re; Smith v. Lewis (71 L. J. Ch. 885; [1902] 2 Ch. 667), discussed and distinguished. Anson, In re; Lovelace v. Anson, 76 L. J. Ch. 641; [1907] 2 Ch. 424; 97 L. T. 472—Kekewich, J.

"Public company"—United Kingdom.—The will of an English testatrix contained the following investment clause: "I declare that any moneys hereby directed to be invested may be invested in the name of my trustee in or upon any of the public funds or in Government or real or leasehold securities or upon the stocks shares or securities of any railway or other public company and such investments may be varied from time to time as my trustee shall think fit":—Held, that "public company" was confined to companies within the United Kingdom. Castlehow, In re; Lamont v. Carter, 72 L. J. Ch. 211; [1903] 1 Ch. 352; 88 L. T. 455—Byrne, J.

Stock of Municipal Borough—Limit of Population—Returns of Last Census.—Bournemouth Corporation 3*l.* per Cent. Redeemable Stock is an authorised investment within the Trustee Act, 1893, s. 1 (m), the corporation with its extensions having, according to the returns for the last census, a population exceeding 50,000. Druitt, In re; Druitt v. Dehler, 72 L. J. Ch. 441; [1903] 1 Ch. 446; 88 L. T. 483; 67 J. P. 99; 1 L. G. R. 353—C.A.

"No other securities"—Cash under Control of Court.—Where a testator directs funds to be invested in "Consols" and in no other securities, and the funds being in Court are invested in that security, the Court will not authorise a change of investment to other trustee investments in order to increase the income arising therefrom. Wedderburn's Trusts, In re (47 L. J. Ch. 743; 9 Ch. D. 112), not followed. Ovey, In re; Ovey v. Ovey, 69 L. J. Ch. 804; [1900] 2 Ch. 524; 83 L. T. 311; 49 W. R. 45—Cozens-Hardy, J.

Option to Trustees to take Improper Investment.—The liability of a trustee for an improper investment will not be affected by the fact that the security upon which the improper investment was made has been since disposed of, as against a cestui que trust who never consented to the improper investment or did anything to put it out of the power of the trustee to obtain the benefit of such investment. Salmon, In re; Priest v. Uppleby (42 Ch. D. 351), considered. Head v. Gould, 47 L. J. Ch. 480; [1898] 2 Ch. 250; 78 L. T. 730; 46 W. R. 497—Kekewich, J.

Unauthorised Investment—Power of Trustee to Realise.—In the case of an unauthorised purchase of land by a trustee, a good title can be made by the trustee to a purchaser with notice provided that all the beneficiaries are not competent and desirous to take the land in specie. Patten and Edmonton Union, In re (52 L. J. Ch. 787), followed. Power v. Banks, 70 L. J. Ch. 700; [1901] 2 Ch. 487; 85 L. T. 376; 49 W. R. 679; 66 J. P. 21—Cozens-Hardy, J.

Claim of Indemnity against Beneficiary Requesting or Consenting to Investment.—Trustees who had invested trust funds in breach of trust, and who were held liable for the consequent loss, pleaded that they were entitled to be indemnified against this liability to the extent of the interest in the trust estate of a beneficiary who, they alleged, had consented in writing to the investment, and they relied on certain correspondence as shewing this. From this correspondence it appeared that the investment in question was made without any previous communication with the beneficiary, and that though he subsequently acquiesced in its being retained as a trust investment, he did so in reliance on the judgment of the trustees as to the investment being intra vires and prudent:—

Held, that the trustees were not entitled to the indemnity. Somerset v. Poulett (Earl) (63 L. J. Ch. 41; [1894] 1 Ch. 231) observed upon. Henderson v. Henderson's Trustees, 2 F. 1295—Ct. of Sess.

— Profits on Illegal Investment—Extent of Trustees' Liability.—Trustees who had guaranteed an issue of debenture stock in a colonial bank received as commission a bonus of 80%, with which they credited the trust. Under this guarantee they ultimately became liable to take up debenture stock to the value of 1,285*l.* They paid for this stock with trust funds, thereby committing a breach of trust:—Held, that the trustees, in accounting with the beneficiaries for a loss arising from the debenture stock, were entitled to take credit for the bonus of 80%. Ib.

— Excess Income—Capital or Income—Invalid Trust for Sale—Class, Ascertainment of.—A trustee who has paid the whole of the income arising from unauthorised investments of a trust fund to the tenant for life cannot, where no loss has resulted to the fund, be called upon to repay to the estate, as part of the capital of the fund, so much of the income as exceeded the amount which would have arisen if the fund had been properly invested. A testator directed his trustees to sell his real estate at a time beyond the period allowed by the rule against perpetuities, and to hold the proceeds of sale upon trust for persons and classes of persons ascertainable within the period:—Held, that the trust for sale was mere machinery, and that the equitable interests in the property went to the persons who would have taken them under the trust for sale if it had been valid; but that these equitable interests passed as real and not as personal estate. Dictum of STIRLING, J., in Goodier v. Edmunds ([1893] 3 Ch. 455), followed. Appleby, In re; Walker v. Lever, 51 W. R. 153—Byrne, J.

— Capital Replaced—Recovery of Interest—Excess of Interest Obtained by Breach—Excess Paid to Tenant for Life—Excess not Attributable to Capital.—A trustee took trust money out of Consols and by an improper use of it received 5 per cent. interest, which interest, it was assumed, had been paid by him to the tenant for life. The trustee subsequently restored the money to the trust, and invested it in authorised securities:—Held, that no part of the interest was attributable to capital, so that the remainderman had no right to insist that the excess of interest beyond what would have been received from Consols should be added to capital or accounted for. Slade v. Chaine, 97 L. T. 192—Kekewich, J.

— Investment in Trustee's Business—Recovery of Interest—Rate.—In a case in which a trustee had improperly used a trust fund in his own business, and the cestui que trust had elected to recover interest, the Court declined, notwithstanding the decrease in the rate of mercantile interest ordinarily obtainable, to give less than the rate of 5 per cent. prescribed as chargeable in such cases in Vyse v. Foster (42 L. J. Ch. 245, 248; L. R. 8 Ch. 309, 329). Davis, In re; Davis v. Davis, 71 L. J. Ch. 539; [1902] 2 Ch. 314; 86 L. T. 523; 51 W. R. 8—Farwell, J.

— Indemnity against Co-trustee.—A trustee (or his estate) is liable to contribute a rateable proportion of any loss suffered upon an unauthorised investment made with his knowledge by his co-trustee, although as between third parties and the first-named there is no liability to pay the loss or any part of it. Jackson v. Dickinson, 72 L. J. Ch. 761; [1903] 1 Ch. 947; 88 L. T. 507—Swinfen Eady, J.

— Delay in Realisation—Negligence.—Delay in realisation of the investment, in the absence of negligence, does not release him (or his estate) from liability. Ib.

— Re-sale—Beneficiaries—Incapacity—Election.—Where trust funds have been wrongfully invested in an unauthorised purchase of leaseholds, and some one or more of the beneficiaries are incapable, through infancy, of electing whether to take the property in specie or not, the trustees can make a good title to a purchaser with notice without joining a beneficiary in the conveyance. Jenkins and Randall's Contract, In re, 72 L. J. Ch. 693; [1903] 2 Ch. 362; 88 L. T. 623—Swinfen Eady, J.

— Proposed Investment in Unauthorised Security for Benefit of Family—Sanction of Court—Jurisdiction.—The Court has no jurisdiction to give its sanction to a scheme, however beneficial to the cestuis que trust it may appear to be, whereby trustees are to make a continuing investment not authorised by the will of their testator. Tollemache, In re, 72 L. J. Ch. 539; [1903] 1 Ch. 955; 88 L. T. 670; 51 W. R. 597—C.A.

The extreme limits of the jurisdiction of the Court to authorise trustees to go beyond the terms of a trust instrument are laid down in New's Settlement, In re; Langham v. Langham (70 L. J. Ch. 710; [1901] 2 Ch. 534). Ib.

(c) Sale.

— Trust for Sale of Realty—Discretionary Power of Postponement—Power to "make outlay out of capital of real estate" for Improvements and Repairs—Implication of Power to Mortgage.—A testator gave his real and personal property to trustees upon trust for sale with a discretion as to the postponement of any such sale, and then empowered his trustees, during postponement, to manage or cultivate his real and leasehold estates, and to make any outlay they considered proper out of the income or capital of his real or personal estate, for the renewals of leases, &c., improvements, repairs, or otherwise for the benefit of his real or personal estate. The will contained no express power for the trustees to mortgage:—Held, nevertheless, that under this clause in the will the trustees had power to raise money for the purposes specified by mortgage or charge of the unsold real estate. Bellinger, In re; Durell v. Bellinger, 67 L. J. Ch. 580; [1898] 2 Ch. 534; 79 L. T. 54—Kekewich, J.

— Direction to Trustees to Sell at Absolute Discretion—Direction that Trustees may Sell or not at Absolute Discretion—Income of Tenants for Life—Liberty to Trustees to Abstain from Selling for Three Years if they think fit.]—A testator gave his personal estate and the whole of his real estate to trustees upon trust “for sale and conversion at their absolute and unfettered discretion, and to invest the proceeds and pay the net income” equally between his two sisters during their lives for their separate use without power of anticipation, and after the decease of either of them upon trust for her children equally or only child, in case of a son at twenty-one or of a daughter at twenty-one or marriage, with a proviso that if either sister should die after his decease without issue, then the whole trust premises should go to the survivor and her descendants. The will contained no provisions for the management of the testator’s real estate. One of the testator’s sisters was married and had two infant children, and their only means of support was the half share of income given by the will. The other sister remained unmarried. The only real estate of the testator was in Ireland, let in 114 holdings, for the most part at judicial rents fixed under the Land Law (Ireland) Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 49). It was charged with the payment of annuities; but the net annual income, after satisfying all outgoings, amounted to about 5711. 3s. 8d. The annual income of the testator’s personal estate amounted only to about 381. Up to the year 1898 the trustees had found, after enquiries, that a sale of the real estate was impracticable; but in that year the surviving trustee obtained a report from an Irish land agent that it might with some difficulty be sold at a price which in Guaranteed Land Stock would produce a net annual income of about 2001. available for division between the tenants for life, who urged him to postpone the sale. On a summons by the surviving trustee against the tenants for life and the husband and children of the married one, as defendants, asking for liberty to postpone the sale of the Irish estate until order, Held, that a direction to trustees to sell at their absolute discretion was not equivalent to a direction that they may sell or not at their absolute discretion; and that in the first case the time and mode of sale were in their discretion, but they were not entitled to abstain from following the directions of the will because the tenants for life would then receive a better income; and, in consequence of the difficulty of deciding whether a sale would be beneficial in the interest of the tenants for life and those entitled in remainder regarded as one, the summons was ordered to stand over for three years, with liberty to the trustee to abstain, if he thought fit, from selling during that period, and with liberty for all parties to apply, but so as not to prevent the trustee from selling without application to the Court if he considered a sale advisable. Atkins, In re; Newman v. Sinclair, 81 L. T. 421—North, J.

— Discharge of Trustee—Purchase of Trust Property after Lapse of Twelve Years—Disability.]—Apart from any circumstances of doubt or suspicion, there is no rule of the Court that a person who has ceased to be a trustee of an instrument which contains a trust for sale cannot become a purchaser of the property subject to the trust. Boles and British Land Co.’s Contract, In re, 71 L. J. Ch. 130; [1902] 1 Ch. 244; 85 L. T. 607; 50 W. R. 185—Buckley, J.

In 1885, a trustee of a will which contained a trust for sale, and who had acted in the trusts, by deed-poll under section 32 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, retired from the trusteeship. In 1897 he purchased part of the trust property. Held, that the mere fact that he had originally been a trustee for sale of the property twelve years before the purchase did not preclude him from becoming the purchaser. Ib.

— Trustees’ Indemnity and Reimbursement Clause—Unexhausted Residue—Resulting Trust.]

—A gift of property to trustees on trust for sale, followed by a declaration of a particular trust which does not exhaust the whole of the property thus given, will be treated as creating a primary general trust of the whole of such property, so that there will be a resulting trust of the unexhausted residue in favour of the testator’s heir and next-of-kin. The insertion of a trustees’ indemnity and reimbursement clause will further strengthen the conclusion thus drawn from the presence of the trust for sale. West, In re; George v. Grose, [1900] 1 Ch. 84; 48 W. R. 138—Kekewich, J.

Power of Sale, with Power of Postponement—Sale Impeached by Beneficiaries on Ground of Improvidence—Valuation of Property.]—A testator who died in September, 1904, devised and bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees upon trust for sale with a power of postponement, and upon trust out of the proceeds to pay his debts, an annuity to his widow, and a yearly sum for the maintenance and education of his children. Part of the testator’s estate was a freehold house, let to a tenant for twenty-one years from September 29, 1898, at a yearly rent of 2251., the lease being determinable at the tenant’s option at the expiration of seven years. The house, which was subject to a mortgage for 3,5001., was valued for probate at 4,1001., the trustees having accepted that valuation from the beneficiaries’ solicitor, who had some knowledge of property in the district. In January, 1905, the trustees, on the advice of a firm of auctioneers and estate agents, whose manager, though not a qualified valuer, had viewed and reported on the house, offered to sell the house to the tenant for 4,0001., but this offer, as well as another to sell for 3,7001., was refused by the tenant, who, however, offered to purchase it for 3,0001. The trustees, who had heard that the tenant was likely to exercise his option to determine the lease and had obtained a further report that the property had considerably deteriorated in value since the date of the lease, agreed, after taking the advice of counsel, to accept the tenant’s offer, and a contract was entered into in February, 1905: Held, in an action by the beneficiaries, who impeached the contract on the ground that the price was grossly inadequate, and that the trustees had not taken steps to ascertain the best price obtainable for the property, and that the trustees had not informed them of the existence of the negotiations, that there was no obligation to consult the beneficiaries’ solicitor, and that the trustees having acted on the advice of a firm of high reputation, and there being no evidence that there was any market for such a house at a higher price or at any price, the contract could not be impeached. Grove v. Search, 22 T. L. R. 290—Kekewich, J.

Charge of Real Estate with Payment of Debts and Legacies—Devise of Real Estate to Trustees—Right to Sell.]—A testator, after appointing an executrix and directing his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses to be paid, and, subject thereto, making certain pecuniary bequests, gave all the rest, residue, and remainder of his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to pay to or permit and suffer his wife to receive the rents and profits of his real estate and the income of his personal estate (which last he directed to be converted) during her life, and after her decease to pay to or permit and suffer his niece to receive the same during her life for her separate use, and after the death of the survivor the testator directed the trustees to pay legacies to two persons if then living, and after payment thereof to stand possessed of his real estate and residue of his personal estate in trust for the children of his niece when they should attain twenty-one years, with a gift over in default of such children:—Held, that the testator had charged his real estate with the payment of his debts and legacies, both with those payable immediately on his own death (Greville v. Browne, 7 H.L. C. 639, followed), and also with the reversionary legacies payable on the death of the tenants for life; but that, inasmuch as the first tenant for life, being entitled to the rents and profits of the real estate, not for her separate use, took, according to Doe d. Leicester v. Biggs (2 Taunt. 109), the legal estate during her life, the testator had not devised the same so charged to the trustees for the whole of his estate and interest therein, and that, consequently, the trustees had not power to sell the real estate under section 14 of the Law of Property Amendment Act, 1859 (Lord St. Leonards' Act). Adams and Perry's Contract, In re, 68 L. J. Ch. 259; [1899] 1 Ch. 554; 80 L. T. 149; 47 W. R. 326—Stirling, J.

Harton v. Harton (7 Term Rep. 652), recognised in Van Grutten v. Foxwell (66 L. J. Q.B. 745; [1897] A.C. 658), distinguished, on the ground that, in the present case, the trustees having no active duties to perform during the life of the first tenant for life, there was no reason why they should be held to take the legal estate during that period. Doe d. Noble v. Bolton (11 Ad. & E. 188; 3 P. & D. 135) followed. Ib.

Constructive Trustee—Concurrence of Beneficiaries.]—A testatrix by her will dated March 3, 1849, appointed R. J. and U. M. executors, and gave them powers to apply income in maintenance and to sell certain hereditaments after the death of the survivors of her daughters. The testatrix died on December 25, 1850. R. J. alone proved the will, and died, leaving J. W. and M. W. his executors. In 1873 a petition was presented by all parties beneficially interested, and new trustees of the will were appointed under the Trustee Act, 1850. After the death of the survivor of the daughters the trustees contracted to sell the hereditaments. The purchaser required the concurrence of the beneficiaries:—Held, that the concurrence of the beneficiaries could not be required. Perrott and King's Contract, In re, 90 L. T. 156—Swinfen Eady, J.

Duration—Lunatic Absolutely Entitled—

Right to Call for a Transfer.]—A power of sale over real estate, to be exercised during the life of a person made tenant for life of that estate, does not come to an end upon the tenant for life becoming absolutely entitled in possession, where, by reason of his being non compos mentis, he is not in a position to call for a transfer to himself. Jump, In re; Galloway v. Hope, 72 L. J. Ch. 16; [1903] 1 Ch. 129; 87 L. T. 502; 51 W. R. 266—Swinfen Eady, J.

Power to Sanction Sale of Land and Minerals Separately—Form of Order.]—The trustee of a settlement having a power of sale with the consent of the tenant for life and her husband agreed to sell the minerals under part of the settled land, apart from the land, to a tenant who held the minerals under a lease, and applied to the Court on motion under section 44 of the Trustee Act, 1893, to sanction the sale. The Court made an order in the terms of the section, without entering into the question whether the sale was a beneficial one. Hallowes' Trusts, In re, [1906] 1 Ir. R. 526—M.R.

Leasehold Property—Sale in Lots of Property under One Lease—Under-leases to Purchasers—Power of Trustees to Grant.]—Trustees selling under a trust for sale leasehold property held under one lease at an entire rent can sell by auction in lots at apportioned rents, subject to a condition that if all the lots are sold the purchaser of the largest in value of the lots or, in the event of equality, the purchaser of the first lot in order of sale, should take an assignment of the lease and execute under-leases to the respective purchasers of the other lots for the whole term less one day, at the apportioned rents and subject to covenants and conditions corresponding with those in the original lease, and that if any of the lots should remain unsold the vendors would grant to the purchaser or purchasers of the lot or lots sold such an under-lease as aforesaid of the lot or lots sold. Such a transaction is in substance and reality a sale and not a leasing by the trustees. Walker and Oakshott's Contract, In re, infra (70 L. J. Ch. 666; [1901] 2 Ch. 383), overruled. Judd and Skelcher's Contract, In re, 75 L. J. Ch. 403; [1906] 1 Ch. 634; 94 L. T. 595; 54 W. R. 513—C.A.

Leasehold Property—Sale in Lots—Assurance—Under-leases to Purchasers—Duty of Trustees.]—Trustees, who are assignees of leasehold property held under one lease, cannot, in exercise of an ordinary power of sale, carry out a sale of such property in lots by retaining in themselves the original term and granting under-leases for the whole term less one day to the purchasers of the respective lots at apportioned rents, for by adopting such a method of assurance the trustees do not perform their duty and get rid of their liability by privity of estate to the lessor. Walker and Oakshott's Contract, In re, 70 L. J. Ch. 666; [1901] 2 Ch. 383; 84 L. T. 809; 50 W. R. 41—Kekewich, J.

Power to Postpone—"Uncontrolled discretion"—Payment of Legacy in Full—Admission of Assets.]—A testator by will gave his property to trustees upon trust for sale and conversion, with power to the trustees to postpone conversion so long as they should in their uncontrolled discretion deem proper, and the testator declared that without limiting the general operation of that power he specially intended that it should be made applicable to his shares in a named company. After his death the trustees, in the bona fide exercise of their discretion, held the shares for some years on a generally falling market:—Held, that, having exercised their discretion bona fide, they were not liable for loss incurred thereby. Held, also, that the fact that some of the trustees, in exercising their discretion honestly, modified their opinion as to a sale in deference to the views of a co-trustee who had a personal interest in the matter, did not amount to a failure to exercise a discretion and was not a breach of trust. The mere payment of a legacy by an executor of a will is not conclusive as an admission of assets. Schneider, In re; Kirby v. Schneider, 22 T. L. R. 223—Warrington, J.

Title—Conversion—Election to take in Specie—Assent of Third Parties—Trust for Sale—Perpetuity.]—To establish an election to take in specie and free from a trust to convert, it is necessary to have sufficient evidence of the election to be derived from declarations or acts and conduct of the parties; and, where it is sought to establish such an election by a person only entitled subject to the rights of third persons, it must be shewn in like manner that such persons have assented. Sisson v. Giles (32 L. J. Ch. 606; 3 De G. J. & S. 614) and Mutlow v. Biggs (45 L. J. Ch. 282; 1 Ch. D. 385) applied. Douglas and Powell's Contract, In re, 71 L. J. Ch. 850; [1902] 2 Ch. 296—Byrne, J.

Semble, an immediate trust for sale, the parties to take under the will which creates it being all lives in being at its date, is not void for perpetuity, though the exercise of it is not confined within the proper limit. Goodier v. Edmunds (62 L. J. Ch. 649; [1893] 3 Ch. 455) distinguished. Id.

Purchase by Trustee of Beneficiary's Interest—Non-disclosure of Valuation.]—There is no difference between the law of England and the law of Scotland in relation to the duties and obligations of trustees when they are dealing with their cestuis que trust. As expressed by LORD CAIRNS in Thomson v. Eastwood (2 App. Cas. 215, 236), the law is: "There is no rule of law which says that a trustee shall not buy trust property from a cestui que trust, but it is a well-known doctrine of equity that if a transaction of that kind is challenged in proper time a Court of equity will examine into it, will ascertain the value that was paid by the trustee, and will throw upon the trustee the onus of proving that he gave full value, and that all information was laid before the cestui que trust when it was sold." Dougan v. Macpherson, 71 L. J. P.C. 62; [1902] A.C. 197; 86 L. T. 361; 50 W. R. 689—H.L. (Sc.)

(d) Leasing.

Unopened Mines.]—A testator settled his real estate, making no mention of mines or minerals, and gave his trustees a general and unrestricted power of leasing any portion of his estate, but no special power of granting mining leases. After the testator's death seams of coal were discovered under a portion of his estate. There had never been any open workings of mines on any part of his estate:—Held, that the trustees might under the power demise the unopened mines. Barker, In re; Wallis v. Barker, 88 L. T. 685—Kekewich, J.

(e) Mortgaging.

Mortgage of Trust Estate by Trustee Jointly with His Own Property—Apportionment.]—Where a trustee wrongfully raises money on the security of the trust estate jointly with his own property in proportion to their respective values, he must account to the trust estate for the sum received in the same proportion. Roche-foucauld v. Boustead, 67 L. J. Ch. 427; [1898] 1 Ch. 550—C.A.

(f) Custody of Title-deeds.

Stock Certificates—Joint Custody or Control—Rights of Co-trustees.]—The Court will not at the instance of one trustee compel his co-trustee, whose position and integrity are unimpeached, to place title-deeds and certificates of railway stock belonging to the trust estate, and which have remained in the co-trustee's sole custody for many years and are not in jeopardy, in a box accessible only to the trustees jointly and deposited at a bank to be approved of by them. Sisson's Trusts, In re; Jones v. Trappes, 72 L. J. Ch. 212; [1903] 1 Ch. 262; 87 L. T. 743; 51 W. R. 411—Swinfen Eady, J.

Lien of Trustees on Land to Secure Purchase-moneys—Custody of the Title-deeds—Land Purchased by Equitable Tenant for Life, under Power, with Moneys Belonging to Personal Estate.]—A testator gave real and personal property in trust to accumulate rents and profits during the minority of H., who was to be (and in fact was) let into possession on attaining twenty-one as tenant for life. A private Act authorised land to be purchased by the Court at the instance of a tenant for life of full age, and to be paid for out of the personalty. The moneys so paid were to be deemed a debt from the real to the personal estate, which debt was to be held by the trustees as part of the personalty and secured by a lien on the purchased land. Subject to such lien, the purchased land was to be settled on the trusts of the will:—Held, that, as to land so purchased, the trustees, so long as their lien existed, were entitled to the custody of the title-deeds. Wheeler v. Tootell, 51 W. R. 693—Swinfen Eady, J.

(g) Separation Deed.

Assignment of Husband's Leaseholds on Trust for Wife for Life—Ultimate Trust for Husband—Covenant by Husband to Pay Annuity to Wife—No Covenants by Wife or Trustees—Voluntary Settlement—Bankruptcy of Husband—Arrears of Annuity—Lien—Right of Trustees to Retain Property until Arrears Paid.—A person entitled in equity to property legally vested in trustees cannot compel the trustees to hand over the property to him until he has satisfied a debt due to such trustees in that capacity, at all events where the debt arises under the instrument which creates the trust. Weston, In re; Davies v. Tagart, 69 L. J. Ch. 555; [1900] 2 Ch. 164; 82 L. T. 591; 48 W. R. 467—Stirling, J.

By a separation deed in 1864, after reciting that differences had arisen between the husband and wife, and that they had agreed to live apart, the husband assigned to trustees leaseholds upon trust to pay the rents to the wife for life for her separate use, and after her death upon trust for sale, and in the events which happened the proceeds were to be in trust for the husband, and the husband covenanted if the rents should not amount to 300*l.* a year to make up the income to 300*l.* There was a proviso for determination if the wife should return to cohabitation, and a covenant by the husband that the wife should live apart from him, but there was no covenant by the wife or trustees either for payment of debts or otherwise. The husband became bankrupt in 1865, and obtained his discharge in the same year, but, as the law then stood, the discharge did not release him from his obligations under the covenant. On the death of the wife in 1899 a large sum was due from the husband's estate under the covenant to make up the income to 300*l.*—Held, that the deed, having regard to the recital, was not voluntary, and that the trustees were entitled, as against the assignee in bankruptcy of the husband, to retain the trust property until the arrears due under the covenant were satisfied. Ib.

Quære, whether the right claimed by the trustees would not exist even in the case of a voluntary settlement effectually completed so as to be enforceable by the Court. Ib. And see HUSBAND AND WIFE, cols. 977-981.

6. LIABILITY OF TRUSTEES.

(a) Accounts and Administration.

Account Claimed on Footing of Wilful Default—Right to Common Account—Full Decree unnecessary—Discretion.—An action was brought against the trustee of a creditors' deed claiming an account of all dealings and transactions on the footing of wilful default. The claim as for wilful default failed at the trial, but certain small charges were substantiated. The Court, however, in the exercise of the discretion conferred by Order LV. rule 10, refused the full decree for a common account, inasmuch as full justice between the parties could be done without such decree. Circumstances under which the discretion will be exercised considered. Campbell v. Gillespie, 81 L. T. 514; 49 W. R. 151—Cozens-Hardy, J.

Neglect to Furnish—Proceedings by Beneficiaries—Administration—Taking Account.—Under the old practice prevailing before the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, came into operation, an order for an account in an administration action went as a matter of course, and the costs of taking the account came out of the estate; but under the modern practice introduced by those rules, such costs are in the discretion of the Court, and where executors or trustees have been guilty of gross neglect in furnishing proper accounts the Court has power to visit them not only with the costs of proceedings instituted by a beneficiary for the purpose of obtaining an account and administration (so far as necessary) of the trust estate, but also with the costs of taking the account. Skinner, In re; Cooper v. Skinner, 73 L. J. Ch. 94; [1904] 1 Ch. 289; 89 L. T. 663; 52 W. R. 346—Farwell, J.

Action by Beneficiaries—No Loss of Trust Estate—Costs—Indemnity to Co-trustee.—Where one of two trustees, who was a solicitor and managed the affairs of the trust, had neglected to furnish proper accounts, although repeatedly requested so to do by the cestuis que trust and also by his co-trustee, with the result that an action was brought by the beneficiaries against the trustees, in which both trustees were ordered to furnish accounts and to pay the costs of the action down to judgment, the solicitor-trustee, although he had acted honestly and there had been no loss of the trust estate, was in the same action ordered to pay the costs of his co-trustee as between solicitor and client and to indemnify him against any costs he might have to pay to the plaintiffs. Principle of Lockhart v. Reilly (25 L. J. Ch. 697) and Turner, In re; Barker v. Ivinney (66 L. J. Ch. 282; [1897] 1 Ch. 536), applied. Linsley, In re; Cattley v. West, 73 L. J. Ch. 841; [1904] 2 Ch. 785; 53 W. R. 172—Warrington, J.

Disallowance—Real Estate—Payment of Voluntary School Rate—"Fair and reasonable" Payment.—A payment of a mere voluntary subscription by a trustee cannot be allowed in his account, but where such payment, although in one sense voluntary, is made reasonably and in the honest belief that it will benefit the estate, either as saving a future compulsory payment of larger amount or as being fairly and reasonably necessary under the circumstances of the estate, it may be allowed. How v. Winterton (Earl), 51 W. R. 262—Kekewich, J.

Maintenance of Cestuis que Trust by Trustee—Verbal Arrangement—Onus of Proof.—In 1875 the defendant married a widow with four children, two sons and two daughters. She was possessed of property producing an income of between 2,000*l.* and 3,000*l.* per annum. She died in 1888, having by her will appointed the defendant sole executor and trustee, and bequeathed the residue of her estate upon trust in equal fourth shares, one being for each of the three younger children of her first marriage—namely, E. and W., the daughters, and C., one of the sons—and the other fourth for the defendant for life, with remainder to the only child of the marriage of the defendant with the testatrix. At the time of the death of the testatrix, her daughters E. and W. were of the ages of twenty-six and twenty-four respectively. The testatrix contemplated that they would after her death continue to reside with the defendant, which, in fact, they did—E. until her marriage in July, 1899, and W. until the defendant himself married again in May, 1901. E. and W. brought an action against the defendant claiming an account of the income to which they were entitled under the will of the testatrix from the date of the testatrix's death. The defendant stated that shortly after the testatrix's death he made a verbal arrangement with E. and W. that in consideration of their contributing or permitting him to retain the whole of the income of their shares of the trust estate, he should bear the cost of their maintenance as members of his household, and pay or provide the money for the payment of their personal expenditure, including any cash that they might require:—Held, that the onus lay upon the defendant to make out that he brought home to the minds of the daughters that they were to pay for their maintenance; and that he had failed to discharge it. Cottrell's Estate, In re; Joyce v. Cottrell (41 L. J. Ch. 70; L. R. 12 Eq. 566), considered and applied. Moulton, In re; Grahame v. Moulton, 94 L. T. 454; 22 T. L. R. 380—C.A.

Action for Account of Income—Form of Order—Statute of Limitations.—Form of order in an action for accounts against trustees who were protected by section 8 of the Trustee Act, 1888, from rendering accounts for more than six years from the date of the commencement of the action. Davies, In re; Ellis v. Roberts, 67 L. J. Ch. 507; [1898] 2 Ch. 142; 79 L. T. 344—Kekewich, J.

—Creditor's Deed—Discretion to Make Order.—In an action against a trustee under a creditor's deed for an account on footing of wilful default which was not established, the Court, exercising its discretion under Order LV. rule 10, declined to make an administration order, but gave judgment for payment by the trustee in respect of certain moneys improperly dealt with. Campbell v. Gillespie, 69 L. J. Ch. 223; [1900] 1 Ch. 225; 81 L. T. 514; 48 W. R. 151—Cozens-Hardy, J.

(b) Breach of Trust.

Loan by Trustee to Himself—Realisation of Security—Loss—Apportionment.—Where a trustee has sold Consols and invested the proceeds, in breach of trust, upon an improper security, the amount of which when realised is insufficient to replace the capital and pay the arrears of interest, the tenant for life (or his estate) must, upon an apportionment of the sum realised between capital and income, bring into account all sums received by him in respect of income on the improper investment beyond what he would have received as dividend on the Consols. Bird, In re; Evans, In re; Dodd v. Evans, 70 L. J. Ch. 514; [1901] 1 Ch. 916; 84 L. T. 294; 49 W. R. 599—Farwell, J.

Client's Funds Mixed with those of Trustee or Agent—Right to Follow Money.—Where a trustee or agent, with or without authority, sells trust property and lodges the proceeds of sale in bank in his own name, the money so lodged can be followed and vindicated by the truster, provided it can be traced with reasonable certainty. This holds good not only as between the truster and the trustee, but also as between the truster and the trustee's trustee in bankruptcy. The proceeds of the sale can be vindicated, although they may have been blended with moneys belonging to the trustee, and if, after the proceeds are so lodged and blended with the trustee's own funds, the trustee, for his own purposes, draws out part of the mixed funds, he will be held to have drawn out his own funds, and not those which represent the proceeds of the trust estate. Jopp v. Johnston's Trustee, 6 F. 1028—Ct. of Sess.

Receipt of Trust Fund—Knowledge—Husband and Wife—Breach of Trust—Statute of Limitations—Accounting Party—Interest.—The wife of O. was entitled under the will of her mother M. to a life interest for her separate use in a certain business and trade assets, with remainder on her death (in the events which happened) to the persons who would be beneficially entitled to her personal estate if she had died intestate and unmarried. The business and trade assets were vested in trustees under the will of M., and with their consent O. carried on the business as manager for his wife. The wife died in 1890. From 1890 till his death in 1899 O. remained in possession, and dealt with the business and trade assets as if they were his own. He had full notice and knowledge of the trusts of the will of M. By his own will he left a legacy and a share of the residue of his estate to each of the persons who would have been sole next-of-kin of his wife, if she had died unmarried and intestate, coupled with a condition that each of them should execute a release of all claims he or she might have against the assets of M. under the provisions of her will:—Held, that O. having retained possession of the business and trade assets after his wife's death, with full knowledge of the trust attaching thereto, and having dealt with the property as if it were his own, his estate was liable to the estate of M. without regard to lapse of time or the Statute of Limitations. Held also, that in the exercise of the discretion of the Court, and in the circumstances, 4 per cent. per annum should be allowed as the rate of interest chargeable against O.'s estate from his wife's death till his own death in respect of the amount invested in or represented by the furniture on the business premises and the stock-in-trade and debts due to the business. M'Ardle v. Ganghra, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 106—M.R.

Payment to Wrong Person—Prior Charge—Fraud of Solicitor—Notice—Duty to Enquire.—On the distribution of a trust fund, the trustees' solicitor claimed to be absolutely entitled to a share of the fund under a deed of assignment which disclosed on the face of it a prior charge. The trustees, without enquiry, and without requiring the production of the assignment, paid the share to their solicitor, who shortly afterwards died insolvent:—Held, that the trustees could not shelter themselves behind the fraud of their agent, and therefore that they were liable to make good the prior charge. Davis v. Hutchings, 76 L. J. Ch. 272; [1907] 1 Ch. 356; 96 L. T. 293—Kekewich, J.

Relief—Judicial Trustees Act.—Held, also, that the trustees were not entitled to relief under the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896. Id. See RELIEF, col. 2607.

Payment of Annuities without Deduction of Income Tax—Breach of Trust—Limitation.]—A trustee paying annuities given by will out of income which has paid income tax before it came to his hands must deduct from each payment of annuity the tax thereon at the current rate, unless the will otherwise directs. Not to make such deduction is a breach of trust, and the trustee is liable to refund to the estate the sum thus overpaid; but section 8 of the Trustee Act, 1888, bars all claims against him beyond six years, except in the case of an annuity given to himself. Sharp, In re; Rickett v. Rickett, 75 L. J. Ch. 458; [1906] 1 Ch. 793; 95 L. T. 532; 22 T. L. R. 368—Swinfen Eady, J.

Trust for Accumulation—Balances Due from Trustee—Neglect to Invest—Wilful Default—Compound Interest.]—In an administration action, although no allegation of wilful default is made in the pleadings, trustees may be charged with compound interest on balances in their hands where they ought to have so dealt with the trust funds as to have received such interest—e.g. where there is a trust for accumulation. Knott v. Cottee (16 Beav. 77) followed. Barclay, In re; Barclay v. Andrew, 68 L. J. Ch. 383; [1899] 1 Ch. 674; 80 L. T. 702—Stirling, J.

Principles and authorities as to charging interest against trustees and executors considered. Ib.

Effect of Judgment by Consent.]—Where some of the plaintiffs are infants, judgment by consent for accounts and enquiries relating to the personal estate of the testator, not amounting to a compromise, will not preclude a claim for compound interest on further consideration. Ib.

Rate of Interest.]—The rate of interest to be charged is now 3, in place of 4, per cent. Ib.

Company in Liquidation—Improper Sale by Liquidator—Fraud—Sale Set Aside—Account—Interest on Rents and Profits.]—The terms upon which an improper sale by a trustee will be set aside are that the cestui que trust, if he chooses it, may have the specific estate reconveyed to him by the trustee, or, where the trustee has sold it with notice, by the party who purchased, the cestui que trust on the one hand repaying the price at which the trustee bought, with interest at 4 per cent., and the trustee or purchaser on the other accounting for the profits of the estate, but not with interest, and, if he was in actual possession, being charged with an occupation rent. Where, therefore, a sale was improperly made by a liquidator of a company, he standing in a fiduciary relation to the company, the Court set aside the sale and ordered the liquidator to account for the rents and profits received, but declined to allow the company interest on such rents and profits. Macartney v. Blackwood (1 Ridg., Lapp. & Sch. 602) discussed. Silkstone and Haigh Moor Coal Co. v. Edey, 69 L. J. Ch. 73; [1900] 1 Ch. 167; 48 W. R. 137—Stirling, J.

American Securities—One Trustee in England and One in America—Delivery of Securities by Former to Latter—Loss of Securities—Laches.]—

—By his will a testator, who died in 1862, left his residuary estate to G. W. T. and others upon trust for his daughter A. H. T. for life for her separate use, with remainder in effect as she should appoint. G. W. T., who survived the other trustees, died in 1879, having by his will appointed J. T. L. and W. H. S. executors thereof. J. T. L. resided in England, and W. H. S. in America. Part of the testator's estate consisted of American securities, which J. T. L. when in America delivered into the custody of W. H. S., who regularly paid the income thereof to A. H. T., then the wife of J. B. A. In 1883 new trustees of the testator's will were appointed in England. Mrs. A. died in 1892, having by her will given her property to her husband. They both recognised W. H. S. as the American trustee. W. H. S. was then pressed to transfer these securities to the new trustees here, which he refused to do, and it then transpired that he had recently made away with them and was insolvent. In an action by the new trustees and J. B. A. against J. T. L. and W. H. S. to render J. T. L. liable for the loss,—Held, first, that, as against the trustees, section 8 of the Trustee Act, 1888, was a good defence; secondly, that, as to J. B. A., inasmuch as he might at any time since 1883, when the securities were intact, have brought an action in the name of his wife for the purpose of transferring the securities to the new trustees, and neglected to do so, he was guilty of laches, and could not now recover against J. T. L. Taylor, In re; Atkinson v. Lord, 81 L. T. 812—Stirling, J.

Consent of Tenant for Life to Breach of Trust—Payment into Court at Suit of Remaindermen—Surplus after Replacing Capital—Bankruptcy of Tenant for Life—Right to Surplus Moneys.]—As a general rule a cestui que trust who consents to a breach of trust by a trustee cannot complain, as between himself and the trustee, of loss occasioned by that breach of trust. This rule is quite independent of, and is not affected by, section 45 of the Trustee Act, 1893, which empowers the Court to impound, by way of indemnity to the trustee, any interest in the trust estate of a cestui que trust at whose instigation or request, or with whose consent in writing, the trustee has committed a breach of trust; and the rule does not require the consent to the breach of trust to be in writing. Fletcher v. Collis, 74 L. J. Ch. 502; [1905] 2 Ch. 24; 92 L. T. 749; 53 W. R. 516—C.A.

A trustee, with the consent of the tenant for life, sold the trust funds, and gave the proceeds in his presence to his wife. The trust funds were lost through this breach of trust, and in an action by infant remaindermen an order was made in the nature of a compromise, by which the trustee was to pay into Court out of a pension and the proceeds of certain life policies the whole of the sum paid away to the wife of the tenant for life, with interest. The order directed that these moneys should be applied in the first instance in satisfaction of the capital of the trust funds, and then of interest thereon on application for the purpose. The tenant for life at the date of this order was bankrupt, and his trustee in bankruptcy declined to consent to the order, which was made without prejudice to his rights. The trustee of the settlement was now dead, and the moneys in Court exceeded the capital of the trust funds. The surplus of such moneys, after replacing the capital, was claimed by the personal representative of the deceased trustee on the one hand, and by the trustee in bankruptcy of the tenant for life on the other hand:—Held, that the trustee in bankruptcy stood in no better position than the tenant for life; that the tenant for life could not have called on the deceased trustee to make good his life interest, and that his trustee in bankruptcy had therefore no right to any of the surplus moneys as against the personal representative of the deceased trustee. Ib.

Following Trust Moneys—Banking Account.]—When the private money of a trustee and that which he holds in a fiduciary capacity have been mixed in the same banking account, from which various payments have been from time to time made, then, in order to determine to whom any remaining balance, on any investment paid for out of the account, ought to belong, the trustee must be debited with all sums that have been withdrawn and irrecoverably applied to his own use, and the trust money be debited with any sums taken out and properly invested; and the order of priority in which the withdrawals and investments have been made is immaterial. Oatway, In re; Hertlet v. Oatway, 72 L. J. Ch. 575; [1903] 2 Ch. 356; 88 L. T. 622—Joyce, J.

Joint and Several Liability—Compromise with one Trustee—Release—Insolvency of Co-Trustee's Estate—Right to Prove for Whole Debt.]—Where an action has been brought by plaintiffs as beneficiaries under a settlement to enforce liability against trustees for a breach of trust, and a sum has been certified to be due from the insolvent estate of a deceased trustee, and from the other two trustees, the plaintiffs will be entitled to prove against the insolvent estate for the full amount of the sum certified to be due. The liability of all the trustees being joint and several, until the plaintiffs have received 20s. in the pound they are entitled to claim the whole debt from any one trustee, notwithstanding that another trustee has made a payment by way of compromise in respect of his several liability. Edwards v. Hood-Barrs, 74 L. J. Ch. 167; [1905] 1 Ch. 20; 91 L. T. 766; 21 T. L. R. 89—Kekewich, J.

Liability of Retired Trustees for Breach of New Trustees.]—In order to make retiring trustees liable for a breach of trust committed by their successors, it must be clearly shewn that the very breach of trust which was in fact committed was contemplated by the former trustees when the retirement took place, and that they were guilty as accessories before the fact to such breach of trust. It is not sufficient to prove that they rendered easy or even intended a breach of trust, if the breach of trust so intended was not in fact committed. Head v. Gould, 67 L. J. Ch. 480; [1898] 2 Ch. 250; 73 L. T. 739; 46 W. R. 597—Kekewich, J.

Fund carried to a Separate Account—Charge Thereon—Priority.]—On general principles a defaulting trustee must make good his default before he is entitled to take any part of the trust estate for his own benefit, and his assignee cannot stand in a better position; but the possibility that such a claim may be made does not of itself disable a trustee during the whole continuance of his trusteeship from making a good title to a bona fide purchaser of a separate portion of the estate which the testator has given to him. And therefore his general liability to make defaults good will not be enforced against funds so far administered as to be carried to a separate account, by order of the Court, and specifically assigned for value by a person entitled according to the terms of that account; but the assignee will have priority over the cestuis que trust. Eyton, In re (45 Ch. D. 458), approved and followed. Jacobs v. Rylands (L. R. 17 Eq. 341) distinguished. Edgar v. Plomley, 69 L. J. P.C. 95; [1900] A.C. 481; 82 L. T. 573; 49 W. R. 142—P.C.

Action for Breach of Trust—Partial Administration—Executors of one Trustee the only Defendants—Necessary Parties—Representatives of Surviving Trustee or New Trustees.]—Where a beneficiary under a marriage settlement brought an action for breach of trust against the executors of one trustee, who was not the surviving trustee of the settlement, and claimed a declaration that the executors were liable to make good the breach of trust and an order for the investment of a sum to answer the loss to the trust estate, THE COURT directed the case to stand over in order that the representatives of the other and surviving trustee might be added as defendants, or, if there were no such representatives, that new trustees might be appointed and joined as defendants. Jordan, In re; Hayward v. Hamilton, 73 L. J. Ch. 128; [1904] 1 Ch. 260; 90 L. T. 223; 52 W. R. 150—Byrne, J.

(c) Negligence of Trustee.

Fund Misappropriated by Law Agent—Liability of Trustees.]—Trustees allowed their law agent to receive a portion of the trust fund in July, 1887. On December 19 following the law agent, at a meeting of the trustees, stated that he had not been able to find an investment, but the money was on deposit receipt. On being produced a day or two afterwards the deposit receipt was found to be in the law agent's name, and to bear date December 20, 1887. The trustees requested that it should be deposited in the trustees' names. Enquiries were repeatedly made and a letter written to the law agent demanding the alteration, but the trustees were told that the law agent had met with a serious accident. On January 19 the trustees learnt that the agent was in embarrassed circumstances. A new agent was employed, but it was discovered that the fund had been realised by the former agent on January 18. He subsequently became bankrupt. The trust disposition and settlement contained a clause that the trustees were not to be liable for any agent who in transacting the business of the trust should receive any part of the estate:—

Held (LORD MORRIS dissenting), that the trustees were not exempted from liability by the immunity clause, and must replace the fund with interest. Wyman v. Paterson, 69 L. J. P.C. 32; [1900] A.C. 271; 82 L. T. 473—H.L. (Sc.)

Per LORD DAVEY.—The immunity clause only applies to the intromissions of a factor or agent within the legitimate scope of his agency, which does not authorise him to retain the money in his own control. Ib.

Per LORD MACNAGHTEN.—The proviso to section 2, sub-section 2 of the Trustee Act, 1888, reproduced in section 17 of the Trustee Act, 1893, that a trustee is to enjoy no exemption from liability if he allows money to remain longer than is necessary in the hands of a banker or solicitor is declaratory of the law of England, and must by analogy be treated as applicable in the case of Scottish trustees. Ib.

(d) Trustee Buying for Himself.

Transfer to Trustee of Executory Contract of Sale to a Stranger—Release by Beneficiaries.—It is well-settled law that a trustee for sale cannot purchase the trust property, and a title based on such a conveyance cannot be forced on a subsequent purchaser. The defect will not be cured by proof that the trustee so purchasing was transferee of an executory contract by which a stranger to the trust had agreed to buy the property, or by a release which fails explicitly to disclose the true state of facts. The burden of proof lies on the purchasing trustee that the parties to the conveyance to him were at arm's length, had the fullest information on all material facts and adopted the transaction. Williams v. Scott, 69 L. J. P.C. 77; [1900] A.C. 499; 82 L. T. 727; 49 W. R. 33—P.C.

(e) Profit out of Trust.

Remuneration Received by Trustees as Directors of a Company—Capital or Income—Tenant for Life and Remaindermen.—Where trustees hold shares belonging to the trust, and they are appointed directors of the company in respect of such holding, and there is no provision in the will enabling them to retain their remuneration as such directors for their own benefit, they must account for such remuneration to the trust, and the remuneration is to be treated as capital and will go to the remaindermen as an accretion to their shares. Noble v. Cass (2 Sim. 343) distinguished. Francis, In re; Barrett v. Fisher, 74 L. J. Ch. 198; 92 L. T. 77—Kekewich, J.

(f) Representation as to Incumbrances.

Mortgage—Trustee—Prior Incumbrances—Statement by Trustee—Statement Obtained through Suppression of Material Facts.—During negotiations for a loan on a beneficiary's interest in a trust fund, the plaintiffs were informed by the solicitors to the trustees that they never advised trustees to sign statements to the effect that the beneficiary had not incumbered his interest. Withholding this fact from one of the trustees, the plaintiffs obtained such a statement from him. He signed it under the impression, induced by the plaintiffs, that what he was doing was with the approval of the solicitors to the trust. After completion, a prior valid mortgage, which had been forgotten, was discovered. In an action against the trustee to make good their loss, the plaintiffs claimed that he was estopped by the representation contained in his signed statement from alleging any prior incumbrance:—Held, that the plaintiffs could not set up as an estoppel a statement obtained in such circumstances. Porter v. Moore, 73 L. J. Ch. 729; [1904] 2 Ch. 367; 91 L. T. 484; 52 W. R. 619—Swinfen Eady, J.

(g) Co-Trustee.

Fraud of—Inscribed Stock—"Stock receipt"—Negligence—Liability.—One of two co-trustees, who was also a stockbroker, had in his hands a certain sum of money which it was intended to invest in inscribed West Australian stock. In due course he shewed his co-trustee the usual bought-note for this stock, and also the usual "stock receipt" signed by the vendor and by the bank clerk at the time of the purchase. The co-trustee did not attend at the time of the purchase, nor did he afterwards make enquiries at the bank as to whether the stock had actually been transferred into the names of himself and of the broker-trustee. It appeared, however, from the evidence that it was not the usual practice among business men either thus to attend at the time of the transfer or to institute such subsequent enquiries; but that they were content to rest upon the evidence of the "stock receipt," though this was not a document of title. It was finally discovered that the "stock receipt" was a forgery, that no such purchase of West Australian stock had ever been made, and that the broker-trustee had embezzled the money:—Held, that the co-trustee was not liable for the loss of the trust money resulting from the fraud of the broker-trustee, as he had taken all the precautions that were usually taken in such a case by an ordinary prudent man of business in the conduct of his own affairs. Shepherd v. Harris, 74 L. J. Ch. 574; [1905] 2 Ch. 310; 93 L. T. 45; 53 W. R. 570; 21 T. L. R. 597—Farwell, J.

Principal Debtor—Surety—Indemnities—Release of Debt.—Where the life tenant (a married woman) of the income from investments of a settled fund of 30,000*l.*, having a power of appointment by will over the capital and income of the same, requested the trustees to sell so much as would realise the sum of 10,000*l.*, which she was desirous of handing to her husband, himself one of the trustees, and where, all parties understanding that the said sale and payment were breaches of trust, the other trustee only consented on the life tenant and the co-trustee agreeing to enter into a contract to indemnify him against all claims, and where the said sum was not repaid to the life tenant prior to her death, nor to her estate since her death upon the demand of the other trustee,—Held, that the husband of the life tenant was the principal debtor to his wife's estate, and that she was surety. Held, further, that upon the true construction of the will of the life tenant, the 10,000*l.* passed to the husband. Baird, In re; Baird v. Staveley Hill, 47 W. R. 277—Kekewich, J.

(h) Statute of Limitations.

Trustee Ceasing to be Executor—Breach of Trust—Account—Real Property Limitation Act.]

—A testator directed three persons, whom he appointed his executors and trustees, to set apart a sum to provide an annuity for his wife, and subject thereto to divide his residuary estate and the capital set apart to provide the annuity equally between A and the three executors and trustees. The share of A to be held in trust for her and her children. On the death of the widow of the testator in 1873, the executors and trustees divided the property into four parts, paying one fourth to A absolutely, and the other three fourths to themselves. A died in 1892, and the fourth part to which her children became entitled was not then forthcoming, and in 1900 one of her daughters brought an action against the executors and trustees for an account and payment of what was due to her as one of the children of A:—Held, that the defendants had ceased to be executors and had become trustees in 1873, and that therefore section 8 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, did not apply to the claim, but it came within section 8 of the Trustee Act, 1888, and the trustees not having retained or converted the property to their own use were protected by that section. Timmis, In re; Nixon v. Smith, 71 L. J. Ch. 118; [1902] 1 Ch. 176; 85 L. T. 672; 50 W. R. 164—Kekewich, J. And see LIMITATIONS, STATUTES OF, col. 1279.

(i) Relief.

Relief under Judicial Trustees Act—“Honestly and reasonably.”—A trustee to be entitled to relief under section 3 of the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, must act both honestly and reasonably; the mere fact that he acted honestly is not sufficient. Barker, In re; Ravenshaw v. Barker, 77 L. T. 712; 46 W. R. 296—North, J.

“Honestly and reasonably.”—An action was brought to make trustees responsible for selling settled leaseholds, whereby the income of the plaintiff, who was entitled to a moiety of the rents during her life, was diminished. The trustees had no power to sell the leaseholds, but sold them under the erroneous view, sanctioned by their solicitors, that they had such a power. The trustees did not take counsel's opinion or apply to the Court for directions, and before discovering their mistake they had entered into contracts which would have made an application to the Court useless. The sale would have been a proper one in other respects if the trustees had in fact possessed a power of sale:—Held, that the trustees had acted “honestly and reasonably,” and must be relieved from personal liability. Perrins v. Bellamy, 68 L. J. Ch. 397; [1899] 1 Ch. 797; 80 L. T. 478; 47 W. R. 417—U.A.

Fraud of Solicitor's Clerk—Conduct of Trust Business—Cheque Book left with Solicitors.—A lady who succeeded to the office of trustee on the death of her husband, and lived at a distance from London, employed the solicitors to the trust, as her agents, to do the business for her. The solicitors had the custody of the cheque book, and drew cheques when required, which they sent to the lady to sign with a letter of instructions. A clerk to the solicitors, who was well known to the lady, obtained her signature to cheques to the amount of 129*l.* upon a forged letter of instructions purporting to come from the solicitors, requesting her to sign them, and to initial the alteration in two of the cheques from “order” to “bearer.” The clerk cashed the cheques and absconded:—Held, that under all the circumstances, the lady had not acted otherwise than reasonably, and could not be held liable to make good the loss to the estate. Smith, In re; Smith v. Thompson, 71 L. J. Ch. 411; 86 L. T. 401—Kekewich, J.

Excessive Advance on Mortgage.]—The trustees of a settlement invested the sum of 4,500*l.*, forming part of the funds subject to the settlement, by way of mortgage. When the mortgage was taken no actual valuation of the property comprised in the security was made, but the greater part of the property (which was adjacent to the remainder) had been bought at public auction in the previous year by the mortgagor at a rate which would have given to the property comprised in the security the value of 7,167*l.* The true value of the property at the time of the mortgage was, however, 6,394*l.*, so that the sum actually advanced by the trustees exceeded the two-thirds value by 237*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* The trustees acted under the advice of the solicitors to the trust. In an action against the surviving trustee for the payment of this sum of 237*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* and interest thereon, the trustee sought relief under section 3 of the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896. The Court found that the trustee had acted honestly and not unreasonably, but refused to excuse him altogether; and directed him to make good the sum of 237*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, no order being made as to the costs of the action. Waite v. Parkinson, 85 L. T. 456—Joyce, J.

Sale of Leaseholds—No Power of Sale—Power to Excuse.]—An action was brought to make trustees responsible for selling settled leaseholds whereby the income of the plaintiff who was entitled to a moiety of the rents and profits in specie during her life, was diminished. The trustees had no power to sell the leaseholds, but sold them under the erroneous view that they had such a power, and the sale would have been a proper one in other respects if the trustees had in fact possessed a power of sale. THE COURT, under the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, s. 3, holding that the trustees had acted “honestly and reasonably, and ought fairly to be excused for the breach of trust,” relieved them wholly from personal liability, and directed the plaintiffs to pay the costs of the action. Scope and meaning of section 3 of the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, considered. Perrins v. Bellamy, 67 L. J. Ch. 649; [1898] 2 Ch. 521; 79 L. T. 109; 46 W. R. 632—Kekewich, J.

Power to Invest on Real Securities in England, Wales, or Ireland—Puisne Mortgage in Ireland—Irish Law—Breach of Trust—Liability of Trustee—Acting “honestly and reasonably"—No Independent Advice.]—The trustees of a marriage settlement were authorised to invest the trust funds in certain stocks or on real securities in England, Wales, or Ireland. Without the consent of one of the cestuis que trust, the trustees invested the trust funds on the security of a puisne mortgage of land in Ireland which ranked fifth in a series of incumbrances on the mortgaged property. In making the investment the trustees accepted the valuation of the property which had been made by the mortgagor's valuer, and they were not independently advised as to the propriety of the investment. The funds having been lost,—Held, that the trustees were liable for the loss, as, although by Irish law there is less risk in taking a puisne mortgage in Ireland than is involved in taking the like security in England, owing to the operation of the Irish registration system and the fact that in Ireland tacking and foreclosure are unknown, the investment in question was not one which prudent trustees ought to make. Held, also, that, although the trustees had acted "honestly," they had not acted "reasonably," and were therefore not entitled to relief under section 3 of the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896. Chapman v. Browne, 71 L. J. Ch. 465; [1902] 1 Ch. 785; 86 L. T. 744—C.A.

—Erroneous Advice of Solicitor Acted upon —Trustee Company not Gratuitous Trustees.]—Under the Victorian Trusts Act, 1901, s. 3 (corresponding with the English Act 59 & 60 Vict. c. 35), a trustee may be relieved from liability for breach of trust if he has acted honestly and reasonably, and ought fairly to be excused:—Held, that, by the true construction of this section, a trustee does not entitle himself to relief by proving that he has acted reasonably and honestly. He must shew that under all the circumstances he ought fairly to be excused for his breach of trust. National Trustees Co. of Australasia v. General Finance Co., 74 L. J. P.C. 73; [1905] A.C. 373; 92 L. T. 736; 54 W. R. 1; 21 T. L. R. 522—P.C.

J. F., being entitled to the whole of his deceased wife's proportion of a fund of which the appellants became trustees, assigned the same to the respondents. Under the erroneous advice of their solicitors, in accordance with an Act which was not passed till after the wife's death, the appellants paid two-thirds of the fund to the wife's children and one-third into Court under the Act for relief of trustees without question by the respondents, who accepted the appellants' statement as to their rights without verification. In a suit by the respondents to recover the said two-thirds,—Held, First, that the payment thereof to the children was a breach of trust, and that it was no defence that it had been made upon erroneous advice of the solicitors. (Doyle v. Blake, 2 Sch. & Lef. 231, approved.) Secondly, that the respondents having accepted and acted upon the appellants' statement as to their rights was no evidence of acquiescence. Thirdly, that, although the appellants had acted honestly and reasonably, they had shewn no title to be excused. They had made no attempt to replace the fund in whole or in part nor explained the reason for their abstention. They were not gratuitous trustees, and could not throw upon the respondents, who were not in fault, the loss of a fund which they had misapplied in the course of their business. Ib.

Administration Action — Devastavit — Misappropriation by Solicitors—Executors' Liability —Relief.]—The defendants, who were executors, employed a firm of solicitors of high repute to act for them in an action for the administration of their testator's estate. In reliance upon the express statements of one of the partners that his firm had exhausted all the moneys of the estate in their hands, and required further sums for administration purposes, the defendants, from time to time, made payments of large amount without investigating the firm's accounts. The solicitors were thereby enabled to misappropriate a considerable sum which was ultimately lost to the estate by the firm's bankruptcy. The beneficiary sought to charge the defendants with the loss:—Held, that in the circumstances the defendants were entitled to the benefit of section 3 of the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, and ought to be excused from personal liability. Bacon v. Bacon (5 Ves. 331) applied. De Clifford (Lord), In re; De Clifford (Lord) v. Quilter, 69 L. J. Ch. 828; [1900] 2 Ch. 707; 83 L. T. 160—Farwell, J.

Will—Doubtful Construction—Application for Directions.]—Executors and trustees who have left outstanding a debt forming part of the estate of their testator, and have thereby lost part of the sum due, will be relieved under section 3 of the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, from the consequences of their action, where the construction of the will under which they are acting is doubtful, and they have thought that on a reasonable interpretation of it, it was not their duty to call in the debt. Grindey, In re; Clews v. Grindey, 67 L. J. Ch. 624; [1898] 2 Ch. 593; 79 L. T. 105; 47 W. R. 53—C.A.

Where the estate and the amount in question are small, it may be reasonable that the trustees should not apply to the Court for directions in regard to the administration of the trust. Ib.

(j) Indemnity.

Trustees Carrying on Testator's Business—Debts Properly Incurred—Defaulting Trustee—Right of Innocent Trustees to Indemnity—Creditors of Business—Subrogation.]—Where trustees, under powers in that behalf, have carried on their testator's business after his death and employed his trust estate therein, and one of them has made default for which he alone is liable, the creditors of the business will not, on account of such default, be precluded from their right to rank against the testator's estate by subrogation to the right of the innocent trustee to be indemnified in respect of debts properly incurred by the trustees in carrying on the business. The principle of Dowse v. Gorton (60 L. J. Ch. 745; [1891] A.C. 190) and Johnson, In re; Shearman v. Robinson (49 L. J. Ch. 745; 15 Ch. D. 548), applied. Frith, In re; Newton v. Rolfe, 71 L. J. Ch. 199; [1902] 1 Ch. 842; 86 L. T. 212—Kekewich, J.

Same Person both Trustee and Beneficiary—Overpayment to Co-beneficiaries—Underpayment to Himself—Absence of Mistake—Right of Adjustment.]—A trustee, in administering an estate bequeathed to his brothers and himself for their respective lives, during a period of seventeen years made payments of income to the beneficiaries in irregular sums not corresponding with their respective shares, with the result that at his death he had overpaid his brothers and underpaid himself. The payments were not paid by mistake, and his brothers' attention was not called to the fact that they were being overpaid:—Held, that his estate was not entitled to be repaid the amount overpaid. Horne, In re; Wilson v. Cox-Sinclair, 74 L. J. Ch. 25; [1905] 1 Ch. 76; 92 L. T. 263; 53 W. R. 317—Warrington, J.

Tort of Trustee—Liability of Trust Estate for—Trustee's Right of Indemnity—Subrogation.]—Where damages have been recovered against a trustee in respect of a tort committed in the ordinary management of the trust estate, the person recovering can avail himself of the trustee's right of indemnity, and proceed directly against the trust estate. Raybould, In re; Raybould v. Turner, 69 L. J. Ch. 249; [1900] 1 Ch. 199; 82 L. T. 46; 48 W. R. 301—Byrne, J.

Indemnity from Co-Trustee.]—A trustee who is an active participator in a breach of trust, and is not proved to have participated merely in consequence of the advice and control of a co-trustee, who is a solicitor, cannot obtain indemnity for the consequences of the breach of trust from the co-trustee. Head v. Gould, 47 L. J. Ch. 480; [1898] 2 Ch. 250; 78 L. T. 739; 46 W. R. 597—Kekewich, J.

7. APPOINTMENT OF NEW TRUSTEES.

Power of Appointing—Executors of Last Surviving Trustees—Appointment of One of Themselves—Validity.]—There is no rule of law which prohibits the donee of a power of appointing new trustees from appointing himself, but such an appointment should only be made where the circumstances are very exceptional. Where, therefore, a testator by will empowered his trustees, or the executors or administrators of the last acting trustee, "to appoint a new trustee or trustees," it was held that the four executors of the last surviving trustee, not being excluded by the language of the power from the class of persons who could be appointed new trustees, it was competent to them in the special circumstances of the case to appoint one of their number with others a new trustee of the will. Skeats, In re; Skeats v. Evans (58 L. J. Ch. 656; 42 Ch. D. 522), and Newen, In re; Newen v. Barnes (63 L. J. Ch. 763; [1894] 2 Ch. 297), explained. Montefiore v. Guedalla (No. 2), 73 L. J. Ch. 13; [1903] 2 Ch. 723; 89 L. T. 472; 52 W. R. 151—Buckley, J.

Appointment of Limited Company as Joint Trustee—Validity.]—A limited company may be a trustee, and may hold trust property in joint tenancy with a natural person as co-trustee. Where a settlement contains a power for the appointment of a new trustee, the donee of the power is entitled to appoint a limited company as such trustee jointly with a continuing trustee, in the absence of indications in the settlement of a contrary intention. Thompson's Settlement Trusts, In re; Thompson

v. Alexander, 74 L. J. Ch. 133; [1905] 1 Ch. 229; 91 L. T. 835; 21 T. L. R. 86—Swinfen Eady, J.

Personal Representative of Last Surviving Trustee Appointing Himself.]—The power of appointing new trustees given by section 10, sub-section 1 of the Trustee Act, 1893, does not enable a donee of the power to appoint himself a trustee, as the words "another person or other persons" mean some person or persons other than the person appointing. Montefiore v. Guedalla (No. 2) (73 L. J. Ch. 13; [1903] 2 Ch. 723) explained and applied. Sampson, In re; Sampson v. Sampson, 75 L. J. Ch. 302; [1906] 1 Ch. 435; 94 L. T. 241; 54 W. R. 342—Kekewich, J.

Last Surviving Trustee—Personal Representative—Executor not Proving.]—The last surviving trustee of a testator, H. R. B., who died in 1877, appointed three executors by his will. One proved, and two neither proved nor renounced. In 1894 the proving executor alone purported to appoint new trustees of the will of H. R. B. during the life of the non-proving executors. The will of H. R. B. contained a clause which effected an incorporation of the provisions of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145 (commonly called Lord Cranworth's Act):—Held, that the appointment was good, because—first, section 71 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, keeps alive the powers of Lord Cranworth's Act in the case of previous instruments with which that Act was incorporated, and section 27 of Lord Cranworth's Act provides that "acting" personal representatives may appoint; and secondly, the non-proving executors having in fact died without proving, representation to their testator under the Court of Probate Act, 1858, s. 16, went and devolved as if they had never been appointed executors. Boucherett, In re; Barne v. Erskine, 77 L. J. Ch. 205; [1908] 1 Ch. 180; 93 L. T. 32—Joyce, J.

Quære, whether the words "personal representatives" in the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, s. 31, and the Trustee Act, 1893, s. 10, include executors who have neither proved nor renounced. Ib.

Powers Vested in Two Trustees to be Exercised by One.]—A testator devised and bequeathed his real and personal estate to his wife and eldest son on trust for sale, but with unlimited powers of postponing sale and of management meantime, and of paying legacies before the time specified in the will, and appointed his wife and eldest son executrix and executor. By a subsequent clause in the will the testator declared that so long as his son should be a trustee of his will all the powers vested in his trustees should be exercised by his son solely as if he were sole trustee, with complete power of management, and of selling and buying and varying investments without the concurrence of or reference to his co-trustees:—Held, that the effect of the clause was to vest in the son during his life the powers conferred on the trustees in the earlier clauses of the will as if he were sole trustee, so as to bind the widow to carry out his decisions arrived at in good faith, and that the clause was not inconsistent with the rest of the will, nor invalid nor void. Arnott v. Arnott, [1899] 1 Ir. R. 201—M.R.

Existing Trustees—Vesting Order.]—The jurisdiction of the Court to make a vesting order under sections 26 and 35 of the Trustee Act, 1893, embraces a case where the trustees in whom the property is to be vested have been already appointed. Kenny's Trusts, In re, [1906] 1 Ir. R. 531—M.R.

Validity—Trustee Remaining Abroad for More than Twelve Months—Short Visit to England during that Period.]—Where a trustee who went abroad in April, 1899, paid a visit to England in November, 1899, for about a week, during which visit he attended to the trust matters, and his co-trustee in June, 1900, purported to appoint a new trustee in his place under the power contained in section 10 of the Trustee Act, 1893, it was held that the original trustee had not remained "out of the United Kingdom for more than twelve months," and that consequently the appointment of the new trustee was invalid. Walker, In re; Summers v. Barrow, 70 L. J. Ch. 229; [1901] 1 Ch. 259; 49 W. R. 167—Farwell, J.

Lunatic not so Found—Consols—Vesting Order—Jurisdiction.]—Semble, the High Court has no jurisdiction under the Trustee Act, 1893, to make a vesting order in the case of a lunatic trustee. M., In re, 68 L. J. Ch. 86; [1899] 1 Ch. 79; 79 L. T. 459; 47 W. R. 267—Stirling, J.

Where Consols were standing in the name of the surviving trustee of a settlement who was a lunatic not so found by inquisition, the Court declined to make a vesting order, but appointed new trustees. Ib.

Judicial Trustee—Person not Named in Summons—Jurisdiction.]—On an application to appoint a named person or the official solicitor as judicial trustee, if the Court is not satisfied of the fitness of the named person there is jurisdiction to appoint a third person suggested by the retiring judicial trustee. Douglas v. Bolam, 70 L. J. Ch. 1; [1900] 2 Ch. 749; 83 L. T. 448; 49 W. R. 163—C.A.

—Appointment by Court.]—The appointment of a judicial trustee under the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, is entirely a matter within the discretion of the Court; and the Court refused to appoint a judicial trustee of a will at the instance of the residuary legatee in remainder against the wish of the tenant for life and sole executrix, who was seventy-two years of age and against whom no misconduct was alleged; but, the case being a proper one for the Court to appoint a trustee, directed an appointment to be made in the usual way under the Trustee Act, 1893. Ratcliffe, In re, 67 L. J. Ch. 562; [1898] 2 Ch. 352; 78 L. T. 834—Kekewich, J.

8. RETIREMENT OF TRUSTEE.

Power of Court to Permit Retirement without Substitution—Administration.]—The Court possesses no jurisdiction under section 25 or any other section of the Trustee Act, 1893, to allow a trustee to retire from his trust without appointing a new trustee in his place. Aston, In re (23 Ch. D. 217), followed. Chetwynd's Settlement, In re, 71 L. J. Ch. 352; [1902] 1 Ch. 692; 86 L. T. 216; 50 W. R. 361—Farwell, J.

The Court, however, possesses in administrative proceedings an inherent jurisdiction to allow a trustee to retire without appointing any new trustee in his place, and will exercise it if the desire to retire is reasonable, and there are not special circumstances in the case that render such retirement inadvisable. Courtenay v. Courtenay (3 Jo. & Lat. 519) explained and followed. Ib.

9. PAYMENT INTO AND OUT OF COURT.

Payment into Court of Legacy—Discretion of Trustee.]—A testator directed his executors and trustees to invest a sum of 1,100l. and apply the income in payment to his son A. of a weekly sum for maintenance, with a half-yearly allowance for clothes, until they should be of opinion that it would be prudent to pay him the principal, with a gift over in the event of A. dying before receiving the principal. The income of the 1,100l. was applied as directed by the executor who proved the will, and after his death by his executors, who afterwards paid the principal into Court under the Trustee Act, 1893. A. applied for payment out:—Held, that the payment into Court deprived the executors of the executor of any discretion they had as to payment of the principal. A. having consented to the settlement of the fund for the benefit of his wife and children, the fund was ordered to be paid out to the trustees of a proper settlement, when appointed. Murphy's Trusts, In re, [1900] 1 Ir. R. 145—M.R.

Payment out of Court—Presumption of Death—Security to Refund.]—Where an application is made for the payment out of Court of funds by persons claiming as upon the presumption of death by reason of seven years' absence of the person to whose credit the funds stand, and the Court is satisfied with the evidence, it is not in accordance with modern practice for the Court to require security to refund before making the order for payment out. B.'s Trusts, In re, 53 W. R. 491—Warrington, J.

10. REMUNERATION.

Charge for Services—Will—Construction.]—A testator directed that "any trustee or executor hereunder being a solicitor or other person engaged in any profession or business shall be entitled to charge and be paid all usual pro-professional or other charges for any business done by him or his firm in relation to the management and administration of my estate . . . whether in the ordinary course of his profession or business or not and although not of a nature strictly requiring the employment of a solicitor or other professional person":—Held, that, under this clause, a trustee could not charge for his time and trouble except in the course, whether ordinary or not, of his profession or business. Fish, In re; Bennett v. Bennett (62 L. J. Ch. 977; [1893] 2 Ch. 413), distinguished. Clarkson v. Robinson, 69 L. J. Ch. 859; [1900] 2 Ch. 722; 83 L. T. 164; 48 W. R. 698—Buckley, J.

11. COSTS.

Costs of Action—"Honestly."—The trustee of a deed of dissolution of a building society was ordered to pay the plaintiff's costs of an action for an account, where, through his negligence and complete reliance on his co-trustee (who had absconded), defalcation to the extent of some 400l. had taken place, which the trustee had himself made good. Second East Dulwich 745th Starr Bowkett Building Society, In re, 68 L. J. Ch. 196; 79 L. T. 726; 47 W. R. 408—Kekewich, J.

A trustee who does nothing, accepts without enquiry what is said by his co-trustee, and is satisfied with any explanation given by him, does not act "honestly" within the meaning of the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, s. 3. Ib.

Action to Set Aside Settlement.—The Court has a discretion, at any rate where the order is made setting aside as against creditors only a settlement within the scope of 13 Eliz. c. 5, to allow the trustees their costs of defending the action to set aside the settlement out of the trust funds. Merry v. Pownall (67 L. J. Ch. 162; [1898] 1 Ch. 306) followed. Elsey v. Cox (26 Beav. 95) distinguished. Ideal Bedding Co. v. Holland, 76 L. J. Ch. 441; [1907] 2 Ch. 157; 96 L. Solicitor-Trustee—Costs—Right to Charge for Non-professional Services—"All professional and other charges for his time and trouble"—Taxation.—A testator directed that one of his executors and trustees, who was a solicitor, should be the solicitor to the trust, and should be allowed "all professional and other charges for his time and trouble notwithstanding his being such executor and trustee":—Held, that the solicitor-trustee was not entitled to charge for work done capable of being done by a trustee personally, and not requiring the employment of a solicitor. Ames, In re; Ames v. Taylor (25 Ch. D. 72), and Fish, In re; Bennett v. Bennett (62 L. J. Ch. 977; [1893] 2 Ch. 413), distinguished. Chalinder & Herrington, In re; 76 L. J. Ch. 71; [1907] 1 Ch. 58; 96 L. UNDUE INFLUENCE.

(See also col. 875.)

Unfair Transaction—Beneficiaries Ignorant of their Rights induced by Relatives to give Promissory Notes.—Beneficiaries under a settlement were induced by relatives, by whom they had been brought up, to sign promissory notes given by the relatives to a creditor, and under pressure of legal proceedings to assign their interest in the settled lands, which were in the possession of the relatives, to enable them to mortgage the lands to the creditor. The beneficiaries were only just of age, ignorant of their rights, and without any effective legal advice:—Held, that the transaction was procured by undue influence, and was unfair, and that the assignment and mortgage should be set aside. O'Connor v. Foley, [1905] 1 Ir. R. 1—M.R.

Mother and Daughter—Attainment of Age by Latter—Dealing with Daughter's Property—Absence of Professional Advice.—M. died intestate, being possessed of real estate and personalty, including leaseholds, leaving a widow and one daughter under age. The widow took out administration, and deposited the lease of the leaseholds with a bank as security for an overdraft and for money advanced on bills. The bank had full knowledge of the insolvent condition of the widow's affairs and of the daughter's age and circumstances. A few days before the daughter came of age the bank, deeming the security insufficient, applied peremptorily to the mother for payment. At an interview with the managing director, shortly after the daughter came of age, the mother offered to secure payment of the overdraft by a joint promissory note of herself and her daughter. The daughter, who was present, being asked to join, expressed her willingness by saying "Yes." Some time afterwards the bank again pressed the mother for payment, but consented to allow a short extension of the time for payment if the mother and daughter signed a joint promissory note, payable on demand, for the entire debt. Two promissory notes for the amount were prepared by the bank and signed by the mother and daughter. The local manager stated in evidence that on the occasion of the signing of the notes he explained to the daughter that she would be liable for the whole amount, and that, in the event of the failure to pay the debt on the part of her mother the bank would look to her; and that the daughter replied that she understood all that. She had not, on this or any other occasion, independent advice:—Held, that the bank could not in these circumstances recover against the daughter. M'Mackin v. Hibernian Bank, [1905] 1 Ir. R. 296—Barton, J.

Solicitor and Client—Confidential Relationship—Gift and Sale to Solicitor—Validity—Competent Independent Advice.—In dealing with a case of a gift by a client to his solicitor the Court starts with a presumption of undue influence on the part of the donee continuing so long as the relation of solicitor and client, or the influence attributable thereto, continues. The presumption is not irrebuttable, but the onus is on the solicitor of shewing that the gift was uninfluenced by his position of solicitor. The fact that the donor had the competent independent advice of a different solicitor is material as tending to shew that the influence had ceased. But the new solicitor called in must not only satisfy himself that the donor knew what he was doing, and did it of his own will: he must also inform himself of the donor's financial position, and the circumstances under which the transaction was taking place, and satisfy himself that the gift was proper for the donor to make under all the circumstances of the case; otherwise he will not be in a position to give competent independent advice. Wright v. Carter, 72 L. J. Ch. 138; [1903] 1 Ch. 27; 87 L. T. 624; 51 W. R. 196—C.A.

The fact that the donee remains the solicitor of the donor in matters other than the transaction in question suggests the inference that his influence had not ceased as regards the particular matter. Ib.

The law laid down in Hatch v. Hatch (9 Ves. 292), Holman v. Loynes (23 L. J. Ch. 529; 4 De G. M. & G. 270), and Powell v. Powell (69 L. J. Ch. 164, 166; [1900] 1 Ch. 243, 247) applied. Ib.

Benefits conferred by a deed benefiting the solicitor upon other persons, but not induced by the same motives as the gift to the solicitor, or derived in any way from any undue influence on his part, the consideration in the two cases being separable, can stand, although the deed should be set aside as regards the gifts to the solicitor. Ib.

In a transaction of sale from a client to his solicitor the onus is on the solicitor to shew that the client knew what he was doing, that he was properly advised, and that a fair price was given. Ib.

Per STIRLING, L.J.—The advice to the client should be competent independent advice. Per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—Quære, whether in every case of a purchase by a solicitor from his client competent independent advice is necessary, as distinguished from the advice of the purchasing-solicitor. A purchase transaction might be so manifestly fair that independent advice would not be considered necessary. The rule laid down in Tomson v. Judge (24 L. J. Ch. 785; 3 Drew. 306) applied. Ib. And see col. 875.

VACCINATION.

STATUTES.

61 & 62 Vict. c. 49 is the Vaccination Act, 1898.

7 Edw. 7 c. 31 is the Vaccination Act, 1907.

Neglect to Procure—Proceedings before Justices—Time.—The Vaccination Order, 1898, does not amount to fresh legislation, nor alter the procedure or the statutory conditions necessary to constitute an offence under sections 16 and 29 of the Vaccination Act, 1867, as amended by section 1, sub-section 1 of the Vaccination Act, 1898, and a prosecution commenced on July 12, 1900, for neglect to procure vaccination of a child born on December 30, 1898, is out of time. Langridge v. Hobbs, 70 L. J. K.B. 862; [1901] 1 K.B. 497; 84 L. T. 319; 19 Cox C.C. 671—D.

Notice to Parent.—Where the notice required by section 31 of the Vaccination Act, 1867, has been served upon a parent in respect of a child born in 1897, and not successfully vaccinated, it is unnecessary that the notice prescribed by section 1, sub-section 3 of the Vaccination Act, 1898, should also be served as a condition precedent to an application under section 31 of the Act of 1867. Pym v. Wilsher, 70 L. J. K.B. 1031; [1901] 2 K.B. 806; 85 L. T. 49; 49 W. R. 654; 65 J. P. 755; 20 Cox C.C. 16—D.

Child not Vaccinated when Six Months Old—Subsequent Medical Certificate.—A child aged eleven months not having been vaccinated, a summons was issued against the father. On the day before the summons was heard the appellant obtained a doctor's certificate that, owing to a complaint that the child was suffering from, it would be unsafe to vaccinate:—Held, that the certificate was no defence. Hinds v. Elsam, 88 L. T. 867; 67 J. P. 328; 20 Cox C.C. 490—D.

Order Signed but not Sealed—Validity of Subsequent Order.—An order was made by Justices under the Vaccination Act, 1867, requiring the appellant to have his child vaccinated within four weeks. This order, which was made on May 7, 1902, was signed but not sealed as required by section 31 of the Act. In proceedings for failure to obey the order objection was taken that it was not sealed, whereupon another order was made on June 25, 1902, duly signed and sealed by the two Justices who made the order of May 7, requiring the appellant to have his child vaccinated within four weeks from the date of this order:—Held, that the order of June 25 was invalid, and accordingly there was no order for the disobedience of which the appellant could be convicted. Nutter v. Moorhouse, 68 J. P. 134; 2 L. G. R. 1204—D.

Order to Cause Child to be Vaccinated—Non-compliance with Order—Evidence for Prosecution.—Upon an information under section 31 of the Vaccination Act, 1867, charging the defendant with omitting to comply with an order of Justices to cause his child to be vacinated, proof that no certificate has been received by the vaccination officer that the child has been successfully vaccinated, or that it is unfit to be vaccinated, or is insusceptible of successful vaccination, constitutes prima facie evidence that the child has not been vaccinated in conformity with the order. Over v. Harwood, 69 L. J. Q.B. 272; [1900] 1 Q.B. 803; 48 W. R. 608; 64 J. P. 326—D.

Proceedings under Section 29—No Further Notice—Proceedings under Section 31—Application to Child between Six and Eighteen Months Old.—After proper notice given to the appellant, a summons was taken out under section 29 of the Act of 1867, but this summons was dismissed. Without any further notice a summons was issued under section 31. No notice had been served by the public vaccinator under section 1, sub-section 3 of the Act of 1898, but he had visited the appellant's house to vaccinate the child, which was between six and eighteen months old:—Held, that an order under section 31 was rightly made. Bowden v. Toll, 85 L. T. 486; 50 W. R. 208; 66 J. P. 53; 20 Cox C.C. 62—D.

Prosecution of Offender—Right of Vaccination Officer to Prosecute—Direction of Guardians not to Prosecute.—A vaccination officer is empowered without directions general or special from the guardians in that behalf, and notwithstanding their directions to the contrary, to institute proceedings under section 29 of the Vaccination Act, 1867, as amended by the operation of section 1 of the Vaccination Act, 1898, against a parent neglecting without reasonable excuse to cause his child to be vaccinated. Moore v. Keyte, 71 L. J. K.B. 454; [1902] 1 K.B. 768; 86 L. T. 532; 50 W. R. 457; 66 J. P. 499—D.

Visit of Public Vaccinator, whether Condition Precedent.—It is not a condition precedent to a prosecution under section 29 of the Vaccination Act, 1867, as amended by the operation of section 1 of the Vaccination Act, 1898, that, pursuant to sub-section 3 of the latter section, the public vaccinator should have visited the home of the child and offered to vaccinate it. Id.

Conscientious Belief that Vaccination Prejudicial to Child's Health—Failure to Obtain Certificate—"Trifling" Offence—Jurisdiction of Court.—The fact that the parent of a child has repeatedly, within four months of the child's birth, sought without success to obtain a Justices' certificate of his conscientious belief that vaccination would be prejudicial to its health, is not sufficient to justify a Court of summary jurisdiction in dismissing an information preferred against the parent in respect of the non-vaccination of the child, as being for a "trifling" offence within the meaning of section 16 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879. Nisbet v. Lloyd, 2 L. G. R. 1277; 68 J. P. 396—D.

Exemption Certificate.—Where a magistrate to whom an application had been made for a certificate of exemption under section 2 of the Vaccination Act, 1898, filed an affidavit (in answer to a rule calling upon him to shew cause why he should not hear and determine an application for such a certificate) in which he stated that he had heard the application and had refused same on the ground that he was not satisfied that the applicant believed that vaccination would be prejudicial to the health of his child, the Court discharged the rule as the applicant had not satisfied the magistrate of his belief. Reg. v. Welby; Bird, ex parte, 63 J. P. 86—D.

— Refusal—Non-production of Birth Certificate of Child.—Upon an application for a certificate of exemption, under section 2, subsection 1 of the Vaccination Act, 1898, Justices have power to require the production of the birth certificate of the child in respect of whom the application is made, unless there is some reason why it cannot be produced. Reg. v. Lowndes, 68 L. J. Q.B. 318; [1893] 1 Q.B. 577; 80 L. T. 532; 47 W. R. 315; 63 J. P. 344—D.

Expenses of "necessary legal assistance."—Article 29 (1) of the Vaccination Order, 1898, made in pursuance of the Vaccination Acts, 1867 to 1898, leaves it to the vaccination officer to decide whether legal assistance is necessary in any proceeding instituted by him under the Acts, and where in the bona fide exercise of his discretion the vaccination officer engages legal assistance in such proceedings, the Court will not readily interfere with his decision, but will allow him the costs of same, when taxed, against the guardians. Hitchcock v. Wandsworth and Clapham Guardians, 63 J. P. 348; 2 L. G. R. 1260; 20 T. L. R. 458—Channell, J.

— Refusal of Guardians to Pay Costs of Solicitor Employed by Vaccination Officer.—Where guardians refused to pay the costs of a solicitor employed by their vaccination officer, alleging that his employment was not necessary, and that the charges were unreasonable, the Court ordered that a writ of mandamus should issue commanding the guardians "to pay to their vaccination officer the reasonable costs of obtaining necessary legal assistance in connection with the institution and conduct of proceedings taken by him for enforcing the provisions of the Vaccination Acts, 1867 and 1898," leaving the question as to the reasonableness, &c., of the particular bill of costs to be dealt with on the return by the guardians. Rea v. Wellenborough Union, 68 J. P. 179—D.

Appointment of Officer.—See MANDAMUS, col. 1447.

Statute.—60 & 61 Vict. c. 39 is the Vagrancy Act, 1898.

Idle and Disorderly Person—Disease Due to Wilful Intemperance—Sufferer Removed by Order to Workhouse Infirmary—Chargeability to Union—Neglect to Maintain Himself.—An attack of delirium tremens produced by the wilful intemperance of the sufferer, which renders him removable by order to a workhouse infirmary and consequently chargeable to the union, is not, upon his recovery, a ground for his conviction as an idle and disorderly person under section 3 of the Vagrancy Act, 1824. St. Saviour's Union v. Burbridge, 69 L. J. Q.B. 886; [1900]

2 Q.B. 695; 83 L. T. 317; 43 W. R. 685; 64 J. P. 582, 725; 19 Cox C.C. 573—D.

Refusal of Work Offered at Labour Colony—Vagrancy Act.—Upon the prosecution of an able-bodied pauper, under section 3 of the Vagrancy Act, 1824, as a person able wholly or in part to maintain himself and neglecting or refusing so to do, because he has refused work offered outside the workhouse for which he would receive board, lodging, and a small weekly wage, the Court must consider the conditions upon which such work has been offered, and whether "the pauper's refusal to accept it was or was not reasonable." Poplar Union v. Martin (No. 1), 91 L. T. 550; 2 L. G. R. 1012; 68 J. P. 526; 20 Cox C.C. 742; 20 T. L. R. 659—D. And see POOR LAW, cols. 1833, 1838.

Fortune-Telling—Intent to Deceive and Impose—Rogue and Vagabond.—The words "pretending or professing to tell fortunes" in section 4 of the Vagrancy Act, 1824, import an intent to deceive; and where Justices are satisfied that fortune-telling has been practised with intent to deceive and impose, a record of conviction that the defendant "did unlawfully pretend to tell fortunes contrary to the form of the statute," &c., is good, and need not aver that the defendant unlawfully pretended to tell fortunes "with intent to deceive and impose" on her Majesty's subjects. Reg. v. Entwistle, 68 L. J. Q.B. 580; [1899] 1 Q.B. 846; 80 L. T. 657; 63 J. P. 423; 19 Cox C.C. 317—D.

1. STATUTE.

60 & 61 Vict. c. 65 is the Land Transfer Act, 1897.

2. THE CONTRACT.

Contract to Give "First refusal" of Land—Outside Purchaser—Satisfaction of Contract—Definite Offer at Proposed Purchase-Price—Interest in Land—Breach of Original Contract—Injunction.]—An agreement by an owner of land to give to another person the "first refusal" of the land in certain events either means that he must on the happening of the events give the other person the opportunity of refusing a fair and reasonable offer, or that he must give the other person the opportunity of refusing the land at a price acceptable to the owner offered by some third person. The owner does not, on either view, comply with the condition if he offers the land to the first person at a price higher than he would accept from other would-be buyers in the event of the refusal of the first person to buy at that price. Manchester Ship Canal Co. v. Manchester Race-course Co., 70 L. J. Ch. 468; [1901] 2 Ch. 37; 84 L. T. 436; 49 W. R. 418—C.A.

Sale by Tender—"Highest net money tender"—Tender with Reference to other Possible Tender.]—The liquidator of the defendant company invited sealed tenders for the purchase of certain property of the company, and stated "the highest net money tender I receive, . . . that tender I will at once accept." B. offered 31,100l., and the plaintiffs offered "such a sum as will exceed by 200l. the amount to-day offered by the other proposing purchaser":—Held, that the plaintiffs' offer did not answer the description of "the highest net money tender." South Hetton Coal Co. v. Haswell, Shotton, and Easington Coal and Coke Co., 67 L. J. Ch. 238; [1898] 1 Ch. 465; 78 L. T. 366; 46 W. R. 355—C.A.

Sale by Order of Court.]—By an agreement dated December 15, 1900, the vendor agreed to sell to the purchaser certain hereditaments for 5,125l. Clause 6 of the contract was as follows: "All facts or matters appearing to be proved or certified by a chief clerk or master attached to the chambers of the said Judge, or to be stated or implied in any judgment or order in the action in which the sale is made, are to be deemed thereby sufficiently and conclusively evidenced, and the purchaser is to assume that all necessary and proper consents preliminary to a sale have been obtained, and is not to require the concurrence in the conveyance of any person beneficially interested whose rights appear to be bound by the judgment or order under which the sale is made." One of the abstracted deeds recited that D. and

S. had become entitled in equity to the premises. On this the purchaser made this requisition: "The title of D. and S. to the hereditaments voluntarily conveyed to them must be abstracted and produced. The recital that they had become entitled in equity is insufficient." The vendor declined to do this. The Court had made an order directing the property to be sold, and the mortgagees who held the legal estate were prepared to concur in the conveyance. The purchaser now asked for a declaration that the answer was insufficient:—Held, that, having regard to the contract, the purchaser got a good title, as she got the legal estate from the mortgagees, and the order for sale bound all parties having a beneficial interest. Whitham, In re; Whitham v. Davies, 84 L. T. 585; 49 W. R. 597—Cozens-Hardy, J. And see col. 2650.

"Frontages of 30 ft. each"—"Lots as shown on plan"—Lots Shewn as being of Equal Widths—Plan for Delineation only—Vendor not to Account for Discrepancies in Quantities—Lots not Marked out at Sale—Total Actual Frontage Exceeding 30 feet to a Lot—Right to Conveyance of Proportion of Total Frontage.]—Particulars of sale comprised lot 1, pasture land as shewn on plan, and lots 2 to 8, seven lots as shewn on plan, all having frontages of 30 feet each to the road. T. agreed to purchase a piece of land, lots 2 to 8, and to complete the purchase according to the conditions. None of the lots had been marked out at the date of the contract, but the plan was that of an oblong field abutting on the road (P. Lane) with eight oblong spaces of substantially equal widths marked off by straight lines parallel to each other and to the northern and southern boundary lines of the field, except that part of the northern boundary of the field and lot 1 inclined to the south-west shewing a narrower frontage where that lot abutted on P. Lane than the frontages of the other seven lots. Each lot was marked with its number and "30 ft.," and a note on the plan stated that it was for the purpose of delineation only. Condition 6 stated that the property should be taken to be correctly described and that the vendor should not be required to account for any discrepancies in the quantities. The total frontage of the field upon P. Lane was in fact more than eight frontages of 30 feet, and the vendor was willing to convey a frontage of 210 feet as stumped out by his agent in respect of the seven lots bought by T., but the purchaser claimed that as shewn on the plan he was entitled to seven-eighths of the entire frontage:—Held, that seven lots "as shown on plan" when read in conjunction with the sixth condition meant that the purchaser must take the lots as he found them whether having frontages more or less than 30 feet, and the lines of the plan must be taken to be correct; the purchaser therefore being entitled to a conveyance of that proportion of the land which the seven lots bore to the property described in the plan. Freeman and Taylor's Contract, In re, 97 L. T. 39—Kekewich, J.

Building Scheme—Plan—Implied Representation—Power to Vary—Vacant Space Used as Road—Subsequent Building on Road—Dedication to Public—Cul-de-sac.]—The plaintiff purchased a plot of land which was part of an estate laid out under a building scheme. Upon the plan annexed to the conveyance the adjoining plots were shewn as a vacant space, such space being used as a road, though only as a cul-de-sac. The conveyance was made subject to a power to vary the plan and conditions. In an action by the plaintiff to restrain the defendant from building on the vacant space in contravention of the building scheme,—Held, that the plan did not amount to a binding representation that the vacant space would always remain so; that the power to vary applied to this vacant space, and that it had not been dedicated to the public. Whitehouse v. Hugh, 75 L. J. Ch. 677; [1906] 2 Ch. 283; 95 L. T. 175; 22 T. L. R. 679—C.A. Affirming, 54 W. R. 294—Kekewich, J.

— Successive Sales—Rights against Purchasers at Subsequent Sales—Variations in Forms of Conveyance—Notice.—Where an estate is sold in parcels at successive sales and subject to restrictive stipulations contained in a building scheme, a purchaser at a prior sale cannot enforce against a purchaser at a subsequent sale stipulations in respect of property subsequently sold which were not formulated or promulgated at the date of the contract under which he claims. A purchaser with notice of a building scheme is bound by restrictions of which he has notice, and accidental departures in the form of conveyance purporting to relieve him from the observance of the restrictions are ineffective, and, conversely, are no bar to his title to sue. Rowell v. Satchell, 73 L. J. Ch. 20; [1903] 2 Ch. 212; 89 L. T. 267—Swinfen Eady, J.

The mere fact that a solicitor for the vendor inserts restrictive covenants in the draft conveyance, not warranted by the terms of the contract, some of which are waived and some insisted upon, is not sufficient to put the purchaser or his solicitor upon enquiry or fix him with notice that there is a building scheme. Ib.

Corner Plot—Rounded Corner—Plan—Land Fronting Specified Number of Feet on Road A—Depth Specified on Road B—Method of Measurement.—By contract of February 21, 1905, W. agreed to sell to P. "land situate in and fronting 133 feet upon" W. Road, having a "depth next O. H. Grove of 124 feet," more particularly delineated, together with the abutments, boundaries, and dimensions thereof (be the last named little more or less), upon the plan thereto. The plan shewed a piece of land with a slightly rounded corner at the junction of W. Road and O. H. Grove with frontage lines, marked respectively 133 feet and 124 feet, produced in a straight line so as almost to meet at the corner:—Held, that the purchaser, according to the representations in the contract, was entitled to a conveyance of land having 257 feet frontage, measured round the bend of the corner of W. Road and O. H. Grove, the vendor not being entitled to have the lines of frontage produced in straight lines to their point of intersection outside the bend in measuring the 133 feet and 124 feet respectively. Wellings and Parsons' Contract, In re, 97 L. T. 165—Kekewich, J.

Sale by Purchaser under Original Contract subject "to the same terms as to title, &c." as in such Original Contract—Time Fixed for Completion—Interest.—In May, 1897, B. contracted to sell to K. certain lands, the purchase to be completed on October 11, and failing completion on that date, interest to be paid by the purchaser at 5 per cent. on the balance of purchase-money then due. In June, 1897, K. contracted to sell the same premises to S., subject "to the same terms as to title, &c.," as in the original contract. S. eventually refused to complete until January. On a summons by K. asking for a declaration that October 11 was, by reference to the original contract, the time fixed for completion, and that the defendant might be ordered to pay interest from that date,—Held, that a clause of this kind which might possibly involve serious liability on the purchaser could not be read into the agreement of June, 1897, and that the contract was therefore an open one. But that, as interest was payable from the time when the purchaser could prudently have taken possession and the abstract was delivered on October 22, interest should run from November 1, 1897. Keeble and Stillwell's Fletton Brick Co., In re, 78 L. T. 383—Stirling, J.

Mortgage—Constructive Notice—Property in Occupation of Weekly Tenants—Enquiry of Tenants—Rents Paid to House Agent—Landlord's Title.—A tenant's occupation of property sold or mortgaged is notice to the purchaser or mortgagee of all that tenant's rights, but not of his lessor's title or rights. Actual knowledge, however, on the part of the purchaser or mortgagee that the rents are paid by the tenants to some person whose receipt is inconsistent with the title of the vendor or mortgagor, is notice of such person's rights. Hunt v. Luck, 70 L. J. Ch. 30; [1901] 1 Ch. 45; 83 L. T. 479; 49 W. R. 155—Farwell, J.

The mere fact that the rents of property let to weekly or yearly tenants are known to be paid to a house agent is not so inconsistent with an apparently good paper title to the property in the vendor or mortgagor as to put the purchaser or mortgagee on enquiry, or fix him with notice of the rights of the person for whom the agent collects the rents. Bailey v. Richardson (9 Hare, 734) and Barnhart v. Greenshields (9 Moore, P.C. 18) followed. Mumford v. Stolwasser (43 L. J. Ch. 694; L. R. 18 Eq. 556) not followed. Ib.

Payment on Account of Purchase-Money—Payment of Balance by Instalments—Default—Repudiation—Specific Performance—Recovery of Money Paid—Damages.—By a contract for sale of land, the purchaser, having already paid to the vendor 40L. on account of the purchase-money of 150L., agreed to pay the balance by quarterly instalments of 9L. 3s. 4d., with interest at 8 per cent. on the unpaid instalments, with a provision for extending the time for payment at an increase of interest to be determined by both parties. By clause 8 the vendor, in the event of default in payment of the instalments, was to be at liberty to re-sell and retain out of the proceeds unpaid instalments, and was to pay the balance to the purchaser. The purchaser was let into possession according to the contract, and paid all the instalments except the last, when he disappeared for more than a year, and the vendor not being able to effect a sale let the property to a tenant. The purchaser re-appeared and offered to pay the last instalment, and this being refused sued the vendor for specific performance or damages:—Held, that, though the plaintiff was not entitled to specific performance nor to recover the instalments on the ground of a total failure of consideration, he was entitled to damages for the vendor's non-performance of the contract, which on the facts of the case the Court considered had not been repudiated or abandoned by either party. Cornwall v. Henson, 69 L. J. Ch. 581; [1900] 2 Ch. 298; 82 L. T. 735; 49 W. R. 42—C.A.

Quere, whether clause 8 of the contract was an optional remedy, or whether it defined the vendor's only remedy in the events specified. Ib.

Lease—Building Plots—Plots to be Intersected by "intended road"—Words of Abuttal Amounting to implied Grant of Easement.—A lessor demised two plots of ground to a lessee. Lot A was described as bounded "on the east by an intended road to be thirty-eight feet wide intersecting said lot from lot B hereinafter demised." Lot B was described as bounded on the west "by said intended road 38 feet wide, intersecting said lot from lot A":—Held, that from the words of the lease describing with such particularity the abuttal of the two lots upon an intended intersecting road "to be" thirty-eight feet wide there was to be implied a grant of an easement of way to and from and across an intersecting space of that width, which imposed upon the lessor a binding obligation not to use the intersecting space for any purpose inconsistent with such grant. Gogarty v. Hoskins, [1906] 1 Ir. R. 173—Barton, J.

Sale of Lease—Underlease—Outstanding Day—Declaration of Trust.—By an indenture made in 1865 a lease was granted to J. G. P. for a term of ninety-nine years from March 25, 1865, at a rent of 3*l.* 16*s.* 4*d.* The lease became vested in H., who on August 6, 1885, granted S. H. an underlease for the whole of the term, less eleven days, at a rent of 12*l.* H. then mortgaged for the whole term, less one day, of which there was a declaration of trust, and on September 29, 1896, the mortgages sold to W. S. The vendors were the legal personal representatives of W. S., and the purchaser had entered into a contract to buy what was described in the particulars as "an improved leasehold ground rent of 8*l.* 8*s.* 8*d.* arising out of a ground rent for 12*l.* amply secured on property held on lease . . . having fifty-three years unexpired in March, and subject to an original ground rent of 3*l.* 16*s.* 4*d.*" The conditions provided that the title should commence with an indenture of underlease dated August 6, 1885, and that the purchaser should not question the validity of the underlease, but should assume a good title was vested in W. S. for the residue of the term. The purchaser contended that he was entitled to an assignment of the original lease, and that, as there was an outstanding day, he was entitled to a declaration that the vendor had not made out a good title, and to the return of his deposit. The vendor said that he had only contracted to sell the term for which the ground rent of 12*l.* was payable. The purchaser, moreover, had delivered no requisitions, and it was submitted that the objection was out of time:—Held, first, that the objection was not out of time, as the objection was one of conveyance and not of title; secondly, that what was contracted to be sold was the improved ground rent for the whole term during which it was payable. Seemle, even if the contract had been to assign the whole of the original term, the vendor could have enforced the contract, as there was a declaration of trust of the last day of the term. Scott and Fave's Contract, In re, 86 L. T. 617—Swinfen Eady, J.

Unusual and Onerous Covenants—Duty of Vendor to Disclose—Constructive Notice—Production of Common Form Lease of Property of Same Estate.—At the commencement of negotiations for the assignment of a lease which was afterwards found to contain unusual and onerous covenants, the purchaser's solicitor called on the plaintiff's agent and asked to see the lease. The agent said that the lease could not be obtained for a few days, but that he would produce an identical lease on a printed form of adjoining property of the same estate. The solicitor replied that he had not time to examine it then. The vendor took no further steps to disclose the covenants, and the purchaser made no further enquiry as to them, and, having entered into a contract for the assignment of the lease in ignorance of the covenants, afterwards repudiated it:—Held, an action for damages for breach of the contract, that no reasonable opportunity of ascertaining the terms of the covenants had been given by the vendor to the purchaser, and that the purchaser was not affected by notice of the covenants. Molynere v. Hawtrey, 72 L. J. K.B. 873; [1903] 2 K.B. 487; 89 L. T. 350; 52 W. R. 23—C.A.

Leasehold Property—Order to Repair by Local Authority—"Charge or outgoing"—Incidence of Burden—Covenant to Repair.—A vendor and purchaser entered into an open contract for the sale of leasehold property, the lease of which contained a covenant on the part of the vendor to repair. At the date at which the purchaser was first in a position prudently to enter into possession the property was in a dilapidated condition, and an order to repair it as a dangerous structure had been made, though not yet served, by the local authority. The vendor produced the last receipt for ground-rent during the investigation of the title:—Held, that, in order to determine whether the expense of obeying the order to repair should be borne by vendor or purchaser, it was unnecessary to enquire in the present case at what exact date that expense became a charge or outgoing in connection with the property, for that the expense must be borne by the vendor by reason of his covenant to repair; and that he was not relieved from this burden by the production of the last receipt for ground-rent under the provisions of section 3, sub-section 4 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, as in this case the "contrary appeared." Phill v. Hutchens (32 Beav. 615) and Lawrie v. Iers (51 L. J. Ch. 209; 7 App. Cas. 19) distinguished. Higlett and Bird's Contract, In re, 71 L. J. Ch. 508; [1902] 2 Ch. 214; 87 L. T. 159; 50 W. R. 424—Swinfen Eady, J.

Loss of Bargain—Damages—Leaseholds—Assignment—Consent of Lessor—Duty of Vendor.]—The rule laid down in Bain v. Fothergill (43 L. J. Ex. 243; L. R. 7 H.L. 158), that damages for loss of bargain cannot be recovered on breach of a contract for sale of land, is based upon the uncertainty of making out a good title, and does not depend upon the absence of fraud. It applies to cases where a vendor is unable, without any default on his part, to make a good title, and does not apply to the case of a vendor who can make a good title, but will not, or will not do what he can do and ought to do in order to obtain one. Day v. Singleton, 68 L. J. Ch. 593; [1899] 2 Ch. 320; 81 L. T. 306; 48 W. R. 18—C.A.

The rule is an exception, and ought not to be extended to cases in which the reasons on which it is based do not apply; therefore, if a vendor of leaseholds assignable subject to the consent of his lessor does not endeavour to obtain that consent, the purchaser will be entitled to damages, although he would not have been so entitled if the vendor had asked for the consent and it had been refused. Ib.

Engell v. Fitch (38 L. J. Q.B. 304; L. R. 4 Q.B. 659) is not overruled by Bain v. Fothergill (supra). Ib.

Sale of Premises by Tenant to Landlord—Covenant to Insure—Damages.]—A, the lessor, contracted with B, the lessee, for the purchase of B's interest in certain premises. B insured the premises for about half their value. Before the completion of the contract the premises were damaged by fire to about the amount insured, which sum was paid by the insurance company. A brought his action for damages for breach of the covenant to insure in addition to the sum paid by the insurance company:—Held, that A was not entitled to any sum by way of damages beyond the insurance money paid by the company. Newman v. Maxwell, 80 L. T. 681—Kekewich, J.

3. PARTICULARS AND CONDITIONS OF SALE.

Description of Property—"Eligible investment"—Disorderly House—Mutual Ignorance of Defect—Specific Performance.]—Where there has been a contract to purchase a house, stated to be an "eligible freehold property for investment," the description of which has been truly set out in the particulars of sale, the fact that, without the knowledge of either party, the house is being used as a disorderly house is no ground for refusing specific performance of the contract. Dictum of WIGRAM, V.C., in Lucas v. James (18 L. J. Ch. 329; 7 Hare, 410, 418), followed. Hope v. Waiter, 68 L. J. Ch. 359; [1899] 1 Ch. 879; 80 L. T. 355; 47 W. R. 479—Cotzens-Hardy, J.

Sale by Auction—Freehold or Leasehold—Correction of Particulars by Conditions—Title—Unexpired Term—Release of Rent—Enlargement of Term into Fee-simple—Contract—

Rescission.]—Particulars of sale by auction described the property as freehold. The conditions of sale stated that the property was formerly held with other property under a lease of 1672 for five hundred years at a yearly rent of 1s., that it was assigned in 1828 free from the rent, that the rent had never been paid by the vendor, and that the purchaser should assume the rent had been released. It was further stated that by a deed-poll of 1902 under the provisions of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, the property was expressed to be enlarged into a fee-simple, and that it should be assumed that the deed-poll was effective. The rent had not in fact been paid for at least fifty years. The purchaser alleged that he had signed the contract, after having read the particulars but not the conditions, and claimed rescission of the contract and repayment of the deposit on the ground that he had been misled into believing the property was freehold when in fact it was, as he alleged, leasehold:—Held, that the vendor, believing on reasonable grounds that the statement in the particulars that the property was freehold was true, although he might have a difficulty in proving the freehold tenure, was entitled by the conditions to impose on the purchaser the burden of assuming the facts as stated, and the purchaser was not entitled to rescission. Sandbach and Edmondson, In re (60 L. J. Ch. 60; [1891] 1 Ch. 99), applied. Torrance v. Bolton (42 L. J. Ch. 177; L. R. 8 Ch. 118) distinguished. Blaiberg v. Keeves, 75 L. J. Ch. 464; [1906] 2 Ch. 175; 95 L. T. 412; 54 W. R. 451—Warrington, J.

Boundary Wall—Mutual Gable—Half Cost of Erection.]—The proprietor of two adjoining building plots erected a house upon one of them, building the whole gable half upon one plot, and half upon the other plot. He afterwards conveyed the plot with the house upon it to A. The mutual gable, resting partly on the two plots, was described in the conveyance as a mutual gable. He subsequently sold the other plot, and the purchaser proceeded to erect a house upon it, making use of the mutual gable. In the letters of sale to A the vendor said: "The unused half of the gable and boundary walls is not included in the offer." In an action by A's successor against the purchaser of the second plot for half the cost of the mutual gable wall, the defendant relied upon the words of the letters as shewing that A had not acquired the claim for recompense for the unused half of the gable:—Held, that A's successor was entitled to claim from the purchaser of the second plot one-half of the value of the mutual gable, and that there was no inconsistency between the letters of sale and the words of the conveyance. Baird v. Bell, [1898] A.C. 420—H.L. (Sc.)

Building Estate—Registered Conditions—Modifications—Consent—Persons "principally interested"—Land Transfer Act.]—The conditions inserted in a certificate in respect of a title to land registered under the Land Transfer Act, 1875, are a public restriction upon the user of such land, and the persons "principally interested" who are entitled, under section 84 of the Act, to object to any modification of the conditions, and whose consents are therefore necessary, are all those persons who have bought with notice of the conditions, and upon whom they are binding. Ground-Rent Development Co. v. West, 71 L. J. Ch. 354; [1902] 1 Ch. 674; 86 L. T. 403—Kekewich, J.

— Restrictive Conditions.—A local authority, having sold one of several lots under a general building scheme, under particulars describing the property as adapted for first-class shops or any business requiring roomy premises, and under conditions requiring the purchaser of each lot to build a shop and dwelling-house of not less than a particular value, will not be restrained by injunction from erecting on the unsold lots a fire-engine station of a value exceeding that stipulated in the conditions for the shops and dwelling-houses. Holford v. Acton Urban Council, 67 L. J. Ch. 636; [1898] 2 Ch. 240; 78 L. T. 829—Stirling, J.

Conveyance—Condition as to Preparation of.—See CONVEYANCE, col. 2653.

Delay in Completion—Interest on Purchase-money—"Default"—Omission to Discover Defect in Title—Reasonable Care.—In order to decide whether there has been default on the part of a vendor, within a clause which provides that the purchaser shall pay interest on the purchase-money if completion is delayed "from any cause whatever other than the default of the vendor," the test to be applied is whether there has been a want of reasonable care and diligence on the part of the vendor. Therefore an omission by a vendor to discover and provide for a blot on his title which could only be detected by extreme vigilance is not such default. Woods and Lewis's Contract, In re, 67 L. J. Ch. 475; [1898] 2 Ch. 211; 78 L. T. 665; 46 W. R. 643—C.A.

— Specific Performance—"Wilful default" of Vendor—Interest—Rents and Profits—Possession Retained by Vendor—Outgoings—Occupation Rent.—By an agreement for the sale of real estate it was provided that the purchase should be completed on a fixed day, and that "if from any cause whatever, other than wilful default on the part of the vendors," the completion of the purchase was delayed beyond that day, the purchase-money should bear interest at 5 per cent. per annum till the day of actual payment. The draft conveyance, as prepared by the purchaser, contained an assignment of the benefit of certain covenants entered into with the vendors, to which the purchaser was entitled under the agreement. The vendors added words limiting the extent of this assignment, and threatened that if the purchaser did not approve they would cancel the contract and forfeit the deposit. The purchaser brought an action for specific performance. The defendants pleaded that the plaintiff was not ready to complete, as he was unable to pay the purchase-money; and it was not denied that he was unable to pay it out of his own money. The plaintiff obtained a declaration that the vendors were not entitled to the insertion of the words proposed, an order for specific performance of the contract, and for accounts and enquiries and the costs of the action. Pending the completion of the purchase, a tenant of one of the farms on the property gave up his farm, and the vendors paid him a sum of money, the amount of the valuation due to him, and worked the farm themselves, and thereby incurred losses. The Judge allowed the vendors in the accounts interest on the purchase-money and the amount paid to the tenant for valuation, but not the farming losses. He also made them chargeable with the rents and profits actually received by them, but not with the occupation rent. On the question of payment of interest,—Held, by VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., that the vendors, in insisting under threat of cancelling the contract and forfeiting the deposit upon a form of conveyance to which they were not entitled, had neglected to conduct the sale to completion in the manner in which they ought reasonably to have done, and they were guilty of wilful default, and they ought not to be allowed any interest during the time occupied in bringing the action to completion; neither could they have interest during the time occupied by the enquiry upon claims made by them which they could not support. Held, also, that the causa causans of the delay was the conveyance not being in a proper form, not the inability of the purchaser to pay the purchase-money. Held, by STIRLING, L.J., that the form of the conveyance, as regards the covenants was of no importance to the vendors, and they had not acted reasonably, and were guilty of wilful default after the time when the purchaser had accepted the draft conveyance in a proper form; but the real cause of the delay was not the default of the vendors, but that the purchaser was not provided with the money to complete his purchase, and he could not be relieved from the payment of interest. Held, by COZENS-HARDY, L.J., that the view taken by the vendors as to the proper form of conveyance, though mistaken, was honest, and there had not been any such wilful default on their part as to exempt the purchaser from the payment of interest, and he was liable to pay interest for the whole period until the actual completion of the sale. Bennett v. Stone, 72 L. J. Ch. 240; [1903] 1 Ch. 509; 88 L. T. 35; 51 W. R. 338—C.A.

— Sale of Leaseholds—Agreement by Vendor to Discharge Outgoings up to Completion—Notice by Sanitary Authority to Repair—Expenses—Liability of Purchaser.—Conditions of sale for the purchase of leaseholds provided that the purchase should be completed on August 11, 1898, and that a purchaser paying his purchase-money should as from that day be let into possession or receipt of rents and profits, and up to that date all rents, rates, taxes, and outgoings were (if necessary) to be apportioned, and such apportioned rents were to be paid on completion by each purchaser to the vendor. If the completion of the purchase was delayed beyond the before-mentioned day, the remainder of the purchase-money was to bear interest from that day to the day of actual payment thereof, "or at the option of the vendor he may receive the rents and profits up to the day of the actual completion of the purchase." Owing to the purchaser's default the purchase was not completed on the date fixed, and the vendor remained in possession and receipt of the rents and profits. In November, 1898, notices were served upon the vendor under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, to abate nuisances on the premises, which the vendor complied with, and expended a sum of 24*l.* in so doing. In an action for specific performance by the purchaser the vendor claimed to be entitled to payment by the purchaser of the 24*l.* as well as the balance of the purchase-money:—Held, that the purchaser was not entitled to specific performance, except upon the footing of paying to the vendor, in addition to the balance of the purchase-money, the 24*l.* Barshit v. Tagg, 69 L. J. Ch. 91; [1900] 1 Ch. 231; 81 L. T. 777; 48 W. R. 220—Cozens-Hardy, J.

Condition for Payment of Interest by "Purchaser in default"—Liability of Vendor in Default—Measure of Damages.—On a contract for the sale of real estate with possession, subject to a condition that if from any cause whatever the purchase is not completed on the date fixed for completion "the purchaser in default" is to pay interest from that date on the balance of the purchase-money (a deposit having been paid) until completion, and the purchase is not completed for upwards of four months from the fixed date, not in consequence of any defect in title or conveyancing difficulties, but entirely owing to the default of the vendor in not having taken reasonable care to fulfil his contract, the purchaser is not "in default" within the condition, and the vendor is not entitled to interest. Denning v. Henderson (17 L. J. Ch. 8; 1 De G. & Sm. 689) followed. Jones v. Gardiner, 71 L. J. Ch. 93; [1902] 1 Ch. 191; 86 L. T. 74; 50 W. R. 265—Byrne, J.

In such a case the vendor, although acting in good faith, is liable to the purchaser for such damages as may reasonably be said to have arisen from the delay and non-delivery of possession, or as may reasonably be supposed to have been in the contemplation of the parties as likely to arise from the partial breach of contract. Engell v. Fitch (38 L. J. Q.B. 304; L. R. 4 Q.B. 659) on this point approved and applied. Jaques v. Millar (47 L. J. Ch. 544; 6 Ch. D. 158) followed. Ib.

Easements—Limitation in Conveyance.—Property was put up for sale in lots, and it was stated in the conditions that it was sold "subject to all rights of way and water and other easements (if any)," but there was no other mention of easements. Lot 2 was sold, but lot 1 remained in the hands of the vendors:—Held, that the purchaser of lot 2 was not entitled to have the conveyance in such a form as would give him the benefit of the general words as to rights of way, &c., in section 6 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, but the vendors were entitled to limit the generality of those words. Hughes and Ashley, In re, 69 L. J. Ch. 741; [1900] 2 Ch. 595; 83 L. T. 390; 49 W. R. 67—C.A. And see col. 2641.

Error or Omission Discovered in Particulars of Sale—Sewer under Property purchased—Compensation.—The conditions of sale relating to a dwelling-house and grounds, not sold for building purposes, provided (inter alia) that any error or omission which might be discovered in the particulars of sale affecting the nature of the property should not annul the sale, but should be a matter for compensation; and that the property was sold subject to all rights of way or other easements. A deed of mutual covenants, subject "to which also the property was sold, precluded any building on the property. The purchaser discovered that there was a public sewer passing under the garden at the rear of and some distance from the house, and a manhole used for obtaining access to the sewer. The vendor was entirely ignorant at the time of the sale of the existence of such sewer. The sewer was vested in the local authority under the Public Health Act, 1875, and no buildings could be erected over it without the sanction of the local authority. The purchaser objected to complete, on the ground that the vendor was unable to make a title to the property:—Held, that the circumstances did not justify the Court in releasing the purchaser from his contract to take the property; that the existence of the sewer did not so alter the character of the piece of ground that the purchaser could say that he did not get what was intended to be sold; and that the case was a matter for compensation. Brewer and Hankins's Contract, In re, 80 L. T. 127—C.A.

Indemnity against Rent—Misleading Condition.—Certain premises, described as lot 2, were sold by public auction, under the direction of the Court. The particulars stated that lot 2 was held, with other premises, under lease of 1877, for a term of years, subject to rent, and further stated that the said lot 2 was sold "subject to the said rent, but is indemnified therefrom by an indenture, dated August 16, 1881, whereby the said lot was assigned to A. J." The 12th condition of sale was as follows: "Lot 2 was assigned by deed, dated 16 August, 1881, indemnified against the rent reserved by the said lease (of 1877), as in said deed mentioned, and the purchaser shall not require any further or other indemnity in respect of the same, and shall not require any information as to the person or persons, or premises liable to the said rent, or bound by the said indemnity." The indenture of assignment of 1881 assigned lot 2 to A. J. "indemnified from the rent, but subject to the covenants by the lessee and the conditions in the said lease." M. was declared the purchaser of lot 2. At the time of bidding he believed that the other premises demised by the lease of 1877 were bound to indemnify lot 2 against the rent reserved by the lease. The purchaser applied to be discharged from his contract on the ground that the provision as to indemnity contained in the deed of 1881 did not give him any such real or adequate indemnity against the rent as he was entitled to under his contract:—Held, that there was not an indemnity within the contract, and that the condition of sale was one which, taken in connection with the particulars, rendered the information given by the document insufficient and misleading, and that therefore the purchaser should be discharged from his contract. Manifold v. Johnston, [1902] 1 Ir. R. 7—M.R.

Inspection—Latent Defect—Building Estate—

Underground Culvert unknown to both Parties.]

—The purchaser contracted to purchase land for building purposes from trustees under conditions of sale which provided that, the property being open for inspection, the purchaser should be deemed to buy with full knowledge of the condition thereof, and that if any error should be found in the particulars the same should not annul the sale, nor should any compensation be allowed in respect thereof. After the date of the contract the purchaser discovered that there was an underground culvert for the passage of water from other lands running through the middle of the property, the existence of which was previously unknown either to the vendors or to the purchaser, who had himself inspected the property without discovering it:—Held, that the existence of the culvert was a substantial injury to a building estate, that the condition of sale only applied to such matters as might be discovered by the purchaser with reasonable care, and that on the facts there was a substantial misrepresentation as to the suitability of the property for building purposes, rendering the contract unenforceable according to the rule in Flight v. Booth (4 L. J. Q.P. 66; 1 Bing. N.C. 370). Puckett and Smith's Contract, In re, 71 L. J. Ch. 666; [1902] 2 Ch. 258; 87 L. T. 189; 50 W. R. 532—C.A.

Title—Conditions as to.]—See TITLE, infra.

Right to Rescind—Rescission by Letter without Prejudice—Succession Duty—Ground Rent—Prospective Duty on Reversion—Liability to Discharge.]

—A freehold ground rent, secured by a lease expiring in 1938, was sold, free from incumbrances, with a condition enabling the vendors to rescind if the purchaser should insist on any requisition with which they should be unwilling to comply on the ground of difficulty, delay, or expense, or other reasonable ground. The fee was vested in two vendors, as to two undivided thirds beneficially, and as to the remaining third in trust for their brother. Succession duty on the death of a tenant for life of the entirety had been paid on the ground rent only. The purchaser insisted that the vendors should commute and pay the further duty, amounting to a few shillings, which would be payable if any of the three brothers (who in 1938 would all be over ninety years of age) should be alive on the determination of the lease. The vendors refused, but by a letter expressed to be "without prejudice" they offered an indemnity, and gave notice in case of non-acceptance to annul the sale:—Held, that they could not rescind by a letter "without prejudice," that the purchaser was entitled to have the incumbrance discharged and was not bound to accept an indemnity, and that the terms of the condition did not entitle the vendors to rescind. Weston and Thomas's Contract, In re, 76 L. J. Ch. 179; [1907] 1 Ch. 244; 96 L. T. 324—Swinfen Eady, J.

—Sale of Real Estate—Condition that Mortgagee shall Accept Purchaser as Mortgagor—Time Within which Condition to be Performed—Election by Purchaser to Treat Contract as Rescinded before Time for Completion of Condition arrived or Vendor has declared Inability to Perform—Recovery of Deposit.]—The plaintiff agreed to purchase the lease of a public-house from the defendant, who had obtained a loan upon mortgage of the lease, upon condition that the mortgagee would consent to continue the loan to the plaintiff. By the agreement a day was fixed for completion of the purchase, and it was stipulated that in case of default by the plaintiff the deposit paid by him on entering into the agreement should be forfeited. More than four weeks before the day fixed for completion the plaintiff and defendant had an interview with the mortgagee, who refused to allow the full amount of the loan to remain on mortgage. Thereupon the plaintiff declared the agreement at an end. Later on the same day the defendant saw the mortgagee, who consented to continue the loan to the plaintiff. The defendant informed the plaintiff of the mortgagee's consent, but the plaintiff insisted that the agreement was at an end. In an action by the plaintiff to recover the deposit,—Held, that in the absence of some agreement express or implied that the mortgagee's original refusal should be treated as final and conclusive, and there being nothing to justify the plaintiff in so treating it, the defendant had until the day fixed for completion to obtain the mortgagee's consent, so that the plaintiff was wrong in treating the agreement as at an end, and consequently the agreement had gone off through his default, and he was not entitled to recover the deposit. Smith v. Butler, 69 L. J. Q.B. 521; [1900] 1 Q.B. 694; 82 L. T. 281; 48 W. R. 583—C.A. And see RESCISSION, col. 2672.

4. DEPOSIT.Auction—Highest Bidder—Cheque for Deposit—Refusal by Vendor to Accept Cheque and Sign Contract.]

—A vendor who offers land for sale by public auction under conditions of sale providing that the highest bidder shall be the purchaser, and that he shall immediately pay a deposit and sign a contract for purchase, is liable in damages to a member of the public to whom the property has been knocked down as the highest bidder if he refuses to allow him to sign the contract. The vendor, however, is not bound to accept a cheque for the deposit, and may refuse to enter into the contract unless cash is paid. Johnston v. Boyes, 68 L. J. Ch. 425; [1899] 2 Ch. 73; 80 L. T. 488; 47 W. R. 517—Cozens-Hardy, J.

Lien—Rescission by Purchaser.]—A purchaser of land upon payment of a deposit acquires an equitable lien therefor upon the land, and that lien may be made available against a transferee (not being a purchaser for value without notice) from the vendor, as well where the purchaser puts an end to the contract without any default of the vendor in exercise of a right reserved to the purchaser, as where the vendor (or his transferee) is in default. Whitbread v. Watt, 71 L. J. Ch. 424; [1902] 1 Ch. 835; 86 L. T. 395; 50 W. R. 442—C.A.

5. TITLE.(a) Power to Sell.

Settlement—Real Estate—Power of Appointment—Direction to Trustees to "pay and transfer" the Property—Power of Sale—Appointment by Will—Sale by Trustees of Will—Title to Legal Estate.]—Under a marriage settlement real estate was conveyed to trustees upon certain trusts during the lives of the husband and wife, and upon trust after the death of the survivor “to pay and transfer” the said hereditaments and premises to the issue of the marriage as the survivor of the husband and wife should by deed or will appoint. The settlement contained two powers of sale vested in the trustees, one during the lives of the husband and wife and the life of the survivor, and the other after the death of the survivor during the lifetime of any child of the marriage. The husband survived his wife, and by his will appointed the property the subject of the settlement to the use of trustees upon trust for sale and conversion, and then directed them to stand possessed of “the settled property” upon certain trusts for the issue of the marriage. The trustees of the will contracted to sell the property, and the purchaser objected that the proper persons to sell were the representatives of the last surviving trustee of the settlement:—Held, that, as the trustees of the settlement were thereby directed to “pay and transfer” the property as the survivor of the husband and wife should appoint, the trust for sale created by the will was expressly authorised by the terms of the power of appointment and overrode the powers of sale contained in the settlement, and could be exercised by the trustees of the will. Kennworthy v. Bate (6 Ves. 793) and Redgate, In re; Marsh v. Redgate (72 L. J. Ch. 204; [1903] 1 Ch. 356), considered. Adams's Trustees' and Frost's Contract, In re, 76 L. J. Ch. 408; [1907] 1 Ch. 695; 96 L. T. 838—Warrington, J.

Held, further, that it was the duty of the trustees for sale as vendors to deduce at their own expense the title to the legal estate which was vested in the trustees of the settlement. Ib.

(b) Length of.

Vendor to Shew Twelve Years' Undisturbed Possession—Prior Title not to be Objected to—Grant of Administration to Vendor—Return of Land as Assets.]—By conditions of sale the vendor was required to shew that he had been in undisturbed possession of the lands for upwards of twelve years, and prior to that period the title was not to be investigated, nor any objection made in reference to it. The vendor, after being in absolute possession for about eighteen years, took out letters of administration to his father, and returned the lands as part of his assets. The purchaser becoming aware of this refused to complete:—Held, that the taking out of letters of administration did not affect the title acquired under the Statute of Limitations, and that consequently a good title was shewn so far as was required by the conditions of sale. McClure and Garrett's Contract, In re, [1899] 1 Ir. R. 225—V.C.

Open Contract—Forty Years' Title—Waiver—Restrictive Covenants—Notice.]—On an open contract for the sale of freehold property the vendor supplied an abstract shewing a title for twelve years, and alleged that the purchasers had notice at the date of the contract of his inability to give an absolute title; he also set up a waiver by the purchasers of their right to a full forty years' title by a letter written by the purchasers. Part of the property was subject to a restrictive covenant not to carry on any trade or business on the premises. When the purchasers made enquiries as to restrictive covenants, they were informed that such covenants did not affect the user of the property for business purposes:—Held, if it is shewn on the signing of a contract that a forty years' title was not able to be given, the purchasers cannot have it, but in this case the purchasers refused to take a shorter title, and, the contract being silent on that point, the purchasers were entitled to their full forty years' title. The whole correspondence shewed that the purchasers all along insisted on a forty years' title, and the letter referred to could not be held to be a waiver of itself. The restrictive covenants were perfectly good objections to the title, and notice of them had not been received by the purchasers, who were told there were no such restrictive covenants. Judge and Sheridan's Contract, In re, 96 L. T. 451—Joyce, J.

(c) Abstract of Title.

Time for Delivery of Abstract and Requisitions—“Immediately.”—Premises were sold subject to conditions of sale which provided—first, that the vendor should, immediately after the sale, furnish to the purchaser or his solicitor an abstract of title; and secondly, that the purchaser should make his objections and requisitions in respect of the title, and send the same to the office of the vendor's solicitor within four days from the delivery of the abstract, and in this respect time should be of the essence of the contract. The sale took place on December 30, 1907; the abstract was delivered on January 4, 1908, and the purchaser's requisitions were sent on January 13, 1908. The vendor's solicitor declined to answer the requisitions on the ground that they were late:—Held, that the abstract was not delivered “immediately,” and consequently not within the time specified in the conditions, and that therefore the purchaser was not bound by the condition requiring the requisitions to be furnished within four days from the delivery of the abstract. Upperton v. Nicholson (40 L. J. Ch. 401; L. R. 6 Ch. 436) followed. Todd and McFadden's Contract, In re, [1908] 1 Ir. R. 213—Kenny, J.

Verification of—Lost Deeds—Secondary Evidence.]—The mere fact that the title-deeds to property sold have been lost or mislaid does not release the purchaser from the performance of his contract; but he can be compelled to complete if he is furnished in proper time with satisfactory secondary evidence as to the contents of the lost documents, and as to their having been duly executed and properly stamped. Halifax Commercial Banking Co. and Wood, In re, 79 L. T. 536; 47 W. R. 194—C.A.

Recitals in Deeds Twenty Years Old—Forty Years' Title.]—A vendor who had entered into an open contract for the sale of property furnished the purchaser with an abstract of title commencing with a deed of June 2, 1882, whereby a mortgagor and mortgagee jointly conveyed the property to the vendor's predecessor in title. This conveyance contained a recital of the mortgage of May 9, 1878, by the mortgagor to the mortgagee:—Held, that the vendor was not relieved by this recital in a deed more than twenty years old of his duty of deducing a forty years' title. Wallis' and Grout's Contract, In re, 75 L. J. Ch. 519; [1906] 2 Ch. 206; 94 L. T. 815; 54 W. R. 534; 22 T. L. R. 540—Swinfen Eady, J.

The schedule to the deed of June 2, 1882, shewed that there were deeds relating to the property subsequent to the mortgage of May 9, 1878, and prior to the conveyance of June 2, 1882, and the purchaser was entitled to see those deeds. That was sufficient to distinguish this case from Bolton v. London School Board (47 L. J. Ch. 461; 7 Ch. D. 766), where there was a recital of seisin and a deduction of title therefrom. In any case the decision in Bolton v. London School Board (supra) ought not to be followed. Ib.

Document Forming Part of Title—Duty to Deliver Abstract in Chief.—A vendor is bound at his own expense to deliver an abstract in chief of every material document of title after the date fixed for commencement of title. It is not sufficient to furnish an abstract of another deed containing a recital of such document. Ebsworth and Tidy's Contract, In re (58 L. J. Ch. 665; 42 Ch. D. 23), explained. Stamford, Spalding, and Boston Banking Co. and Knight's Contract, In re, 69 L. J. Ch. 127; [1900] 1 Ch. 287; 81 L. T. 708; 48 W. R. 244—North, J.

Document of Record in Foreign Country—Impossibility of Production—Scotch Will—Secondary Evidence—Admissibility.—A vendor is not bound to produce or to procure a covenant for the production of a document of record or of any document which cannot be produced, though he is bound to furnish sufficient evidence of its contents. Halkett v. Dudley (Earl), 76 L. J. Ch. 330; [1907] 1 Ch. 590; 96 L. T. 539—Parker, J.

The Evidence Act, 1851, was intended to simplify the proof of foreign and colonial records, and did not abrogate the common law rule that appropriate secondary evidence may be given of documents of which primary evidence cannot be adduced. Therefore, though the Act does not extend to Scotland, a document of record in Scotland may be proved by secondary evidence, and the equivalent of the probate and a certified copy of the original are sufficient evidence for the vendor to furnish of a Scotch will. Ib.

Sale of Land by Auction—Agreement to Take a Free Conveyance—Misinterpretation by Vendor of Contract—Refusal to Deliver Abstract of Title—Wilful Neglect or Default.—On a sale of land by auction the particulars stated that "those purchasers who wished to avoid unnecessary expense and to accept conveyances prepared by the vendors' solicitors may have such conveyances free of expense (except stamp duty)," but the conditions of sale did not provide that purchasers who agreed to accept free conveyances should not be entitled to the delivery of abstracts of title or to investigate the title to the lots purchased by them. They, however, contained the usual provision requiring the purchaser to pay interest on his unpaid purchase-money in case of non-completion on the appointed day, if not caused by wilful neglect or default of the vendors. A purchaser of several lots agreed in his contract to take a free conveyance, but requested delivery of an abstract to enable him to investigate the title, before completion. The vendors, however, refused to deliver the abstract until completion, on the ground that the purchaser by agreeing to accept a free conveyance had waived his right to delivery of an abstract and to investigate the title. Upon a summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, taken out by the purchaser,—Held, that the vendors were bound to deliver an abstract to the purchaser to enable him to investigate the title before completion, and that their refusal to do this, though owing to misinterpretation of the conditions of sale, constituted wilful neglect or default on their part, so as to free the purchaser from liability to pay interest on his unpaid purchase-money from the day fixed for completion. Pelly and Jacob's Contract, In re, 80 L. T. 45—North, J.

(d) Requisitions.

Threatened Litigation.—A purchaser having enquired whether the vendor or her solicitor was aware of any proceedings to set aside a deed on which the title depended, the reply was that no proceedings had been taken or threatened to set aside the deed. It appeared that, in a probate action to establish an alleged will of the grantor of the deed (which will purported to dispose of the subject-matter of the contract), the vendor, who was the defendant, on an application for security for costs, made an affidavit alleging that she had evidence shewing that the testator was mentally incapable at the date of the will. The plaintiff failed to give security for costs, and the action was stayed. After the contract the plaintiff employed another solicitor, who wrote to the purchaser's solicitor threatening to impeach the deed on the ground of fraud:—Held, that the requisitions had been sufficiently answered and a good title shewn in accordance with the particulars and conditions of sale. Delany and Deegan's Contract, In re, [1905] 1 Ir. R. 602—M.R.

Mortgagee Selling under Power of Sale—Specific Performance—Evidence—Admissibility.—A mortgagee, purporting to execute the power of sale conferred by section 19 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, may be asked by the purchaser, upon examination in an action by such vendor for specific performance, whether he had, prior to such exercise, served on the mortgagor the notice required by section 20 demanding payment of the mortgage-money, for the purpose of shewing that the power of sale had not arisen and that the vendor cannot make a good title. Dieker v. Angerstein (45 L. J. Ch. 754; 3 Ch. D. 600) considered. Life Interest &c. Securities Corporation v. Hand-in-Hand Fire and Life Insurance Society, 67 L. J. Ch. 548; [1898] 2 Ch. 230; 78 L. T. 708; 46 W. R. 668—Stirling, J.

Unwillingness to Comply—Reasonable Ground

— Right to Rescind—Specific Performance.—Where land is contracted to be sold under a condition that, if the purchaser should “make any objection or requisition either as to title” or otherwise which the vendor should be “unable or unwilling to remove or comply with,” the vendor shall be at liberty to annul the sale, and the vendor tenders his reasons for having rescinded the contract, the Court will, in an action for specific performance by the purchaser, consider whether there was any reasonable ground for the rescission or whether it was affected by the vendor in mere arbitrary exercise of his will. It is not sufficient that the vendor should have acted without caprice; he must also have acted reasonably. In the present case the Court held on the evidence that the vendor had not acted reasonably, and made an order for specific performance in favour of the purchaser. Dames to Wood (54 L. J. Ch. 771; 29 Ch. D. 626) considered and applied. Quinion v. Horne, 75 L. J. Ch. 293; [1906] 1 Ch. 596; 54 W. R. 344—Farwell, J.

(e) Easements.

Light—Implied Warranty—Newly Erected Buildings.—Upon the sale of land with newly erected buildings having windows overlooking an open space, there is no implied warranty that the vendor has not been a party to anything whereby the easement of light over the open space cannot be acquired upon the effluxion of the statutory period from the time when the houses were first erected. Greenhalgh v. Brindley, 70 L. J. Ch. 740; [1901] 2 Ch. 324; 84 L. T. 763; 49 W. R. 597—Farwell, J.

Restrictive Covenant — “Drain” — “Sewer” — Vesting in Local Authority.—A purchaser agreed to buy two freehold houses, “subject to right of light with owner of adjoining property being guaranteed.” The vendor had previously mutually covenanted with the owner of the adjoining house not to do anything to prejudice the right of light to the windows of each other’s premises:—Held, that this restrictive covenant was a defect in the title. Held, further, that a sewer under the property vested in the local authority under section 13 of the Public Health Act, 1875, notwithstanding section 19 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, and therefore that the vendor was unable to convey all that he had contracted to sell. Pemsel v. Trucker, 76 L. J. Ch. 621; [1907] 2 Ch. 191; 97 L. T. 86; 71 J. P. 547—Warrington, J.

Undisclosed—Underground Goit or Water-course—Constructive Notice—Rescission of Contract.—Where a contract for the sale of freehold land contains a provision that the land is sold subject to the conditions contained in or referred to by a specified deed, and reference to that deed would have disclosed the fact that the land was subject to certain restrictions contained in a second deed, a purchaser who before executing the contract has not inspected either the first or the second deed will not be granted relief on the ground that he had no notice, at the time when he entered into the contract, of the restrictions contained in the second deed. Childe and Hodgson’s Contract, In re, 54 W. R. 234—Warrington, J.

(f) Incumbrances.

Mortgage—Constructive Notice—Possession Contrary to Ostensible Title—Property in Occupation of Tenants—Enquiry of Tenants to whom Rents Paid—Duty of Purchaser or Mortgagee—Rents Paid to Estate Agent.—There is no obligation upon an intending purchaser or mortgagee of property, where the vendor or mortgagor is not in occupation, to enquire of the tenants to whom they pay their rents; and if he does not enquire, or if he enquires and is told that the rents are paid to an estate agent and makes no further enquiry, he will not be affected with notice of the fact that the rents are paid to a person whose receipt is inconsistent with the ostensible title of the vendor or mortgagor. Hunt v. Luck, 71 L. J. Ch. 239; [1902] 1 Ch. 428; 86 L. T. 68; 50 W. R. 291—G.A.

The fact of a tenancy only affects an intending purchaser or mortgagee with notice of the rights of the tenant, not with notice of the title of his lessor, and the only enquiries which the purchaser or mortgagee is bound to make of the tenant are as to his rights. Dictum of JESSEL, M.R., in Mumford v. Stohwasser (43 L. J. Ch. 694, 697; L. R. 18 Eq. 556, 562) disapproved. Id.

— Payment Off—Reconveyance—Habendum unto and to the Use of Mortgagor “in fee”—No Words of Limitation—Legal Estate for Life.—Upon payment off by the mortgagor of a mortgage debt created in 1895, the property which had constituted the security for the debt was conveyed by the mortgagees unto the mortgagor “to hold the same unto and to the use of” the mortgagor “in fee freed and discharged” from the mortgage debt secured by, and all claims and demands under, the mortgage deed:—Held, that to supply the word “simple” after “fee” from the obvious intention as appearing by other parts of the deed of reconveyance would not be a compliance with the terms of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, s. 51; that in the absence of the words “and his heirs,” as words of limitation in the habendum, the deed could not operate to pass the legal estate in fee-simple; and that therefore only a legal estate for life passed under the deed to the mortgagor, leaving the legal estate in remainder outstanding in the mortgagees. Ethell and Mitchell & Butler’s Contract, In re, 70 L. J. Ch. 498; [1901] 1 Ch. 945; 84 L. T. 459—Joyce, J.

— Money Advanced on Joint Account—Disclosure of Trust—Requisition on Title—Devolution of Trust.—Where upon a purchase of freeholds free from incumbrance the fact has been inadvertently disclosed upon requisitions that the money advanced upon a mortgage of the freeholds (which was to be paid off) was so advanced by two persons as trustees of a marriage settlement (neither of them being the original trustees), the purchaser of the property is entitled to require the vendor to prove the devolution of title of the trustees from the date of the settlement, so that a good discharge may be obtained on payment of the mortgage-money. Harman and Uxbridge and Rickmansworth Railway, In re (52 L. J. Ch. 808; 24 Ch. D. 720), distinguished. Blaiberg and Abrahams' Contract, In re, 68 L. J. Ch. 578; [1899] 2 Ch. 340; 81 L. T. 75; 47 W. R. 634—Kekewich, J.

Priority—Equitable Charge and Deposit of Title-deeds—Sale by Mortgagor—Notice of Charge before Completion—Forged Receipt on Memorandum of Charge—Purchaser with Legal Estate and Title-deeds.]—The doctrine of purchase for value without notice does not apply where, prior to completion there has been notice of a charge and a fraudulent representation that the charge has been paid off. Jared v. Clements, 71 L. J. Ch. 752; [1902] 2 Ch. 399; 86 L. T. 887; 50 W. R. 611—Byrne, J.

Where, therefore, on a sale of leaseholds by a mortgagor the purchaser had before completion notice of the existence of an equitable charge, created by memorandum and deposit of title-deeds, on the property, and on completion the memorandum with a forged receipt thereon was handed over together with the title-deeds, the receipt having been forged by the equitable mortgagee's solicitor with whom the memorandum and deeds had been left for safe custody, and an assignment passing the legal estate in the property was at the same time delivered to the purchaser, and there had been no negligence on the part either of the mortgagee or of the purchaser, it was held that the purchaser, although he had the legal estate and possession of the title-deeds, was not entitled to hold the property free from the equitable mortgage, but that the equitable mortgagee could uphold his security. Ib.

Executors—Conveyance to Testamentary Devisees—Charge for Payment of Moneys which Executors are "liable to pay"—Unknown Liabilities—Statutory Advertisements.]—Where executors have issued statutory advertisements for creditors pursuant to the Law of Property Amendment Act, 1859, and have subsequently conveyed real estate to the testamentary devisees of their testator, with a declaration, in accordance with section 3 of the Land Transfer Act, 1897, that it was "subject to a charge for the payment of any money which the personal representatives of the testator are liable to pay," such a charge will not render the land liable, in the hands of a purchaser from the devisees, for claims against the testator's estate which were unknown to the executors at the date when they so conveyed. Cary and Lott's Contract, In re, 70 L. J. Ch. 653; [1901] 2 Ch. 463; 84 L. T. 859; 49 W. R. 581—Kekewich, J.

Land Transfer Act.]—There is nothing in the Land Transfer Act, 1897, which creates a right in creditors to follow real assets in the hands of a purchaser. Ib.

(g) Implied Covenants for Title.

Beneficial Owner—Good Right to Convey—Undisclosed Easement—Breach of Covenant.]—Where a breach of a covenant for good right to convey, implied by virtue of a conveyance by the grantor as beneficial owner, is occasioned by the existence of a right of way over the property conveyed, such a breach is not a continuing breach, but occurs and is complete upon the execution of the deed of conveyance in which the covenant is implied. Turner v. Moon, 70 L. J. Ch. 822; [1901] 2 Ch. 825; 85 L. T. 90—Joyce, J.

— Statute of Limitations.]—From the moment of the delivery of the deed of conveyance the Statute of Limitations in respect of the breach commences to run. Ib.

— Measure of Damages.]—The measure of damages for such a breach is the difference between the value of the property as purported to be conveyed and that which the grantor had power to convey. Spoc v. Green (43 L. J. Ex. 57; L. R. 9 Ex. 99) followed. Ib.

— Breach of Covenant—Easement—Knowledge of Purchaser—Claim for Interference with Easement—Arbitration—Action to Enforce Award—Costs—Repayment by Vendor—Solicitor and Client Costs—Interest—Indemnity.]—The defendant conveyed "as beneficial owner" to the plaintiffs certain plots of land forming part of a building estate, including part of the site of a road. The conveyance did not contain any express covenants for title or any qualifications of the implied covenants. The plaintiffs had notice at the date of the deed that the purchasers of other plots had rights of way over the road. As between the plaintiffs and the defendant the agreement was that the plaintiffs should take the land discharged from such rights. The plaintiffs constructed works upon the land purchased by them, and blocked up the road. In 1902 a previous purchaser of other plots claimed damages against the plaintiffs as compensation for the loss of his right of way over the road, and was awarded by an arbitrator 510*l.* and interest. The plaintiffs did not pay this sum, and the previous purchaser brought an action to enforce the award. The Court ordered the plaintiffs to pay the 510*l.* and interest, and the costs of the arbitration proceedings and the action. The plaintiffs, having paid these sums, sued the defendant on his implied covenants for title for repayment of the sums so paid and of their own costs of the arbitration proceedings and the action:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to maintain the action, and that their right to do so was not affected by their knowledge of the rights of the previous purchaser. Held, therefore, that the defendant being under his implied covenants bound to indemnify the plaintiffs, he must repay them the 510*l.* and interest and the costs paid to the previous purchaser, and must also pay subsequent interest on the 510*l.* and the plaintiffs' costs of the arbitration proceedings as between solicitor and client, but that he was under no liability to repay them their costs of the action to enforce the award. *Turner v. (h) Condition as to "Error or Misstatement."

Condition for Compensation for Misdescription.]

—A condition of sale for compensation, "if any error or misstatement shall appear to have been made in the particulars of sale or these conditions," does not apply to a defect in title.

Riches, In re (27 S. J. 313), followed. Debenham v. Sawbridge, 70 L. J. Ch. 525; [1901] 2 Ch. 98; 84 L. T. 519; 49 W. R. 502—Byrne, J.

Sale by Court—Mistake—Absence of Fraud—Rescission.—Of a sale by the Court a condition provided for compensation for “any error or misstatement” in the particulars or conditions. After conveyance it was discovered that the vendor had had no title to a portion of the property. All parties had acted bona fide, with reasonable ground for believing (subject to a possible doubt in the vendor’s mind) that the title was a good one:—Held, that the purchaser could obtain neither compensation under the condition, nor rescission on the ground of common mistake. Ib.

(i) Leaseholds.

Open Contract—County Council Notice to Repair—Charge—Outgoing—Breach of Covenant.—The law laid down in Barnett v. Wheeler (10 L. J. Ex. 102; 7 M. & W. 364)—namely, that in order to make a good title the vendor of leasehold property must, in the absence of some express condition, shew that the covenants under the lease have been performed down to the date of completion, even though the purchaser was aware of a breach of covenant at the date of the contract—is not affected by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, s. 3, sub-s. 4, which makes the production of the receipt for the last payment of rent prima facie evidence of the performance of the covenants, except so far as that sub-section throws on the purchaser the burthen of proving an existing breach of covenant. Higgett and Bird’s Contract, In re, 72 L. J. Ch. 220; [1903] 1 Ch. 287; 87 L. T. 697; 51 W. R. 227—C.A.

A vendor and purchaser entered into an open contract for the sale of leasehold property the lease of which contained a covenant on the part of the vendor to repair. At the date at which the purchaser was first in a position prudently to enter into possession the property was in a dilapidated condition, and an order to repair it as a dangerous structure had been made, though not yet served, by the local authority. The vendor produced the last receipt for ground-rent during the investigation of the title:—Held, that in order to determine whether the expense of obeying the order to repair should be borne by vendor or purchaser it was unnecessary to enquire at what exact date that expense became a charge or outgoing in connection with the property, for according to Barnett v. Wheeler (supra) the expense must be borne by the vendor by reason of his covenant to repair, and he was not relieved from this burden by the production of the last receipt for ground-rent under section 3, sub-section 4 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, as in this case the “contrary appeared.” Ib.

Per ROMER, L.J.—Quære, whether in all cases a purchaser could compel specific performance against the vendor on the footing of Barnett v. Wheeler (supra) where the dilapidated state of the property was known to both parties at the date of the contract. Ib.

Title to—Legal Estate Outstanding in Crown—

Requisitions out of Time.—An objection by a purchaser of leaseholds to complete on the ground that the legal estate is outstanding in the Crown is not an objection which goes to the root of title so as to enable the purchaser to make requisitions out of time. Pryce Jones v. Williams, 71 L. J. Ch. 762; [1902] 2 Ch. 517; 87 L. T. 260; 50 W. R. 586—Joyce, J.

Leaseholds Subject to Onerous and Unusual Covenants—Private Contract—Stipulation that “the vendor’s title is accepted by the purchasers”—Duty of Vendor as to Disclosure—Objection to Title—Return of Deposit.—On a sale of leasehold property, whether by private contract or public auction, it is the duty of the vendor to disclose the existence of onerous and unusual covenants contained in the lease under which the property is held, or at least to afford the purchaser an opportunity of inspecting the lease prior to the signing of the contract. Where the vendor has failed in his duty in this respect a stipulation in the contract that “the vendor’s title is accepted by the purchasers” will not preclude the purchasers from insisting that a good title has not been shewn and obtaining a return of their deposit, inasmuch as they have a right, when such a condition is inserted, to assume that the vendor has disclosed what it was his duty to disclose, and the condition must be read as precluding objection upon that footing. Principle of Jenkins v. Hiles (6 Ves. 646) applied. Hargreaves and Thompson’s Contract, In re (56 L. J. Ch. 199; 32 Ch. D. 454), followed. Haedicke and Lipski’s Contract, In re, 70 L. J. Sale by Executor—Lapse of Time—Notice to Purchaser that there are no Debts of Testator.—A purchaser of leaseholds will not be forced to take a title from a vendor, who is claiming to sell as executrix of a testator, after being informed that there are no debts of the testator remaining unpaid, and where no evidence is produced of any other reason for selling. Whistler and Richardson, In re (56 L. J. Ch. 827; 35 Ch. D. 561), and Venn and Furze’s Contract, In re (63 L. J. Ch. 308; [1894] 2 Ch. 101), distinguished. Verrell’s Contract, In re, 72 L. J. Ch. 44; [1903] 1 Ch. 65; 87 L. Lease by Tenant for Life under Settled Land Act, 1882—Rent Reserved not best reasonably obtainable.—The title to leasehold property where the lease which purported to have been granted under the Settled Land Act, 1882, was voidable because it did not reserve the best rent, not forced upon a purchaser. Handman and Wilcox, In re, 71 L. J. Ch. 263; [1902] 1 Ch. 599.

(i) Tenancies.

Constructive Notice of—Property in Occupation of Weekly Tenants—Enquiry of Tenants—

Rents Paid to House Agent—Landlord's Title.]—A tenant's occupation of property sold or mortgaged is notice to the purchaser or mortgagee of all that tenant's rights, but not of his lessor's title or rights. Actual knowledge, however, on the part of the purchaser or mortgagee that the rents are paid by the tenants to some person whose receipt is inconsistent with the title of the vendor or mortgagor, is notice of such person's rights. Hunt v. Luck, 70 L. J. Ch. 30; [1901] 1 Ch. 45; 83 L. T. 479; 49 W. R. 155—Farwell, J.

The mere fact that the rents of property let to weekly or yearly tenants are known to be paid to a house agent is not so inconsistent with an apparently good paper title to the property in the vendor or mortgagor as to put the purchaser or mortgagee on enquiry, or fix him with notice of the rights of the person for whom the agent collects the rents. Bailey v. Richardson (9 Hare, 734) and Barnhart v. Greenshields (9 Moore P.C. 18) followed. Mumford v. Stohwasser (43 L. J. Ch. 694; L. R. 18 Eq. 556) not followed. Ib.

(k) Other Matters.

Trustee Purchasing for Himself—Transfer to Trustee of Executory Contract of Sale to a Stranger—Release by Beneficiaries.]—It is well-settled law that a trustee for sale cannot purchase the trust property, and a title based on such a conveyance cannot be forced on a subsequent purchaser. The defect will not be cured by proof that the trustee so purchasing was transferee of an executory contract by which a stranger to the trust had agreed to buy the property, or by a release which fails explicitly to disclose the true state of facts. The burden of proof lies on the purchasing trustee that the parties to the conveyance to him were at arm's length, had the fullest information on all material facts, and adopted the transaction. Williams v. Scott, 69 L. J. P.C. 77; [1900] A.C. 499; 82 L. T. 727; 49 W. R. 33—P.C.

Sale by Tenant for Life—Trustees for Purposes of the Settled Land Acts—Discharge for Purchase-money.]—Real estate was devised in strict settlement to legal uses to A for life, remainder to B for life, with remainder to his first and every other son in tail male; remainder to C for life, with remainder to his first and every other son in tail male, remainder to D for life, with remainder to his first and every other son in tail male, with remainders over. A, C, and D were dead. A, B, and D had all executed jointure deeds under powers contained in the will. The deed executed by A was in operation, and created an existing charge on the property. B, the tenant for life in possession, contracted to sell part of the property under the powers conferred on him by the Settled Land Act, 1882. There were existing trustees of the will for the purposes of the Act, but the purchaser took the objection that it was necessary that trustees for the purposes of the Act should be appointed of the will and the three jointure deeds, on the ground that the same formed together a compound settlement:—Held, that the will by itself constituted a settlement within section 2 of the Settled Land Act, 1882; that B could under section 20 convey the land to the purchaser discharged from the jointures; and that the trustees appointed for the purposes of the settlement could give a good discharge for the purchase-money. — Meade's Settled Estates, In re ([1897] 1 Ir. Vendor Contracting as Trustee—No Power to Sell—Previous Authority from Beneficiaries.]—Real property settled by a will was sold by auction, the vendor being described as trustee of the will (which he was) and as selling under the trusts and powers vested in him thereunder, and the particulars stated that the tenant for life would join to release her life estate. The will contained no trust for sale or power of sale, but the trustee had, before the sale, been authorised in writing by all the beneficiaries to sell. On learning this, the purchaser, who had objected to the absence of power to sell, declined the title as not being that which he had contracted to buy:—Held, that the mention in the particulars of the tenant for life joining shewed that the trustee was not purporting to sell the whole fee alone, and that as the trustee at the date of sale had the authority of all the beneficiaries, and could compel them to join in conveying, he had made a good title according to the contract. Bryant and Barningham's Contract, In re (59 L. J. Ch. 636; 44 Ch. D. 218), and Head's Trustees and Macdonald's Contract, In re (59 L. J. Ch. 604; 45 Ch. D. 310), distinguished. Baker and Selmon's Contract, In re, 76 L. J. Party-wall Notice and Award—Material Fact not Disclosed by Vendors—Repayment of Deposit and Expenses of Investigating Title.]—The vendor of real estate is under an obligation to disclose any material defect in the title or in the subject of the sale which is exclusively within his own knowledge, and one which the purchaser could not be expected to discover for himself with the care ordinarily used in such transactions. The existence of a party-wall notice under sections 90 and 91 of the London Building Act, 1894, and an award made thereunder relating to a house which is the subject of a sale, constitute material facts which should be disclosed by the vendor to an intending purchaser. Carlisch v. Salt, 75 L. J. Ch. 175; [1906] 1 Ch. 335; 94 L. T. 58; 54 W. R. 244—Joyce, J.

Condition Stating Defect of Title—Delegation of Trust.]—A condition of sale of leasehold premises stated that a testator, by his will, bequeathed the premises to his wife in trust for herself and her children, to be applied by her as she should deem most expedient, and that, to give effect to the trusts contained in the will, the widow, on her re-marriage, conveyed the premises to trustees, upon trust, by sale or mortgage, to raise 1,000*l.* for the benefit of the said children, and that, in pursuance of this trust for sale, the vendors were selling and would convey the premises as trustees, and not otherwise, and should not be bound to procure the concurrence of any other parties. The will contained no provision authorising this to be done. The purchaser refused to complete, on the ground that a good title had not been shewn, as the widow had no power to delegate her trust. The vendors relied on the condition:—Held, that the widow committed a breach of trust by assigning the premises to trustees, and that the purchaser was not precluded by the condition from objecting to the title on this ground, inasmuch as he was entitled to assume that a power to do what was done by the widow would be shewn. O'Flanagan and Ryan's Contract, In re, [1905] 1 Ir. R. 280—M.R.

Perpetuity—Condition in Defeasance of Estate—Conveyance under Statute of Uses—Doubtful Title.—Prior to the Charitable Uses Act, 1735 (9 Geo. 2, c. 36), land was conveyed to charitable uses by bargain and sale for a year, and release, the conveyance taking effect under the Statute of Uses. The release contained a proviso to the effect that if at any time the land conveyed or the income derived from the same should be employed or converted to or for any other use or uses, intents or purposes, than had been declared in the conveyance, the trust premises should revert to the right heirs of the grantor:—Held, that the proviso was a common-law condition, but, semble, void as infringing the rule against perpetuities. Held also, that the point was not so clear that a title depending on it could be forced on an unwilling purchaser from the trustees of the charity. Hollis' Hospital Trustees and Hague, In re, 68 L. J. Ch. 673; [1899] 2 Ch. 540; 81 L. T. 90; 47 W. R. 691—Byrne, J.

Equitable Interests—Lease—Mortgage by Sub-demise to Lessor—Conveyance of Fee-simple by Lessor to Lessee Subject to Lease—Subsequent Purported Mortgage in Fee by Lessor—Estate or Interest Passing.—H., the owner in fee-simple of certain houses, by certain indentures in 1893 demised each of the houses for the term of ninety-nine years to W. at the rents and subject to the covenants therein contained, and thereupon W. sub-demised the houses to H. for the respective terms of ninety-nine years, less the last day thereof, by way of mortgage. In the same year, by deed, in which it was recited that H. had agreed to sell the houses subject to the leases to W., H., for the consideration therein mentioned, conveyed the houses together with the rents reserved by the leases, and the benefit of the covenants therein contained, to W. in fee-simple subject to the leases and the terms of years thereby respectively created. By deed also in 1893 W., for the consideration therein mentioned, conveyed the houses, together with the rents reserved by the leases and the benefit of the covenants therein contained, to the plaintiffs in fee-simple subject to the leases and the terms of years thereby respectively created. In 1894 H. by deed purported to convey all the houses to the defendant in fee-simple by way of mortgage. The defendant had no notice of the title of the plaintiffs to the houses:—Held (assuming, but without so deciding, that there was a merger at law of the terms of years, and that the existence of an intention on the part of H. and W. would not be sufficient to prevent such a merger), that H. and W. dealt with one another on the footing that the leases were or were to be deemed to be in existence, and that it would be inequitable to treat them as at an end, and that under the old law as it stood prior to the Judicature Act, 1873, H. had at the date of the mortgage to the defendant an equitable interest in the houses subject to the condition of accepting legal leases on the same terms as the old leases, and that under section 63 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, such interest passed to the defendant by the mortgage subject to the like condition. *Brandon v. Complicated and Ambiguous Facts susceptible of being Challenged.—A title depending upon the establishment of facts and dealings of a complicated and ambiguous nature, such as may reasonably be challenged with a practical chance of success, is not one which should be forced upon a purchaser. Handman and Wilcox, In re (71 L. 6. SALE UNDER DIRECTION OF THE COURT.

Undisclosed Prior Title—Protection of Purchaser.—An order of the Court dealing with real property will by virtue of section 70, subsection 1 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, protect a purchaser from any objection to his title on account of mere irregularity of procedure, but it will not confer a good title on the purchaser when the Court inadvertently deals with the property of one person under the supposition that it belongs to another, and without any notice to the true owner. Hall Dare's Contract, In re (51 L. Forcing Title upon Purchaser—Probability of Title being Questioned—Vendor a Purchaser for Value without Notice.—The Court will not force upon a purchaser a title where there is a probability that it will be questioned, and its validity, if questioned, may depend upon proof of the fact that the vendor was a purchaser for value without notice of the defect. Handman and Wilcox, In re, 71 L. J. Ch. 263; [1902] 1 Ch. 599; 86 L. T. 246—C.A.

S. COMPLETION.

Delay in—Vendor in Possession—Arrears of Rent Due before Date for Completion—Allocation of Rent Received—Interest.—A vendor who remains in possession after the date for completion and has elected to take interest on unpaid purchase-money in lieu of rents and profits, is in such a fiduciary relation towards the purchaser, as regards both the income and the corpus of the property, that he must hold upon trust for him the rents received since the day fixed for completion, and may not allocate them in satisfaction of arrears of rent previously owing to him. Lysaght v. Edwards (45 L. J. Ch. 554; 2 Ch. D. 499) applied. Plews v. Samuel, 73 L. J. Ch. 279; [1904] 1 Ch. 464; 90 L. T. 533; 52 W. R. 410—Kekewich, J.

— Specific Performance—“Wilful default” of Vendor—Interest—Rents and Profits—Possession Retained by Vendor—Outgoings—Loss from Farming—Allowance to Vendor—Occupation Rent.—By an agreement for the sale of real estate it was provided that the purchase should be completed on a fixed day, and that if from any cause whatever other than wilful default on the part of the vendors the completion of the purchase was delayed beyond that day the purchase-money should bear interest at 5 per cent. per annum till the actual day of payment. The draft conveyance prepared by the purchaser contained an assignment of the benefit of certain covenants on the part of one C. with the vendors to which the purchaser was entitled under the agreement. The vendors added words to the assignment restricting the benefit of these covenants. The purchaser objected to their insertion, and brought an action and obtained a declaration that the vendors were not entitled to the insertion of the words, and an order for specific performance of the contract and for the usual accounts and enquiries. Pending the completion of the purchase a tenant of one of the farms on the property sold determined his tenancy. The vendors thereupon paid him a sum in respect of his tenant right, and entered upon and worked the farm themselves, and in so doing incurred considerable loss. The vendors claimed to be allowed interest on the purchase-money and also the expenses incurred in working the farm, including the amount paid by them to the outgoing tenant:—Held, that the vendors, in insisting on the insertion of the restrictive words, had made an honest mistake and were not guilty of wilful default; that, even if they were guilty of wilful default, it was not the causa causans of the delay, and that there was nothing, therefore, to relieve the purchaser from paying interest on the purchase-money. Held, also, that the amount paid to the outgoing tenant in respect of his tenant right was properly allowed to the vendors, but that on an ordinary account of rents and profits the vendors could not be allowed the sums lost by them in carrying on the farm. Held, further, that on such an account the vendors were chargeable with the rents actually received by them, but not with an occupation rent. Bennett v. Stone, 71 L. J. Ch. 60; [1902] 1 Ch. 226; 85 L. T. 753; 50 W. R. 118—Buckley, J.

The meaning of “wilful default” discussed. Ib. And see col. 2601.

— Interest on Purchase-money — “Wilful default” of Vendors.—By agreement for the sale of freehold premises to the Postmaster-General, it was provided that the purchase should be completed on August 1, 1904; that on completion the purchaser should be given clear possession; that the purchaser should pay the purchase-money on that date; and that if, from any cause other than the wilful default of the vendors, the purchase should not be completed on or before that date, the purchaser should pay interest on the purchase-money. The vendors were in a position, shortly after August 1, 1904, to give vacant possession of all the premises, save one holding, which they had assumed to have been held under a quarterly tenancy. On that assumption they had served a three months’ notice to quit for August 1; but in ejectment proceedings it was held that the tenancy was a yearly one, commencing on May 1, and that therefore the notice was insufficient. The premises consisted of a licensed public-house which had been held for more than thirty years at an annual rent, payable quarterly. The tenancy had commenced on May 1, 1871, but the vendors had no record or recollection of the exact terms of the letting. As a result, the vendors were not in a position to complete till June 29, 1905:—Held, that, in assuming the tenancy to be quarterly, and in fixing the date for completion on that assumption, the vendors had been guilty of wilful default, and that therefore they were not entitled to be paid interest on the purchase-money. Postmaster-General and Colgan’s Contract, In re, [1906] 1 Ir. R. 287—Barton, J. Affirmed, [1906] 1 Ir. R. 477—C.A.

Act of Bankruptcy by Vendor before Date of Completion—Right of Purchaser to Refuse to Complete—Recovery of Deposit Paid by Purchaser.—Although a contract for the sale of property, the same to be completed on a certain date, entered into without notice of an available act of bankruptcy by the vendor, is a protected transaction under section 49 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1893, yet such protection does not extend to a conveyance or payment made in pursuance of such contract with notice of an available act of bankruptcy committed after the contract has been entered into and before the date fixed for completion, and the purchaser is entitled to refuse to complete and to recover back a deposit paid on entering into the contract, because the vendor is not in a position at the latter date to give either a good conveyance or a valid receipt for the purchase-money. Powell v. Marshall, Parkes & Co., 68 L. J. Q.B. 477; [1899] 1 Q.B. 710; 80 L. T. 509; 47 W. R. 419; 6 Manson, 157—C.A.

Title-deeds not in Vendor’s Possession—Right of Purchaser to Title-deeds.—The Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 3, sub-s. 6, only concerns the expenses of “production and inspection” of documents, and does not affect the ordinary right of a purchaser to have title-deeds handed over on completion. Johnson and Tustin, In re (54 L. J. Ch. 889; 30 Ch. D. 42), followed. Duthy and Jesson's Contract, In re, 67 L. J. Ch. 218; [1898] 1 Ch. 419; 78 L. T. 223; 46 W. R. 300—Romer, J.

By a contract of sale of freehold premises it was agreed that the purchaser should accept the best title that the vendors could give. It appeared that prior to the date of the commencement of the abstract of title there was a mortgage which it was stated had long since been paid off. The solicitors of the mortgagees declined to hand over the title-deeds to the purchaser:—Held, that in the absence of its being shewn that there was some difficulty as to title which prevented the vendors handing over the deeds, the purchaser was not bound to complete without the title-deeds. Ib.

Sale of Property Subject to Tenancies, and with Condition for Apportionment of Outgoings—Unstamped Agreement for Yearly Tenancy—Obligation on Vendor to Stamp it.—An agreement for the sale of freehold property provided that the property was sold subject to all tenancies, and also for apportionment of outgoings. Upon investigation of the title the purchaser discovered that an agreement with a yearly tenant of part of the property was unstamped, and required the vendor to stamp it before completion of the purchase. The vendor refused, and commenced proceedings for specific performance against the purchaser:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to have the agreement stamped at the vendor's expense. Coleman v. Coleman, 79 L. T. 66—North, J.

Expenses Incurred for Paving Street—Notice to do Works—Default by Owner—Works Undertaken by Local Authority—Time when Expenses become a Charge on Premises—Outgoings.—Where default is made by an owner in complying with a notice under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to do certain paving works in respect of his property, and the local authority has undertaken the works, the expenses incurred by the local authority for such works first become, within the meaning of section 257 of the Act, a charge on the premises upon the completion of the works. Allen and Driscoll's Contract, In re, 73 L. J. Ch. 614; [1904] 2 Ch. 226; 91 L. T. 676; 52 W. R. 681; 68 J. P. 469; 2 L. G. R. 959; 20 T. L. R. 605—C.A.

Where, therefore, the owner has agreed to sell the property and to pay the outgoings up to the date of completion, and the local authority have not completed the paving works by that time the expenses of such works must be borne by the purchaser. Stock v. Meakin (69 L. J. Ch. 401; [1900] 1 Ch. 683) followed. Ib.

9. CONVEYANCE.

Preparation of—Concurrence of Mortgagee—Costs.—A condition in a contract for sale of land that the assurance and every instrument required for completing the vendor's title or for any other purpose is to be "prepared" by and at the expense of the purchaser is not sufficiently wide to throw the costs of perusing and executing the conveyance on behalf of a mortgagee who concurred in the conveyance on the purchaser. Sander and Walford's Contract, In re, 83 L. T. 316—Farwell, J.

Sale of Real Estate by Personal Representatives—Concurrence of Non-proving and Non-disclaiming Executor.—The expression "personal representatives" as used in the first four sections of the Land Transfer Act, 1897, means those who are named as executors in a will, whether they have actually obtained a grant of probate or not. Therefore in the case of a testator who has died after the commencement of the Act, the concurrence of all his executors, whether or not they have proved the will, is necessary to effect a valid conveyance of his real estate. Pawley and London and Provincial Bank's Contract, In re, 65 L. J. Ch. 6; [1900] 1 Ch. 58; 81 L. T. 507; 48 W. R. 107—Kekewich, J.

Executory Contract for Sale by Trustees—Contract for Re-purchase by One Trustee—Validity—Conveyance—Claim by Purchaser to have Trustee's Name Inserted as his Nominee.—Where trustees entered into a contract for sale of the trust property, and whilst the contract remained executory the purchaser entered into a contract for the re-sale of the property at the same price and on the same terms to one of the trustees, and claimed the right to have the name of such trustee inserted in the conveyance as his nominee, but the trustee declined to allow his name to be inserted and the purchaser refused to accept a conveyance from the trustee to himself, and thereupon the trustees brought an action for specific performance of the original contract, the only defence to which was a counterclaim by the purchaser for specific performance of the second contract or damages, it was held that the purchaser was bound to complete his contract, and that he was not entitled to specific performance of the sub-contract or damages. Dictum of MELLISH, L. J., in Parker v. M'Kenna (44 L. J. Ch. 425, 441; L. R. 10 Ch. 96, 125) applied. Williams v. Scott (69 L. J. P.C. 77; [1901] A.C. 499) applied. Delves v. Gray, 71 L. J. Ch. 808; [1902] 2 Ch. 606; 87 L. T. 425; 51 W. R. 56—Byrne, J.

Although, according to the general practice, a purchaser may in ordinary cases take a conveyance to a nominee for himself, there is no principle or authority which compels vendors to convey to one of their own number who declines to accept the nomination under circumstances which may expose them hereafter to the risk of the suggestion of being parties to a breach of trust. Ib.

Married Woman—Mortgagee—Sale of Estate—Concurrence of Husband.—A married woman, who has become the mortgagee of real property after the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, and to whom the money advanced belongs as her separate estate, is in no sense a trustee for the mortgagor until the principal, interest, and costs under the mortgage have been satisfied. Therefore, upon a sale of the property by the mortgagor with the concurrence of the mortgagee, it is not necessary that her husband should also concur in the conveyance in order to give the purchaser a good title, or that the deed should be acknowledged by her under the Fines and Recoveries Act. Harkness and Allsopp's Contract, In re (65 L. J. Ch. 726; [1896] 2 Ch. 358), distinguished. Brooke and Fremlin's Contract, In re, 67 L. J. Ch. 272; [1898] 1 Ch. 647; 78 L. T. 416; 46 W. R. 442—Kekewich, J.

Exception to be Ascertained by Subsequent Election—Limitation of Estate to Commence in futuro—Invalidity of Exception.]—By a conveyance on sale certain freehold lands were conveyed unto and to the use of the purchaser in fee-simple, with the exceptions and reservations set forth in the first schedule to the conveyance. This schedule contained the following words: "Save and except and reserving unto the vendors a piece of land not less than forty feet in width," commencing at a specified point and terminating "at the nearest road to be made by the purchaser or his assigns on the estate so as to give access to such road" from other lands of the vendors. The purchaser afterwards constructed certain roads on the estate. In an action brought to determine whether a plot of land on which a road had been commenced but not completed was exempt from the conveyance, —Held, that the conveyance operated at common law, and not under the Statute of Uses, and that the exception was bad; but that even if the conveyance operated under the Statute of Uses it was equally bad as infringing the rule against perpetuities. Savill v. Bethell, 71 L. J. Ch. 652; [1902] 2 Ch. 523; 87 L. T. 191; 50 W. R. 580—C.A.

Question as to Validity of Contract—Determination of Conveyancing Question on Summons.]—Where an intending vendor and purchaser of real estate have dealt with one another on the footing of there being some contract between them, and have endeavoured to agree to the form of a conveyance, the Court ought not to refuse to deal with a summons taken out by one of them under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, for the determination of a question arising on the form of the conveyance, merely because the other party says that he may raise a serious question as to the validity of the contract which would prevent an order for specific performance being made against him. The Court can declare what form the conveyance should take if there is one. Lander and Bagley's Contract, In re (61 L. J. Ch. 707; [1892] 3 Ch. 41), approved. Hughes and Ashley, In re, 69 L. J. Ch. 741; [1900] 2 Ch. 595; 83 L. T. 890; 49 W. R. 67—C.A.

Maintaining Fences—Covenant—Form of Conveyance to Purchaser.]—The object of having a deed of conveyance is not merely to vest the property the subject of it in the purchaser, but to embody covenants as to what must be done under the contract of sale after completion of the purchase. Therefore, where a purchaser bought under a contract which made him liable to erect and for ever after maintain fences, as marked on the plan of property sold by public auction, the vendor was held entitled to have the obligations of the purchaser expressed in the conveyance to him of his lot. Cooper and Crondace's Contract, In re, 90 L. T. 258; 52 W. R. 441—Kekewich, J.

Land Inclosed by Purchaser in Excess of Parcels—Mistake—Expenditure—Acquiescence—Compensation—Costs.]—A purchaser in 1895 took possession of land in excess of that purported to be conveyed to him, and inclosed the land with a wall. In 1899 the vendors brought an action for declaration of title:—Held, that the defendant was bound to give up so much of the land as did not pass by his conveyance; he was not entitled to compensation for his expenditure thereon; there was a duty on the part of the vendors under the conditions of sale to stump out the plots, which in this case they had not done, therefore there would be no order as to costs. Marriott v. Reid, 82 L. T. 369; 64 J. P. 376—Kekewich, J.

Misdescription of Purchaser—Evidence of Identity.]—William Wray, in partnership with his two sons and another person, carried on business at Laurel House, North Hill, Highgate, under the style of "William Wray," without the addition of the words "& Co." or any other words. William Wray died in 1885, and his widow was admitted as a partner in his place and the business was carried on as before and under the same name. In 1890 the partners bought North Hill House, Highgate, as an investment, and paid for it out of partnership assets. The conveyance was made between the vendor of the one part and "William Wray of Laurel House, North Hill, Highgate," of the other part, and the property was conveyed to William Wray in fee-simple:—Held, that the legal estate passed by the conveyance to the four partners as joint tenants. Maughan v. Sharpe (84 L. J. O.P. 19; 17 C. B. (N.S.) 443) followed. Wray v. Wray, 74 L. J. Ch. 687; [1905] 2 Ch. 349; 93 L. T. 304; 54 W. R. 136—Warrington, J.

"Matter or thing relating or incidental to" Sale—Requisition as to Question of Conveyance.]—Under a condition enabling the vendor at a sale to annul the sale if any objection should be made "as to the title, particulars, conditions, or any other matter or thing relating or incidental to the sale," which he is unable or unwilling to comply with, the vendor can rescind the contract on account of a requisition as to a matter of conveyance, as well as one as to a matter of title. Deighton and Harris' Contract, In re, 67 L. J. Ch. 240; [1898] 1 Ch. 458; 73 L. T. 430; 46 W. R. 341—C.A.

The vendor contracted to sell property for the remainder of a term of ninety-nine years, stating that he was a mortgagee selling under his power. It appeared that his title was under a mortgage by sub-demise only, the legal estate under which was outstanding in a mortgagee, who was said to have been paid off, and there were certain outstanding days vested in various parties. The purchaser required these persons to join in the assignment to get in these outstanding interests. The vendor could not obtain their concurrence without trouble and expense, and he gave notice to annul the sale under the condition:—Held, that the case came within the condition, and he was entitled to rescind. Bowman v. Hyland (47 L. J. Ch. 581; 8 Ch. D. 588) distinguished. Ib.

Right of Way—Reservation of “all rights of way hitherto exercised”.—Unity of Title—Way used by Tenant of One Property—Conveyance not Executed by Purchaser.]—The plaintiff purchased two farms, W. and C., which had been held in unity of title for thirty-five years, during which time there had been user, in favour of C., of a way over W. He sold W. The contract contained a reservation of “all rights of way hitherto exercised” over W. The conveyance contained a similar reservation, but was not executed by the purchaser. The purchaser entered into possession and executed a mortgage. The mortgage became vested in the defendant, who took possession. The plaintiff's tenant of C. having been interfered with by the defendant in the use of the way over W.,—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction restraining the defendant from interfering with the user of the way over W. May v. Belleville, 74 L. J. Ch. 678; [1905] 2 Ch. 605; 93 L. T. 241; 54 W. R. 12—Buckley, J.

10. TITLE-DEEDS.

Right of Purchaser to Title-deeds.]—The Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 2, sub-s. 6, only concerns the expenses of “production and inspection” of documents, and does not affect the ordinary right of a purchaser to have title-deeds handed over on completion. Johnson and Tustin, In re (54 L. J. Ch. 889; 30 Ch. D. 42), followed. Duthy and Jesson's Contract, In re, 67 L. J. Ch. 218; [1898] 1 Ch. 419; 73 L. T. 223; 46 W. R. 300—Romer, J.

By a contract of sale of freehold premises it was agreed that the purchaser should accept the best title that the vendors could give. It appeared that prior to the date of the commencement of the abstract of title there was a mortgage which it was stated had long since been paid off. The solicitors of the mortgagees declined to hand over the title-deeds to the purchaser:—Held, that in the absence of its being shewn that there was some difficulty as to title which prevented the vendors handing over the deeds, the purchaser was not bound to complete without the title-deeds. Ib.

Custody—Sale of Land—Retention by Vendor of Part of Estate—Extinguished Easement—Sale of Dominant Tenement—Retention of Servient Tenement.]—Where a person sells land, by his purchase of which an easement over land which he previously owned had become extinguished by unity of ownership, his retention of the servient tenement entitles him under the 5th rule of section 2 of the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, to retain the title-deeds relating to the dominant tenement and to the easement, for they must be considered to relate to land which he retains. Lehmann and Walker's Contract, In re, 75 L. J. Ch. 768; [1906] 2 Ch. 640; 95 L. T. 259—Swinfen Eady, J.

11. VENDOR'S LIEN.

Personal Estate—Reversionary Property.]—The doctrine of the vendor's lien for unpaid purchase-money extends to pure personal estate.

Davies v. Thomas (69 L. J. Ch. 643, 645; [1900] 2 Ch. 462, 463) followed. Stuckey, In re; Stuckey v. Kekewich, 75 L. J. Ch. 58; [1906] 1 Ch. 67; 93 L. T. 718; 54 W. R. 256; 22 T. L. R. 33—C.A.

Arrears of Interest—Statute of Limitations.]—The lien attaches not only to principal, but extends to interest from the time when the lien came into existence; and there is no Statute of Limitations applicable in such a case to restrict the right to recover interest, but the vendor can recover interest for the whole period from the date of the sale. Rose v. Watson (33 L. J. Ch. 385, 389; 10 H.L. C. 672, 683), Hancock, In re; Hancock v. Berrey (57 L. J. Ch. 793), and Mellersh v. Brown (60 L. J. Ch. 43, 44; 45 Ch. D. 225, 229) followed. Ib.

The plaintiff, who was entitled under certain settlements to various interests in certain property, including a reversionary interest in a legacy of 5,000*l.*, in 1873 mortgaged those interests. In 1874 his father discharged all his liabilities and took a transfer of the mortgages, and by a deed made between the plaintiff and his father it was declared that the property other than the 5,000*l.* legacy should stand charged with the money advanced by the father, the 5,000*l.* legacy being expressly released from the mortgaged securities. By deed of January 31, 1874, made between the plaintiff and his father, the plaintiff, in consideration of 1,500*l.* expressed to be paid to him by his father, assigned the reversionary legacy to his father absolutely. A receipt for the 1,500*l.* was indorsed on the deed, and signed and witnessed, but no money was actually paid to the plaintiff. The father was at this time sole trustee of the investments representing the reversionary legacy. He died in 1900. The plaintiff brought his action claiming that the deed of January 31, 1874, was intended to be a security only, but the Court did not take that view of the facts. Alternatively he claimed a lien on the investments representing the 5,000*l.* legacy for the 1,500*l.* purchase-money and interest from January 31, 1874:—Held, that the lien attached both as regards principal and interest, and there was no Statute of Limitations applicable; further, the father being sole trustee of the fund, the Court, if administering the fund, would have no difficulty in enforcing the rights of the unpaid vendor. The plaintiff was therefore entitled to enforce his lien on the fund representing the legacy for his purchase-money, with interest at 4 per cent. from the date of the purchase. Ib.

Contract Excluding Lien—Waiver.]—By agreement of June 17, 1899, between W. and M. and a syndicate, it was agreed that W. and M. should sell to the syndicate a brickfield for 13,000*l.*, of which 4,000*l.* was to be paid in cash and 9,000*l.* in shares of a company about to be formed. By agreement of June 23, 1899, between the syndicate and the company, the syndicate agreed to sell to the company the brickfield and premises for 25,000*l.*, of which 15,000*l.* was to be paid in cash and 10,000*l.* in shares. By subsequent agreements W. and M. agreed to take payment of the whole of their purchase-money in shares, and the syndicate agreed to take from the company 21,500*l.* in shares and 3,500*l.* in cash. The capital of the company was to consist of 30,000 ordinary shares of 1*l.* each and 1,000 5*l.* per cent. first mortgage debentures of 10*l.* each. The prospectus stated: "The debentures are solely applicable as working capital, and for the erection of further plant and machinery, and are secured by a charge on the leaseholds, rights, and assets of the company." It also stated that the syndicate, who had agreed to defray all preliminary expenses, had fixed the price at 25,000*l.*, of which 15,000*l.* was to be payable in cash and the balance in shares, "leaving the entire debenture issue of 10,000*l.* available for working capital and new machinery." The brickfield and premises were assigned to the company by W. and M. on August 30, 1899, though the deed was not executed by the syndicate. The company paid to the syndicate 2,670*l.* on account of the 3,500*l.* (the portion of the purchase-money to be paid in cash), leaving a balance due of over 800*l.* A considerable amount was subscribed for debentures, but the company became abortive and was wound up:—Held, that the syndicate was not entitled to a lien for unpaid purchase-money in priority to the debenture-holders. Durrow Brick Co., In re, [1904] 1 I. R. 530—C.A.

Equitable Execution — Receiver — "Rents profits and moneys" — Debtor's Interest in Real Estate — Vendor and Purchaser — Contract for Sale — Payment of Deposit — Money Paid in Compromise of Action on Contract.—The purchaser of a freehold house and premises belonging to the defendant paid his deposit and entered into possession. He never completed, but refused to deliver up possession, and subsequently commenced an action against the vendor for return of the deposit, in which the vendor counterclaimed for specific performance. While this action was pending, R. recovered judgment for 55*l.* and costs (100*l.* 7*s.*) against the purchaser, and a receiver was appointed "upon first giving security" to receive the rents, profits, and moneys receivable in respect of the purchaser's interest in the house and premises. Notice of this order was given to the vendor. Afterwards the purchaser's action against the vendor was compromised, the purchaser delivering up possession of the premises on receiving 110*l.* from the vendor. R. then commenced this action for a declaration that he was entitled to a lien or charge on the premises for 155*l.* 7*s.* and for personal payment by the vendor. The receiver subsequently gave security:—Held, that the 110*l.* was not paid in respect of any interest which the purchaser had in the property, but as the price for getting him out of possession, and that the action failed. Ridout v. Fowler, 73 L. J. Ch. 579; [1904] 2 Ch. 93; 91 L. T. 509; 53 W. R. 42—C.A.

Leaseholds Bequeathed on Trust for Sale — Proceeds of Sale — Lunatic not so Found — Direction to get in Estate — Priorities.—The vendor of a share of the proceeds of sale of leasehold property bequeathed by will to trustees on trust for sale at a future date is entitled to a vendor's lien for unpaid purchase-money on the share of the proceeds of sale in the hands of the trustees. Collins v. Collins (31 Beav. 346) approved. Davies v. Thomas, 69 L. J. Ch. 643; [1900] 2 Ch. 462; 83 L. T. 11; 49 W. R. 68—C.A.

Per RIGBY, L.J.—The trustees of the will having notice that the purchase-money of the share remained unpaid, independently of the doctrine of a vendor's lien, ought not in the proper administration of the trust to pay the share of the proceeds of sale to the purchaser without first satisfying the vendor. Ib.

An order, made on an ex parte application under the Lunacy Act, 1890, s. 116, directing a person in the name and on behalf of a lunatic not so found to receive and give a discharge for his property, does not affect the legal or equitable rights of other parties against that property—as, for instance, a vendor's lien thereon for unpaid purchase-money. Winkle, In re (63 L. J. Ch. 541; [1894] 2 Ch. 519), explained. Ib.

Specific Performance—Contract to Purchase Land by Trustee of Settled Estates—Subrogation — Non-payment of Purchase-money — Entry of Successive Tenants for Life and Payment of Interest—Liability of Trust Estate to Vendor.—In 1873 B., who was the sole trustee of settled estates (comprising personal estate directed to be invested in purchase of land), contracted, with the consent of the tenant for life, to purchase the glebe lands of a vicarage, the purchase to be completed in 1874, with a usual clause for payment of interest till actual completion. The personal estate was then invested in a way which prevented its being available for payment of the purchase-money at the time fixed for completion. The purchase-money was never paid, but the successive tenants for life entered into possession of the land and paid interest. B. died in 1880, and his estate was fully administered after usual advertisements for creditors' claims. In 1882 the settled estates were disentailed and re-settled, and in 1889 the personal estate, liable to be invested in land, was distributed by the trustees of the re-settlement, who had no actual notice of the plaintiffs' claim. In 1896 the plaintiffs brought an action to which the vicar, the present tenants for life and in tail, the legal personal representative of B., and the present trustees were defendants, claiming specific performance and damages or a declaration of vendor's lien:—Held, that the contract made by B. was not enforceable against the persons who had become entitled to the settled property; that B., in entering into the contract under the circumstances, acquired no right of indemnity out of the settled property to which the vendors could succeed by way of subrogation; that the vendors had no case against the representatives of B. or against the present trustees personally, and that they were entitled to nothing more than a vendor's lien on the land sold. Ecclesiastical Commissioners v. Pinney, 69 L. J. Ch. 844; [1900] 2 Ch. 736; 83 L. T. 384; 49 W. R. 82—C.A.

12. COMPENSATION.

Errors of Description in Particulars—Subsequent Conveyance—Right of Purchaser to Maintain Action for Errors after Conveyance.—After a purchase of real property has been completed and a conveyance executed no action can, in the absence of fraud, be maintained by the purchaser against the vendor, in respect of errors of description in the particulars contained in the contract of sale but not contained in the conveyance, as all such particulars are merged in and put an end to by the subsequent conveyance. The plaintiffs in their statement of claim alleged that, by an agreement in writing they agreed with the defendant to purchase from him an estate in fee-simple, and that by this agreement, which incorporated certain particulars of sale, the defendant contracted and warranted that the mansion-house was in first-class order as to drainage and otherwise; that subsequently the purchase was completed and the conveyance executed, and that they then discovered serious defects in the drainage which they had to remedy. In an action by the plaintiffs to recover damages in respect of the errors in the particulars of sale,—Held, that after conveyance such action could not be maintained. Greswolde-Williams v. Barneyby, 88 L. T. 708; 49 W. R. 208—Wills, J.

Particulars—Omission from—Notice from Local Authority to Execute Street Works—Non-disclosure—Outgoings.—Property in a town was put up for sale by auction subject to particulars and conditions of sale, one of which was to the effect that any error, misstatement, or omission in the particulars should not annul the sale, but compensation should be allowed. Prior to the date of the auction the vendor had received from the local authority notice to execute certain street works in respect of the property. The fact of this notice having been sent was not stated in the particulars, but it was admitted that the omission to disclose it was not from any fraudulent intention. The purchaser did not become aware of the notice until after he had signed the contract, and he claimed compensation under the condition:—Held, that he was not entitled to compensation, for a purchaser of such a property must be taken to have known that notice to execute street works might be served at any time, and to have bought subject to such a contingency, and the omission to disclose the notice could not have affected the value of the property. Leyland and Taylor, In re, 69 L. J. Ch. 764; [1900] 2 Ch. 625; 83 L. T. 380; 49 W. R. 17—C.A.

Condition Excluding Compensation—Misdescription—Rescission of Contract—Return of Deposit—Possessory Title.—Freehold property was put up by the defendants for sale by auction, and was described in the particulars of sale as containing 5 a. 0 r. 26 p., and bordering on a lake. One of the conditions of sale was as follows: "The property is believed and shall be taken to be correctly described in the particulars as to quantity and otherwise . . . and if any error, misstatement or omission in the particulars be discovered, the same shall not annul the sale, nor shall any compensation be allowed by the vendors to the purchaser in respect thereof." The plaintiff purchased the property and paid a deposit. Upon investigation of the title the defendants were only able to shew a good title to 4 a. 3 r. out of the 5 a. 0 r. 26 p. sold. As regarded a strip of land adjoining the lake, the defendants offered a possessory title of less than forty years. The plaintiff declined to complete, and brought an action for rescission of the contract and return of his deposit, and the defendants counterclaimed for specific performance:—Held, that so far as the strip of land adjoining the lake was concerned the contract must be regarded as an open one, and the purchaser was therefore entitled to a forty years' title by possession; that the misstatement as to the acreage was of such a material character as to preclude the defendants from relying on condition 5 as a defence to the action; and that the plaintiff was therefore entitled to have his contract rescinded and his deposit returned. Jacobs v. Revell, 69 L. J. Ch. 879; [1900] 2 Ch. 588; 83 L. T. 629; 49 W. R. 109—Buckley, J.

Sale by Court—Damage to Property after Sale—Claim for Compensation after Conveyance.—A purchaser of house property which was sold by auction by order of the Court, and was in possession of a caretaker appointed by the receiver, complained in his requisitions on title of damage to the premises after the sale, and claimed compensation. He afterwards got possession, and accepted a conveyance on a subsequent date, but did not withdraw his claim for compensation:—Held, that, the acceptance of a conveyance was not in the circumstances a bar to the claim for compensation, and that as proper care had not been taken of the premises by the receiver between the date of the sale and the time when the purchaser took possession, the purchaser was entitled to compensation. Connolly v. Keating (No. 2), [1908] 1 Ir. R. 356—M.R.

Claim for Damages after Completion and Conveyance—Vendor to Complete House and Furnish Fixtures.—S. agreed to buy a house in the course of erection from C., who agreed to supply and fix certain drains, stoves, fixtures, &c., and complete the house in a proper and workmanlike manner:—Held, that, notwithstanding the completion of the conveyance of the house, S. could maintain an action against C. for failing to supply and fix certain articles, and for not completing the house in a proper and workmanlike manner. Saunders v. Cockrill, 87 L. T. 30—D.

Right of Purchaser to Maintain Action of Tort.—A purchaser of an interest in land cannot maintain an action for a wrong done in relation to the land prior to the date of the purchase, except where the wrong is a continuing one. Dawson v. Great Northern and City Railway, 73 L. J. K.B. 174; [1904] 1 K.B. 277; 90 L. T. 20; 68 J. P. 214; 20 T. L. R. 87—Wright, J. Reversed in part, 21 T. L. R. 114—C.A.

13. COVENANTS.

(a) Generally.

Assignment of Lease—Qualified Covenant against—Unreasonable Refusal to Consent to Assignment—Doubtful Title.—The vendor agreed to sell to a brewery company a leasehold public-house under an open contract. The lease contained a covenant against assignment without consent, but the consent was not to be "unreasonably withheld in the case of a respectable and responsible tenant." There was a proviso for re-entry in the event of breach of any of the covenants in the lease. The lessor refused his consent to the assignment, stating that his "chief reason" was that he desired to keep the house as a "free house." The vendor refused to give any indemnity to the purchasers against any litigation:—Held, that the title was not one which could, under the circumstances, be forced upon an unwilling purchaser. Marshall and Salt's Contract, In re, 69 L. J. Ch. 542; [1900] 2 Ch. 202; 83 L. T. 147; 48 W. R. 508—Byrne, J.

Breach of Implied Covenant for Title—Assignment Carrying out Contract of Sale—"Estate, term, and interest"—"Beneficial owner."—A vendor, who was entitled under an agreement to a lease of the lands therein described and coloured red on the plan annexed thereto contracted to sell and subsequently as "beneficial owner" assigned to the purchaser all his "estate, term, and interest" under the agreement of and in the land coloured red on the said plan annexed thereto. After completion it was discovered that previously to the contract for sale a small portion of the land coloured red had with the privity of the vendor been demised to a third party, and that consequently the vendor could not make a title to such portion:—Held, in an action by the purchaser for damages for breach of the vendor's implied covenants for title, that there had been a breach by the vendor of such covenants, and that he was liable for damages in respect thereof. May v. Platt, 69 L. J. Ch. 357; [1900] 1 Ch. 616; 83 L. T. 123; 48 W. R. 617—Farwell, J.

Action for Damages—Evidence—Purchaser's Knowledge of Defect—Mistake—Counterclaim—Rectification.—In such an action the vendor is not entitled to adduce evidence to prove that the purchaser at the date of the contract knew of the diminution of the land, nor can the vendor, if counterclaiming for rectification, adduce evidence to prove mistake. Rectification in such circumstances would be in reality a transgression of the well-settled practice that a plaintiff seeking specific performance cannot have specific performance with a parol variation. Ib. And see cols. 2643-4.

Freeholds—Long and Continuous User—Acquiescence—Waiver—Release.—The long and continuous user of freehold premises in a manner wholly inconsistent with the tenor and purpose of a restrictive covenant subject to which the premises were originally conveyed, is tantamount to the waiver or release of such covenant, and the Court will not uphold the objection of a purchaser who in ignorance of the restriction has contracted to buy the premises for a purpose involving a continuance of the breach, and who in consequence of the subsequent discovery of the restriction refuses to complete. Gibson v. Doeg (27 L. J. Ex. 37; 2 H. & N. 615) and Summerson, In re; Dawrie v. Summerson (69 L. J. Ch. 57n.), followed. Hepworth v. Pickles, 69 L. J. Ch. 55; [1900] 1 Ch. 108; 81 L. T. 818; 48 W. R. 184—Farwell, J.

Covenant by Purchaser not to Erect Overlooking Buildings—Buildings Five Yards off—"Adjoining."—Premises may be "adjoining" though they are not contiguous. In a conveyance on sale of a portion of plaintiffs' land to the defendant, the purchaser covenanted that he would not "in the erection of buildings adjoining the hereditaments of the vendors" permit the insertion of any "lights" overlooking such premises. The defendant constructed a number of houses whose gardens or backyards reached within five or six yards of the plaintiffs' land, and contained windows overlooking the same:—Held, that the houses "adjoined" the plaintiffs' land within the meaning of the covenant, and that the defendant had committed a breach thereof. Ind, Coope & Co. v. Hamblin, 81 L. T. 779; 48 W. R. 238—Buckley, J.

(b) Restrictive.

Possessory Title—Constructive Notice—Purchaser.—The benefit of a restrictive covenant affecting the user of land is a paramount right in the nature of a negative easement binding the land in equity; and a squatter who acquires a title to the land under the Real Property Limitation Acts acquires his title subject to the covenant, even though he may have no actual notice of it. Nisbet and Potts' Contract, In re, 75 L. J. Ch. 238; [1906] 1 Ch. 386; 94 L. T. 297; 54 W. R. 286; 22 T. L. R. 233—C.A.

A person who buys land from a successful squatter, and is content to take the squatter's title, depending upon the Real Property Limitation Acts, without insisting upon a forty years' title, is affected with notice of covenants restricting the user of the land of which he would have become acquainted if he had made reasonable enquiry into the title prior to the squatter's. The principles laid down in London and South Western Railway v. Gomm (51 L. J. Ch. 530, 532; 20 Ch. D. 562, 582) and Cox and Neve's Contract, In re ([1891] 2 Ch. 109, 117), applied. Ib.

Devolution of Benefit—Covenant Running with Land—"One messuage or dwelling-house"—"Private residence"—Residential Flats.—Where on a sale the benefit of a covenant restricting the use of the purchaser's land is clearly annexed to all or any part of land retained by the vendor, it passes by assignment of that land or any part thereof, and may be said to run with it, as well in contemplation of equity as of law, without proof of any special bargain or representation on the assignment, and even though the assignee is ignorant of the existence of the covenant. In such a case it runs not because the conscience of either party is affected, but because the assignee has acquired something which adhered in or was annexed to the land. Rogers v. Hosegood, 69 L. J. Ch. 652; [1900] 2 Ch. 388; 83 L. T. 186; 48 W. R. 659—C.A.

As in contemplation of equity a mortgagor is the true owner of the land, the benefit of such a covenant will run with the land in equity where it is made with a mortgagor alone, notwithstanding the rule at law according to which a mortgagor for this purpose was treated as a stranger to the land—Webb v. Russell (3 Term Rep. 393). Ib.

The erection on a plot of land of a block of residential flats, having a common public entrance-hall, corridors, lifts, and staircases, is a breach of a covenant to erect "no more than one messuage or dwelling-house" thereon.

It is likewise a breach of a covenant that every house to be erected thereon shall be "adapted for and used as and for a private residence only." Ib.

Not Contained in Contract—Form of Conveyance.]—Under a contract with a purchaser for the sale of land in fee-simple free from incumbrances, with the exception of one specified restrictive covenant, the vendor is not entitled to insert in the conveyance a further restrictive covenant on the ground that he has entered into a prior contract with another which would render him liable to an action unless the further restrictive covenant was inserted, though the prior contract might be a good defence to an action for specific performance. Wallis and Barnard's Contract, In re, 68 L. J. Ch. 753; [1899] 2 Ch. 515; 81 L. T. 382; 48 W. R. 57—Kekewich, J.

"Beerhouse or shop"—No Land Retained by Vendor—Right of Administrator to Enforce—Personal Contract—"Actio personalis moritur cum persona."]—In a conveyance of land to a company in fee-simple the company covenanted for themselves, their successors and assigns, with the vendor, his heirs, executors, and administrators, that they would not build on a certain part of the land conveyed "any beer house or shop or any hotel of less annual value than 50l." The vendor, who had no other land in the neighbourhood, died, having devised and bequeathed all his property to the plaintiff, who was his administratrix. The defendant, who was an assign of the land in question from the company with notice of the restrictive covenant, proposed to build two shops thereon, and the plaintiff brought an action to restrain the building as being in contravention of the covenant:—Held, first, that upon its true construction the covenant only applied to a beer-shop, and not to an ordinary shop; and secondly, that the covenant was a personal one, which could not be enforced in equity against an assign of the purchaser by the representative of a vendor who had no interest in any adjoining land which would be damaged by breach of the covenant. Tulk v. Moxhay (18 L. J. Ch. 83; 2 Ph. 774) distinguished. Formby v. Barker, 72 L. J. Ch. 716; [1903] 2 Ch. 539; 89 L. T. 249; 51 W. R. 646—C.A.

Building Scheme—Auction Sale—Prior Purchaser—Benefit of Covenants—Assigns of Vendor.]

—A vendor, the owner in fee of an estate, conveyed part of it to D., who, for himself, his executors, administrators, and assigns, entered into certain restrictive covenants with the vendor, his heirs and assigns. About the same time the vendor conveyed two other portions of the estate to two other purchasers, subject to restrictive covenants similar to D.'s covenants. The vendor subsequently sold the remainder of the estate in lots by auction subject to restrictive stipulations binding on each purchaser similar to D.'s covenants. The auction sale plan shewed the whole estate sold and unsold. Action by the assigns of purchasers at the auction sale to enforce against a lessee of an assign of D. the covenants entered into by D. with the vendor. The benefit of these covenants had never been expressly assigned to the purchasers at the auction sale:—Held, that there was a general building scheme affecting the whole estate; that D. was not bound by it for want of reciprocity; but that the plan and particulars of the auction sale raised an irresistible inference that the vendor intended the purchasers at that sale to have the benefit of D.'s covenants, so that the purchasers at that sale could enforce D.'s covenants as assigns of the vendor. Nalder & Collyer's Brewery Co. v. Harman, 83 L. T. 257—C.A. Affirming, 64 J. P. 358—Kekewich, J.

Building Scheme—Mutual Covenants—Waiver—Highway—Cul-de-sac—Dedication to the Public.]—A corporation having acquired land to widen a street sold surplus land by auction under conditions requiring the purchasers to observe the by-laws as to building. The corporation reserved the right to waive or alter any stipulations as to any land not sold at the sale or, with the consent of the purchaser, as to any land so sold. The corporation consented to alter the plans of a purchaser so that the air-space required by the by-laws was provided out of a square, and not out of land sold at the sale. The square was a cul-de-sac, but not separated by any bar from the highway. It had never been paved or repaired by the local authority:—Held, that there was under the circumstances no building scheme which the corporation was not at liberty to alter, and that, although a cul-de-sac may be a highway, no dedication of the square to the public had been proved, and that the user proved was only that of private rights of way to the houses in the square. Att.-Gen. v. Richmond Corporation, 89 L. T. 700; 68 J. P. 73; 2 L. G. R. 628; 20 T. L. R. 131—Swinfen Eady, J.

—Right to Injunction—Change in Character of Neighbourhood.]—The Court will not generally infer that a building scheme was intended, where the contract leaves undefined the property to be bound by the conditions which are to apply, and does not bind the vendor to observe the conditions in the meantime as to property remaining unsold, especially where the vendor has the right to modify the conditions as to the unsold part. Osborne v. Bradley, 73 L. J. Ch. 49; [1903] 2 Ch. 446; 89 L. T. 11—Farwell, J.

Where a restrictive covenant is entered into for the benefit of the covenantee personally, and not to secure the amenities of his property or as part of a building scheme, the plaintiff will not lose his right to enforce the covenant by injunction, on the ground that there has been a change in the character of the neighbourhood, unless he himself has been guilty of some act or omission raising a personal equity against him. Ib.

—Notice of Restrictive Covenants—Trivial Breach by Plaintiff—No Bar to Action.]—Certain lands were subject to a building scheme, the provisions of which were contained in a deed of 1854. The purchaser of a plot was informed by the vendor in good faith that the original deed was lost or destroyed, and what purported to be a true copy was produced. This copy subsequently proved to be defective. An action was brought by an adjoining owner to restrain the defendant from erecting or allowing to remain upon his land certain buildings which contravened the provision as to a building-line. The property in respect of which he was entitled to sue had certain erections upon it contravening another building stipulation, which provided that no erection should be built within four feet of a boundary-fence:—Held, that the defendant was affected with notice of the building stipulations, for that there was nothing in this case to take it out of the general rule that notice of a deed is notice of its contents. Held, further, that the plaintiff had only committed a trivial breach of a trivial covenant, and that such a breach did not disentitle the plaintiff from having the building stipulations strictly enforced. Hooper v. Bromet, 89 L. T. 37—Farwell, J.

— Several Sub-Leases made Subject to Covenants in Head-Lease—Acquisition of Reversion by Lessee—Implied Obligation on Lessee towards Sub-Lessees to Observe Restrictive Covenants—Building Scheme.—By lease made in 1854 R. devised two adjoining parcels of land to W. T. for a term of 1,000 years at a yearly rent, and subject, among others, to covenants on the part of the lessee—(a) to expend a sum of 500*l.* at least in erecting a private dwelling-house on one parcel of the demised premises; (b) not to use any house on either parcel except as a private dwelling-house, or as a “tea” house, without the consent in writing of the lessor; (c) that each private dwelling-house to be occupied on the smaller parcel must, except with the lessor’s consent, have cost at least 400*l.*; (d) that in the event of the lessee erecting on the larger parcel a house of public entertainment, the same should be shut in by planting from the view of the adjoining premises; and (e) that each house intended to be erected on the larger parcel should be of the annual value of 25*l.* at least. At different dates during the next ten years W. T. made nine different sub-leases, eight of which were stated expressly to be subject to the covenants and restrictions contained in the head-lease. Three of these sub-leases contained covenants by the sub-lessees for the expenditure of money in building and restricting the user of the houses on the premises; but these covenants were not identical with, nor in some cases even consistent with, the covenants by the lessee in the head-lease. Others of the sub-leases contained no provisions as to building or restrictive covenants on the user. Having made these sub-leases, W. T. built a villa on the remaining portion of the demised premises retained in his hands. The portions of the premises comprised in the sub-leases which contained no restrictive covenants became vested in the plaintiff, and the residuo of the premises comprised in the head-lease, as well as the estate and interest of W. T. under the head-lease, became vested in the defendants, who also acquired the reversion in fee-simple expectant on the determination of the head-lease. The defendants, after becoming so entitled, built upon the larger portion of the land demised in 1854 seven shops and several cottages not of the annual value of 25*l.* each:—Held, that there was no express or implied obligation to observe the covenants in the head-lease which the plaintiff—as entitled to the land comprised in the sub-leases which she had acquired—could enforce against the defendants, and that she was not entitled to obtain an injunction restraining the defendants from building and using the premises in a manner different from that allowed by the head-lease. Graham v. Craig, [1902] 1 Ir. R. 264—C.A.

— Successive Sales—Rights against Purchasers at Subsequent Sales—Variations in Forms of Conveyance—Notice.—Where an estate is sold in parcels at successive sales and subject to restrictive stipulations contained in a building scheme, a purchaser at a prior sale cannot enforce against a purchaser at a subsequent sale stipulations in respect of property subsequently sold which were not formulated or promulgated at the date of the contract under which he claims. A purchaser with notice of a building scheme is bound by restrictions of which he has notice, and accidental departures in the form of conveyance purporting to relieve him from the observance of the restrictions are ineffective, and, conversely, are no bar to his title to sue. Rowell v. Satchell, 73 L. J. Ch. 20; [1903] 2 Ch. 212; 89 L. T. 267—Swinfen Eady, J.

The mere fact that a solicitor for the vendor inserts restrictive covenants in the draft conveyance, not warranted by the terms of the contract, some of which are waived and some insisted upon, is not sufficient to put the purchaser or his solicitor upon enquiry or fix him with notice that there is a building scheme. Ib.

Building Estate—“House”—Block of Flats.—A covenant entered into by the several purchasers of plots of ground on the sale of a building estate, that not more than one “house” should be erected on any one plot, is not infringed by the erection on one of the plots of a building containing separate sets of flats on each floor. Kimber v. Admans, 69 L. J. Ch. 296; [1900] 1 Ch. 412; 82 L. T. 136; 48 W. R. 322—C.A.

Not to Erect Buildings other than Private Houses.—Parts of certain lands belonging to the plaintiffs were sold by them in fee-simple subject to covenants that the grantees should erect on them no building other than private dwelling-houses, and should not carry on upon them any noisy trade. These covenants were intended for the benefit of the land remaining the property of the plaintiffs. Under the powers conferred by the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and a private Act, the defendants took over the parts of the land sold by, but took none of the land still remaining the property of, the plaintiffs. The defendants erected on the ground taken over a railway embankment and a railway line, over which it ran trains:—Held, that the erection of the embankment and the laying of the line was a breach of the covenant not to erect buildings other than private dwelling-houses, and that the running of trains was a breach of the covenant not to carry on a noisy trade. Long Eaton Recreation Grounds Co. v. Midland Railway, 71 L. J. R.B. 74; 85 L. T. 278; 50 W. R. 120—Lawrance, J. See s.c. in C.A., ante, LANDS CLAUSES ACT, col. 1266.

“Not more than one house” to be Erected—Double Tenement House—Structural Separation.—The purchaser of a plot of land subject to a restriction that not more than one house should be erected thereon commenced to erect a double tenement house on the plot, one tenement being on the ground floor and the other on the floor above. There was no internal communication between the tenements, each having its own front door in a common entrance archway:—Held, that the building constituted two distinct houses structurally separated in all respects, and was a breach of the restriction. Ilford Park Estates v. Jacobs, 72 L. J. Ch. 699; [1903] 2 Ch. 522; 89 L. T. 295—Swinfen Eady, J.

Buildings on Land "adjoining vendors' land."]

—In a conveyance on sale of a portion of plaintiffs' land to the defendant, the purchaser covenanted that he would not "in the erection of buildings adjoining the hereditaments of the vendors" permit the insertion of any "lights" overlooking such premises. The defendant constructed a number of houses, the backs of which were twenty feet from the boundary fence separating the two properties. Their gardens or yards reached this fence, and there were windows in the houses which overlooked the plaintiffs' land:—Held, that the houses did not "adjoin" the plaintiffs' land within the meaning of the covenant. Ind, Coope & Co. v. Hamblin, 84 L. T. 168—C.A. Reversing, 48 W. R. 238—Buckley, J.

To Use House as "private residence"—Housing

Governesses and Pupils of School.]—Receiving as lodgers the governesses and pupils of a neighbouring school,—Held, a breach of a covenant to use a house for no other purpose than a "private residence." Hobson v. Tulloch, 67 L. J. Ch. 205; [1898] 1 Ch. 424; 78 L. T. 224; 46 W. R. 331—Romer, J.

Building Hotel, Tavern, &c.]—In 1886 certain land was sold and conveyed subject to a covenant to observe the following stipulation: "Except on lots marked 'tavern lots,' no hotel, tavern, public-house, beer-house, shop, or other building for the sale of wines, spirits, ale, or stout, or any spirituous, malt, or excisable liquor of any kind, shall be built upon any lot now offered for sale; and on no lot shall any manufacture be carried on unless with the consent of the vendor, who shall be at liberty to grant a licence for the same." In January, 1897, the lessees from the purchaser of two of the lots, which were not marked "tavern lots," with full notice of the covenant, erected a restaurant on the lots. This restaurant was opened to the public on March 25, 1897, but without any wine, spirit, or beer licence. In August, 1897, a licence to sell wines and spirits was obtained. Thereupon the vendor, together with the purchaser of another lot, on which it was intended to erect a public-house, brought an action against the lessees, and then moved for an interlocutory injunction to restrain them from using their restaurant for any of the purposes mentioned in the stipulation:—Held, that the true meaning of the covenant was that no hotel, tavern, &c., should "be" upon any lot except marked "tavern lot"; that it would not be possible to tell whether or not a house when it was in the course of building was intended for a hotel, tavern, &c.; but that the user of the house would have to be looked to before declaring that the covenant had been infringed. Held, therefore, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the injunction claimed. Webb v. Fagotti, 79 L. T. 683—C.A.

"Noise or nuisance"—School.]—A covenant running with the land, after prohibiting the exercise of various specified trades of an offensive character, continued: "Or any trade or business or occupation whatsoever whereby any unwholesome or offensive or disagreeable matter, deposit, or fluid, or any injurious or offensive or disagreeable noise or nuisance, shall or may be collected, occasioned, caused, or made":—Held, that on the true construction of the covenant, a boys' school carried on in the ordinary way would constitute a breach, as the concluding words could not be held limited to trades or businesses ejusdem generis as those specified. Tod-Heatley v. Benham (58 L. J. Ch. 83; 40 Ch. D. 80) followed. Wauton v. Coppard, 68 L. J. Ch. 8; [1899] 1 Ch. 92; 79 L. T. 467; 47 W. R. 72—Romer, J.

Onerous and Unusual Covenants in Lease—Sale by Auction—Non-disclosure by Vendor—Constructive Notice—Duty to Enquire—Rescission of Contract.]

—It is established by the decision in Reeve v. Berridge (57 L. J. Q.B. 265; 20 Q.B. D. 523) that it is prima facie the duty of the vendor on a sale of property to disclose all that is necessary to protect himself, and not the duty of the purchaser to make enquiry before entering into a contract; and that is so whether the sale is by public auction or private contract. White and Smith's Contract, In re, 65 L. J. Ch. 481; [1896] 1 Ch. 637—Stirling, J.

Notice—Purchaser for Value—Possessory

Title.]—Freehold land held by virtue of a statutory title based on adverse possession for twelve years is not thereby freed from restrictive negative covenants. Such covenants are analogous to an equitable charge, and the land can only be freed from them—(1) by shewing abandonment, or (2) by the plea of purchaser of the legal estate for value without notice, the person advancing such plea being bound to shew that he accepted nothing less than a full title for forty years, and that this title did not disclose the restrictions in question. Nesbitt and Potts' Contract, In re, 74 L. J. Ch. 310; [1905] 1 Ch. 391; 92 L. T. 448; 53 W. R. 297; 21 T. L. R. 261—Farwell, J.

Devolution of Benefit—Intention—Covenant Running with the Land.]

—Where part of a freehold estate, not subject to a common building scheme, has been conveyed to a purchaser who has entered into restrictive covenants with the vendors to the intent that the same might bind the land conveyed, and might enure to the benefit of the vendors, their heirs and assigns, and others claiming through them all or any part of the remainder of the estate retained by the vendors, the benefit of such covenants will run at law with every part of the land so retained, and the devisees of a subsequent purchaser of part thereof will be entitled to enforce the covenants against the former purchaser's assignee who has bought with notice of the covenants. Rogers v. Hosegood, 69 L. J. Ch. 59; 81 L. T. 515—Farwell, J.

• Every covenant, the benefit of which runs with the land at law, must originally have been entered into with a covenantee who at the time had an interest in the land to which the covenant refers, and must touch or concern that land. But it is a question of intention in each case, to be determined on the construction of the particular document and with due regard to the nature of the covenant and the surrounding circumstances, whether the benefit of a covenant, which possesses the above-mentioned characteristics, does in fact run with the land at law. Ib.

Building—User—Private Dwelling-house only—Residential Flats.]—The erection of a block of residential flats on a plot of land is a breach of a covenant to erect no more than one messuage or dwelling-house thereon. Ib.

Real Estate—Personal Liability of Vendor—Form of Indemnity to be given by Purchaser.]—On a conveyance of real estate subject to restrictive covenants, the purchaser in covenanting with the vendor to perform and observe the covenants is entitled to have the covenant prefaced by words shewing that it is by way of indemnity only. Form of prefatory words approved by the Court. Poole and Clark's Contract, In re, 73 L. J. Ch. 612; [1904] 2 Ch. 173; 91 L. T. 275; 53 W. R. 122; 20 T. L. R. 604—C.A.

Per CURIAM.—The usual covenant by the assignee on the assignment of leasehold property to perform and observe the covenants contained in the lease, would be construed as if it contained similar prefatory words. Ib.

Loss of Deeds—Defective Copy—Indemnity—Deed Found—Breach of Covenant contained in Lost Deed—Liability under Indemnity for Damages and Costs.]—Certain lands were subject to a building scheme, the provisions of which were contained in a deed of 1854. The purchaser of a plot was informed by the vendor in good faith that the original deed was lost or destroyed, and what purported to be a true copy was produced. This copy subsequently proved to be defective. An action was brought by an adjoining owner to restrain the purchaser from erecting or allowing to remain upon his land certain buildings which contravened the provision as to a building-line in the deed of 1854. The property in respect of which he was entitled to sue had certain erections upon it contravening another building stipulation, which provided that no erection should be built within four feet of a boundary fence. At the trial of the action it was held that the defendant was affected with notice of the building stipulation, and that the plaintiff had only committed a trivial breach of a trivial covenant, and that such a breach did not disentitle the plaintiff from having the building stipulations strictly enforced, and judgment was given for the plaintiff with costs, the defendant being directed to remove certain buildings erected by him on the land. The third party to the action had sold the property to the defendant, and upon such sale had written a letter agreeing to indemnify the defendant, as purchaser, against all "costs, damages, and expenses" which the defendant might suffer or incur "by reason of the building stipulations and conditions being other than those set out in the copy":—Held, that the third party was liable to pay the defendant the difference in the value of the plot in consequence of the amount of land available for building under the provisions of the deed of 1854 being less than under the supposed copy; and also of the defence that the plaintiff was disentitled to sue in consequence of his having broken one of the covenants. Held, also, that the defendant, having had actual notice of the provisions of the deed of 1854 before he commenced to build, the third party was not liable for the cost of building or removing the buildings. Held, also, that the defendant was not entitled to recover from the third party the costs of the plaintiff incurred in the action and paid by the defendant, or the defendant's own costs so far as they related to the following defence set up by the defendant—namely, a denial that the provisions of the deed of 1854 applied to the plot purchased by him or that he had notice of such provisions; that the liquidator of the company formerly owning the land to which the deed of 1854 applied had, under a power given by that deed to the "vendors, their heirs or assigns," by an agreement in writing, approved of by the Court, released or waived the covenant which it was alleged had been broken; that no building scheme was contained in the deed of 1854, and if there was it had come to an end by mutual consent of the various purchasers of the land comprised in it. Hooper v. Bromet, 90 L. T. 234—C.A.

14. RESCISSION.

Right of Purchaser to Repudiate Contract—Repudiation after Decree of Specific Performance.]

—The right of a purchaser to repudiate the contract on account of a defect in title which the vendor cannot remove is merely an equitable right arising out of want of mutuality and affecting the equitable remedy by way of specific performance, and is distinct from the legal right of rescission. The right of repudiation must be exercised as soon as the defect is ascertained; and if, after ascertaining it, the purchaser continues to treat the contract as subsisting he does not retain the right to repudiate at any subsequent moment he may choose, and must give the vendor a reasonable time to cure the defect. Further, after a decree of specific performance a defendant purchaser cannot repudiate the title or the contract without the leave of the Court. If he discovers a defect of title which might, but for the decree, give rise to a right of repudiation he must move to be discharged from the contract, and he is not entitled to be discharged as a matter of course. The vendor may perfect his title at any time before certificate, while the purchaser is not confined to objections taken by him before or at the hearing, and in each case the Court will consider the circumstances and grant or refuse the relief as may appear to be equitable. Halkett v. Dudley (Earl), 76 L. J. Ch. 330; [1907] 1 Ch. 590; 96 L. T. 539—Parker, J.

Common Mistake.]—A tenant for life sold a public-house, portion of a settled property. After conveyance it was found that the public-house was subject to a reversionary lease, granted by the predecessor in title of the tenant for life, of which all parties were ignorant:—Held, that this did not furnish any ground for rescission. But held, that the re-purchase of the public-house by the trustees out of capital moneys in their hands might be sanctioned. Tyrell, In re; Tyrell v. Woodhouse, 82 L. T. 675; 64 J. P. 665—Cozens-Hardy, J. And see col. 521.

Misdescription — “Building site” — Excavations Filled in with Refuse Matter—Necessity for Removing Same before Erection of Buildings Allowed.—[Certain land was offered for sale as “The capital freehold building site . . . in the midst of a capital letting class of property. . . . Ripe for immediate development.” It appeared that the land some years previously had been excavated, that water had collected in the holes so made, that the pond thus formed had become very offensive owing to the decayed animal and vegetable matter it contained, and that eventually the holes were filled up by cart-loads of rubbish being deposited therein. Under the London County Council by-laws such land could not be used for building purposes unless and until such refuse matter had been excavated, which would have involved great expense:—Held, that there had been such a misdescription as entitled the purchaser to a rescission of his contract. Baker v. Moss, 66 J. P. 360—Joyce, J.

— Action to Recover Deposit—Notice by Vendor to Rescind after Action Brought.—[There is no general rule as to the period when, after litigation has been begun by a purchaser for a return of his deposit, the vendor becomes disentitled to give notice to rescind under a condition entitling him so to do “if any objection or requisition not precluded by the conditions shall be insisted upon which the vendor shall be unable or unwilling to remove or comply with.” Isaacs v. Towell, 67 L. J. Ch. 508; [1898] 2 Ch. 285; 78 L. T. 619—Byrne, J.

A vendor who was acting bona fide and had not taken any step which amounted to a waiver of his right to rescind,—Held, entitled to rescind the contract for sale after the commencement of an action by the purchaser, although the condition for rescission did not contain the words “notwithstanding any intermediate litigation.” Ib.

— Sale under Direction of Court—Discharge of Purchaser—Rescission—Costs Recoverable by Purchaser.—[Where a purchaser who has contracted to buy property sold under the direction of the Court is entitled to be discharged from his contract on the ground of misrepresentation, he is entitled to be paid out of the funds in Court, not only his costs of investigation of title, but also the costs, charges, and expenses occasioned by his bidding for and being allowed to be the purchaser of the property. Perkins v. Ede (16 Beav. 268) and Powell v. Powell (44 L. J. Ch. 311; L. R. 19 Eq. 422) followed. Bain v. Fothergill (43 L. J. Ex. 243; L. R. 7 H.L. 158) distinguished. Hollivell v. Seacombe, 75 L. J. Ch. 289; [1906] 1 Ch. 426; 94 L. T. 186; 54 W. R. 355—Kekewich, J.

Licensed House—Conviction Recorded on Licence—Omission to Disclose.—[On a sale of a public-house, the non-disclosure by the vendor of the fact that one conviction has been indorsed on the licence is not a material omission, which entitles the purchaser to refuse to complete the sale. Ward and Jordan's Contract, In re, [1902] 1 Ir. R. 73—M.R.

No Title to Part—Error in Particulars—Compensation.—[A condition in a contract for sale, giving the vendor the right to rescind in case the purchaser should insist on any objection or requisition “as to title or evidence of title” which the vendor should be unable or should decline to remove or comply with, does not admit of rescission where the vendor has no title to a part of the property. Principle of Bowman v. Hyland (47 L. J. Ch. 581; 8 Ch. D. 588) applied. Mawson v. Fletcher (40 L. J. Ch. 131; L. R. 6 Ch. 91) distinguished. Jackson and Haden's Contract, In re, 74 L. J. Ch. 389; [1905] 1 Ch. 603; 92 L. T. 591; 53 W. R. 428—Buckley, J.

A sale of freeholds, without reservation of mines and minerals (to which the vendor has no title) gives a right to compensation where the contract provides for compensation in case of error, misstatement, or omission in the particulars. Ib.

— The vendors, having as they knew no title to the minerals, sold a freehold villa residence under a contract which did not except the minerals, and the purchaser did not know that they were excepted. The contract by clause 13 provided that if the purchaser should insist on any objection to title which the vendors should be unable, or on the ground of expense decline to comply with, the vendors should be at liberty to rescind the contract; and by clause 14 that any misstatement or omission in the particulars should not annul the sale, but should be the subject of compensation. The purchaser having required the title to the minerals to be deduced, or in the alternative compensation, the vendors purported to rescind the contract under clause 13:—Held, that the vendors, having knowingly misdescribed the property, could not avail themselves of clause 13 so as to rescind the contract, and that the purchaser was entitled to complete, with compensation under clause 14. Nelthorpe v. Holgate (1 Coll. C.C. 203) approved. Duddell v. Simpson (36 L. J. Ch. 70; L. R. 2 Ch. 102) distinguished. Jackson and Haden's Contract, In re, 75 L. J. Ch. 226; [1906] 1 Ch. 412; 94 L. T. 418; 54 W. R. 434—C.A.

Decision of BUCKLEY, J. (supra) (74 L. J. Ch. 389; [1905] 1 Ch. 603), affirmed; but his observations as to the distinction between an existing and non-existing title for the purposes of clause 13 dissented from. Per COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—As a mere matter of construction the purchaser's objection was an “objection to title” within the terms of clause 13. Ib.

Notice to Rescind—Validity of Notice—Rescission.—[A contract was entered into at an auction on December 7, 1896, subject to particulars and conditions of sale. The property passed under the will of M. A. R. in 1856 to J. J. W. and another, as tenants in common, in equal moieties, and the difficulty arose as to the moiety which passed to J. J. W. He by his will gave his property to trustees upon trust for sale and payment of debts, &c., and then to lay aside 12,000*l.*, which was to be invested for the benefit of his daughters and their children, and subject thereto to hold the residue for his son.

J. J. W. died in 1876, and in 1880 two deeds were executed by which part of the property was mortgaged to the amount of 12,000*l.* to two persons who were not trustees of the will. Later one of these persons was appointed a trustee of the will. These two persons purported to sell the property. Objection was taken on the requisitions that they could not give a good title, and notice to rescind was given. On a summons taken out by the purchaser claiming rescission, — Held, that the defect could only be removed—(1) by procuring the trustees of the will to be parties; (2) by obtaining the sanction of the Court; and (3) by shewing that the 12,000*l.* had been properly invested; that as to (1) and (2), neither on the day of the notice to rescind, nor on that fixed for completion, were the vendors in a position to remove the defect; that as to (3), there was no evidence that the 12,000*l.* could be so invested; and that, in the absence of any such evidence, the notice to rescind must be deemed effectual. Cooke and Holland's Contract, In re, 78 L. T. 106—Stirling, J.

"Notwithstanding intermediate litigation"—Notice to Rescind Pending Proceedings—Costs.—Conditions of sale which give a vendor power to rescind the contract "if the purchaser shall insist on any requisition or objection which the vendor shall be unable or unwilling to remove or comply with . . . notwithstanding any attempt to remove the same or that there shall have been any intermediate or pending negotiation proceeding or litigation"; and provided that he shall thereupon return to the purchaser his deposit, "but without any interest, costs of investigating the title, or other compensation or payment whatsoever," do not protect the vendor from the payment of costs of litigation; and if the vendor allows a summons, under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, to be proceeded with until the hearing and then gives notice to rescind, he will be ordered to pay the costs. Spindler and Mear's Contract, In re, 70 L. Summons—Return of Deposit—Jurisdiction.—The Court has jurisdiction upon a vendor's summons under the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874, to make an order for rescission of the contract and return of the deposit. *Higgins v. 15. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

Mistake—Acreage of Land—Formal Contract—Condition Precedent—Repudiation of Contract by Vendor—Wilful Default—Interest—Form of Order.—An agreement for the sale of thirty-six acres of land, part of a larger amount belonging to the vendor, for the sum of 3,600*l.*, left the boundary of the land on one side, where there was no visible division between the land sold and the land retained, to be subsequently marked out by a fence; and concluded with the words "Subject to approval of conditions and form of agreement by purchaser's solicitor." The vendor was mistaken as to the acreage of his land, and the portion he had intended to sell measured out at forty-two acres, which amount he required the purchaser to take at 100*l.* an acre. In an action by the purchaser to enforce the original agreement, which the vendor repudiated, — Held, that the purchaser was entitled to specific performance of the contract for the sale of thirty-six acres, as the mistake of the vendor did not go to the root of the matter so as to entitle him to rescission, and the execution of a more formal agreement was not made a condition precedent to a complete contract. Held, also, that by repudiating the contract the vendor had not been guilty of "wilful default" so as to disentitle him to interest payable under the contract until completion. North v. Percival, 67 L. J. Ch. 321; [1898] 2 Ch. 128; 78 L. T. 615; 46 W. R. 552—Kekewich, J.

Reversionary Interest—Deposit Paid—Bankruptcy of Vendor—Lapse of Time—Delay—Lien for Deposit.—In 1886 a contract was entered into for the sale of a reversionary interest in personalty free from incumbrances, and the purchaser thereupon paid a deposit. The contract was not completed by reason of the inability of the vendor to discharge the incumbrances. In 1887 the vendor became bankrupt. In 1895 the reversion fell into possession. In 1896 the purchaser for the first time took proceedings to enforce the contract: — Held, that the rule laid down in Eads v. Williams (24 L. J. Ch. 531; 4 De G. M. & G. 674), that the Court will not grant specific performance unless the parties seeking relief come promptly and as soon as the nature of the case will permit, applied, and that the purchaser was precluded by delay from enforcing the contract. Levy v. Stogdon, 67 L. J. Ch. 313; [1898] 1 Ch. 478; 78 L. T. 185—Stirling, J. Affirmed, 68 L. J. Ch. 19; [1899] 1 Ch. 5; 79 L. T. 364—C.A.

Held, also, that as there were no acts on the part of the purchaser which made his conduct amount to a repudiation of the contract, he was entitled to a lien on the subject-matter of the contract for his deposit. Id.

Contract Entered into with Agent—False Representation as to Principal.—If, in negotiations for a contract, an agent make a false representation as to the name of his principal, knowing that if he disclosed the true name the other party would not enter into the contract, the Court will not order specific performance of the contract. A. signed a contract for the sale of a house to B. Before signing, he asked, "Are you buying for C. or his nominees?" B. answered "No." He was, in fact, buying for nominees of C., to whom he afterwards assigned his contract. He and they brought an action for specific performance: — Held, that the contract could not be specifically performed. Archer v. Stone, 78 L. T. 34—North, J.

In 1895 the defendants, who were trustees of a Congregational chapel, put up for sale by public auction a building which had formerly been used as their chapel. The conditions of sale imposed no restriction on the user of the building. After the sale C. made an offer for the building, but the defendants declined to accept it on the ground that it was made on behalf of a committee of Roman Catholics, who intended to use the building as a Roman Catholic place of worship, and the defendants objected to sell for that purpose. The committee then told the plaintiff, who was the manager of a mineral-water company, that if he could get the property they would buy it of him at 100% profit. The plaintiff's solicitors wrote to the defendants' agent, making an offer for the property "on behalf of our client, the manager of the E. Mineral Water Company." After some negotiations a contract was signed by the defendants for sale of the building to the plaintiff at 1,025*l.*, a price less than C.'s offer. No direct statement was made that the plaintiff was buying for the company, but it was admitted that the defendants, during the negotiations, believed that he was, and that the plaintiff knew it. The plaintiff signed the contract as principal without protest from the defendants' agent. The defendants refused to complete on the ground that the plaintiff was buying as agent for the Roman Catholic committee, to whom he knew they would not sell, and had obtained the contract by misrepresentation:—Held, on the evidence, that the plaintiff was not buying as agent for the Roman Catholic committee, but for himself, with a view to resell to them at a profit; that the misrepresentation as to the mineral-water company was immaterial, because the vendors did not care whether they sold to the company or the plaintiff, and as between them no consideration of the person with whom they were contracting entered as an element into the contract. Nash v. Dix, 78 L. T. 445—North, J.

Interest on Purchase-money.—In an action for specific performance interest on the purchase-money will be given from the date when the Master certifies that a good title was first shewn. Halkett v. Dudley (Earl), 76 L. J. Ch. 330; [1907] 1 Ch. 590; 96 L. T. 539—Parker, J. And see SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

Contract by English Owners to Sell Ships to United States—Contract to be Void if United States became Belligerents—Outbreak of War—Action to Recover Deposit.—The defendants, on April 21, 1898, prior to the commencement of hostilities between that country and Spain, contracted to sell to the plaintiffs, the United States Government, two steamships "to be delivered as soon as possible." The plaintiffs paid a deposit which was subject to the following clause of the contract: "If from blockade or any other cause arising from the United States becoming belligerents and preventing delivery of either of the said steamers, this contract is to be null and void, but the vendor is to retain the deposit as and for liquidated damages." It was impossible for the defendants to have despatched the ships before the day (April 23) when the United States commenced hostilities with Spain; but the publication of neutrality by the British Government was not published till April 26. In an action to recover the deposit,—Held, that the defendants' contention that they were "prevented" from making delivery by reason of section 8, sub-section 4 of the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870, was a good defence to the action. *United States of America v. 2. UNDERTAKING.

Compensation—Injurious Affection—Authorised Working—"Supplying waterworks"—"Maintenance"—"Construction."]—By their special Act, which incorporated the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, the defendants were empowered to "make and maintain" certain waterworks, including a shaft or well and pumping station. By the authorized pumping operations, after the completion of the works, a bed of wet running silt which lay directly under and formed the support of the plaintiff's land was drawn away, and its abstraction caused a subsidence of the plaintiff's house. The plaintiff claimed compensation for injurious affection, and in the arbitration proceedings the umpire made an award in his favour. In an action on the award,—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to compensation by sections 6 and 12 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, as being a person injuriously affected by the supplying and the maintenance, if not also by the construction, of the waterworks. Fletcher v. Birkenhead Corporation, 76 L. J. K.B. 218; [1907] 1 K.B. 205; 96 L. T. 287; 71 J. P. 111; 5 L. G. R. 293; 23 T. L. R. 195—C.A.

Damage by Pumping—Abstraction of Running Water.]—The plaintiff was the owner of some land, the boundary of which was a brook. The defendants' predecessors in title erected a pumping station on land adjoining the plaintiff's, and by pumping lowered the level of the subsoil water, and in consequence of the withdrawal of support caused a diminution in the quantity of water in the brook passing the plaintiff's land; but no water from the brook was in fact pumped into the defendants' well. In an action brought for an injunction,—Held, that no action lay against the defendants for lowering the level of the subsoil water and thus causing a diminution of water in the brook. Popplewell v. Hodgkinson (38 L. J. Ex. 126; L. R. 4 Ex. 248) applied. Grand Junction Canal v. Shugar (L. R. 6 Ch. 483; 24 L. T. 402) distinguished. English v. Metropolitan Water Board, 76 L. J. Reservoir—Land Taken for Construction of—Natural Adaptability of Land Taken.]—In estimating the value of land to be acquired by a water board under statutory powers for the purpose of constructing a reservoir, the natural adaptability of the land for the purpose of a reservoir is a proper matter for consideration as an element of value. In order to exclude such an element of value from being taken into consideration, it must be shewn on the facts that there is no reasonable possibility of a market for the land apart from the particular scheme under which it is taken. Gough and Aspatia, Silloth, and District Joint Water Board, In re, 73 L. J. K.B. 228; [1904] 1 K.B. 417—C.A.

Minerals under Adjoining Land—Notice to Mine-owner to Leave Minerals Unworked—Subsequent Rise in Value of Minerals—Compensation—Basis of Assessment.]—Under the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, where notice is served by a water company on a mine-owner to leave a portion of his mines unworked, full compensation is to be made and all expenses and losses to be recouped to the mine-owner. Where, therefore, there has been a rise in the value of the minerals subsequent to the notice, and it is shewn that but for the notice the mine-owner would have obtained the benefit of the rise in value, consideration must be had in the assessment of compensation of such rise in value. Bullfa and Merthyr Dare Steam Collieries v. Pontypridd Waterworks Co., 72 L. J. K.B. 805; [1903] A.C. 426; 89 L. T. 280; 52 W. R. 193—H.L. (E.)

Minerals under Water-pipe Track—Notice to Abstain from Working—Counter-notice—Compensation.]—Where the owners of minerals under or adjacent to waterworks have given notices under section 22 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, that they propose to work these minerals, and the undertakers have served a counter-notice on the owners that they are willing to pay compensation therefor, a contract is thereby concluded under which, on the one hand, the mineral owners are bound immediately to refrain from working the minerals, and, on the other, the undertakers are bound to pay compensation for the minerals as the same—failing agreement—shall be determined by arbitration. Edinburgh and District Water Trustees v. Clippens Oil Co., 87 L. T. 275—H.L. (Sc.)

Statutory Notice by Undertakers of Willingness to Pay Compensation—Reservation in Notice—Right of Undertakers to have Minerals Unworked independently of Statutory Provisions—Compensation.]—The owners of a mineral field through which two water-pipes belonging to the Edinburgh Water Trustees, called the Crawley pipe and the Moorfoot pipe respectively, were carried on the same pipe track, gave notice under section 22 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, which was applicable only to the Moorfoot pipe, to the water trustees of their intention to work the minerals under the pipe track. The water trustees thereupon served a counter-notice on the mineral owners intimating their willingness to pay compensation for the minerals “so far as you are entitled thereto,” and requiring the owners to leave them unworked, “declaring that the foregoing notice is given without prejudice to and under reservation of . . . all objections to your working out the said minerals competent to us and of our right to support of the Crawley pipe passing through said mineral field.” In consequence of this notice the owners did not work the minerals, and the amount of compensation was fixed by arbitration under the statute. Thereafter it was decided in an action raised by the water trustees that they had a right independently of the provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Act to prevent the mineral owners from so working the minerals under and adjacent to the pipe track as to injure the Crawley pipe. The water trustees having refused to pay the compensation awarded by the arbitrator, on the ground that the right of support which they had for the Crawley pipe necessarily involved an abstention from working the minerals covered by the notice, and that there was nothing therefore to compensate the mineral owners for,—Held, that, having elected to put in force the remedy provided by the statute and to require the mineral owners to abstain from working, they were not entitled to avoid fulfilment of the statutory condition of paying the compensation fixed by the arbitrator. Ib. And see MINES.

Railway Passing under Street—Right of Water Commissioners to Break Open Roof of Tunnel—Tunnel.]—Public water commissioners had statutory authority to lay a line of water-pipes in a street underneath which, for a distance of 575 feet, a line of railway passed:—Held, that the commissioners were not entitled under section 28 or 29 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, to break open the brickwork forming the arch of the bridge or roof of the railway tunnel, and to lay therein an iron trough carrying their water-pipe. The word “tunnels” in section 28 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, means tunnels similar in character to sewers and drains, and does not apply to a railway tunnel, and that in any event the right given by that section to interfere with sewers, drains, and tunnels does not warrant the permanent displacement or removal of any of these. Caledonian Railway Co. v. Glasgow Corporation, 3 F. 526—Ct. of Sess.

“Dividend”—Maximum Rate—Right to Make up Deficiency of Previous Dividends.]—The appellant company, incorporated in 1809, for many years paid dividends of less than 10 per cent. In 1864 it incorporated the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, section 75 of which enacts that the profits divisible in any year shall not exceed the prescribed yearly rate (10 per cent. where no other is fixed), unless a larger dividend be at any time necessary to make up the deficiency of any previous dividend which shall have fallen short of the said yearly rate:—Held, that section 75 did not authorise the company to pay a larger dividend than 10 per cent. to make up the deficiencies of dividends which fell short of that rate before 1864, the date when it first incorporated the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847. Kent Waterworks Co. v. Lamplough, 73 L. J. Ch. 96; [1904] A.C. 27; 89 L. T. 704; 52 W. R. 401; 2 L. G. R. 403; 68 J. P. 361; 20 T. L. R. 107—H.L. (E.)

New River—Dividends—Limitation to 10 per Cent.—Incorporation of Waterworks Clauses Act.]—The New River Co., by the New River Company's Act, 1852, which incorporates section 75 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, is prohibited from distributing amongst its shareholders dividends exceeding the rate of 10 per cent. per annum (EARL OF HALSBURY, L.C., dissenting). Metropolitan Water Board v. New River Co., 20 T. L. R. 687—H.L. (E.)

Transfer of Undertaking to Water Board.]—The “undertaking” of the New River Co., including its landed property, is all one undertaking, and the rents and profits of the landed property are part of the profits of the undertaking within section 75 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847. Ib.

Sinking Fund—Transfer of Obligations.]—The undertakings of the Metropolitan water companies on their transfer to the Metropolitan Water Board under the Metropolis Water Act, 1902, are to be valued as subject to and not as free from the obligations to contribute to the sinking fund created by the companies' special Acts. Ib.

Rebate by Water Company—Power of Water Board to Discontinue Rebate.]—A Metropolitan water company with whose Acts the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, was incorporated, had, for some years before the transfer of their undertaking to the Metropolitan Water Board, made a rebate from the water rates charged by them in consideration of the fact that their profits were such that, had they not made such rebate, an order for the reduction of their rates might have been made by quarter sessions on the application of water consumers under section 80 of the Act of 1847. The Water Board ceased to allow the rebate and the plaintiff council as water consumers in the company's district brought the present action for a declaration that they were entitled to a continuance of the rebate:—Held, that the Water Board were not precluded by section 46 of the Metropolitan Water Act, 1902 (which provides that all scales of charges made by any Metropolitan water company shall continue in force with respect to the undertaking to which they related until repealed, altered, or superseded), from ceasing to allow the rebate. Chiswick Urban Council v. Metropolitan Water Board, 3 L. G. R. 917; 69 J. P. 457; 21 T. L. R. 620—Joyce, J.

Semble, that upon the transfer of the company's undertaking to the Water Board, the provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, with respect to the profits of the undertakers (sections 75 to 84) ceased to apply to the undertaking. Ib.

Chelsea — Profits of Company — Limitation — "Prescribed rate" — "Prescribed for that purpose in the special Act."—A waterworks company, under the authority of their special Act, which incorporated Part II. of the Companies Clauses Act, 1863, raised additional capital by the issue of preference stock at 5 and $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. No rate of dividend or interest for the stock was prescribed in the special Act, but by Part II. (s. 13) of the Companies Clauses Act, 1863, it is provided that where a company issue preference stock or shares under the authority of a special Act incorporating Part II. of the Companies Clauses Act, 1863, they may create and issue such stock or shares with any dividend or interest "not exceeding the rate prescribed in the special Act, and if no rate is prescribed then not exceeding the rate of 5l. per centum per annum."—Held, that the 5 and $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. at which the stock was issued was the "prescribed" rate within the meaning of section 75 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, which provides, "with respect to the amount of profits to be received by the undertakers when the waterworks are carried on for their benefit," that the profits of the undertaking to be divided among the undertakers in any year shall not exceed the "prescribed rate," which by section 2 means the rate "prescribed for that purpose in the special Act." Chelsea Water Co. and Metropolitan Water Board, In re, 73 L. J. K.B. 532; [1904] 2 K.B. 77; 90 L. T. 831; 52 W. R. 449; 20 T. L. R. 433—C.A.

Voluntary Sale—Common-law Right to Lateral Support.—The plaintiffs, under a special Act conferring at the time no compulsory powers of purchase, but incorporating the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, acquired land including the minerals for the purpose of their undertaking by voluntary conveyance. The defendants, the lessees of mines under adjacent lands, by workings partly within and partly without the forty yards limit prescribed by section 22 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, withdrew the necessary lateral support to the plaintiffs' land and caused subsidences which would have taken place to an equal extent if the waterworks had not been there. The defendants had, pursuant to section 22 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, given notice to the plaintiffs of their intention to work their mines within the forty yards limit, but the plaintiffs did not state their willingness to make compensation, and relief on their common-law right of lateral support:—Held, assuming (and per VAUGHAN

VOL. II.

WILLIAMS, L.J., deciding) that the provisions of the mining clauses (sections 18 to 27) of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, applied to the case, still there was nothing in that Act to take away the plaintiffs' common-law right of lateral support from adjacent property either within or without the forty yards limit mentioned in section 22, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to relief on that footing. *Manchester Corporation v. Purchase of Metropolitan Waterworks — Scheme for Distribution of Compensation — Meeting of Shareholders.—"Majority in value of the shareholders."—The "majority in value of the shareholders, or of the shareholders of a particular class," which is required by schedule 4, section 1 of the Metropolitan Water Act, 1902, to enable a scheme of the directors for the distribution of the compensation payable for the purchase of a Metropolitan water undertaking to be submitted to the Chancery Division of the High Court, means a majority in value of all the shareholders of the company or of the particular class, and not merely a majority in value of the shareholders present at the meeting. *Clay v. 3. SUPPLY.

Pure and Wholesome Supply.—Held, on the evidence, that the defendant company was not providing a supply of pure and wholesome water as required by section 85 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847. Att.-Gen. v. Rhymney and Aber Valley Gas and Water Co., 71 J. P. 435—Swinfen Eady, J.

"Domestic purposes" — Boarding-house — Trade or Business.—The private Act of a water company provided that the owner or occupier of any house in any street in which any pipe of the company should be laid should be entitled to demand a supply of filtered water for domestic purposes, and that the company should supply such water at certain rates not exceeding the rates specified in the Act; and it was further provided that a supply of water for domestic purposes should not include, inter alia, a supply of water for "any trade manufacture or business whatsoever," and that water for purposes other than domestic purposes might be supplied by agreement between the consumer and the water company. A boarding-house keeper claimed a supply of filtered water for domestic purposes, and tendered rates for the same calculated upon the annual value of his house, which contained ordinary sitting-rooms, ten bedrooms, two water-closets, but no fixed bath, and was inhabited by himself, his family, and boarders, who all used the water:—Held, that where water supplied to the boarding-house was in fact used for domestic purposes only, and not for the purposes of a trade or business, the water company could not under their Act claim to supply it by agreement, Pidgeon v. Great Yarmouth Waterworks Co., 71 L. J. K.B. 61; [1902] 1 K.B. 310; 85 L. T. 632; 66 J. P. 309—D.

— Use for Other Purposes—Agreement between Water Company and District Council.—By an agreement made between the T. District Council and a water company, the company covenanted to supply water sufficient for purposes of domestic use and the washing of carts, as well as in the case of fire, but not for street watering or sewer flushing purposes. The respondents were ratepayers of T., and used the water for trade purposes:—Held, that they had been guilty of an offence within section 18 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863. Andrews v. Wiggs, 84 L. T. 124; 65 J. P. 281; 19 Cox C.C. 633—D.

— Trade, Manufacture, or Business—Dwelling-house—School.—By sections 50 and 53 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, and by their special Act incorporating that Act, the plaintiffs, a water company, were empowered to make, and did make, reasonable regulations to be observed by occupiers of dwelling-houses within their district before being entitled to demand a supply of water for domestic purposes. The defendants demanded a supply of water for domestic purposes, but refused to comply with the plaintiffs' regulations:—Held, that they were not entitled to a supply for domestic purposes. South-West Suburban Water Co. v. St. Marylebone Guardians, 73 L. J. K.B. 347; [1904] 2 K.B. 174; 52 W. R. 378; 68 J. P. 257; 2 L. G. R. 567; 20 T. L. R. 299—Buckley, J.

Section 12 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863, was also incorporated in the plaintiffs' special Act. The defendants were owners and occupiers of a building used by them as a school for the maintenance and education of children of the inmates of a workhouse. They used water supplied by the plaintiffs for the purposes of the school:—Held, that the school was a dwelling-house within the meaning of sections 48 and 53 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847. Held, also, that the defendants carried on a business at the school; but that water used for the purposes of the school was not necessarily all used for a "business" within the meaning of section 12 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863. Ib.

The water supplied by the plaintiffs was used by the defendants (a) to supply cisterns for flushing water-closets; (b) as a continuous and constantly running supply for urinals; (c) to supply hydrants to which hoses were attached for the purpose of washing the yards of the school; and (d) to supply boilers for warming the school buildings by circulation and for heating water for laundry purposes:—Semble, that these were domestic purposes within the meaning of section 53 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847. Ib.

The water was also used to supply boilers for the purpose of driving machinery for raising water from wells and also of driving machinery in the laundry:—Semble, that these were not domestic purposes within the meaning of the same enactment. Ib.

— Water Used for Washing Motor Car—Motor Car Used for Purpose of Profession of Medical Man.—A supply of water for domestic purposes within the meaning of that term in section 12 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1863, includes the supply of water for washing a motor car used by a medical man in the practice of his profession. Harrogate Corporation v. Mackay, 76 L. J. K.B. 977; [1907] 2 K.B. 611; 97 L. T. 689; 71 J. P. 458; 5 L. G. R. 876; 23 T. L. R. 632—D.

— Private Dwelling-houses—Baths and Water-closets—Charge for every Water-closet beyond the First.—A water company entitled to make a charge in addition to the ordinary water rate in respect of "every water-closet beyond the first" in or belonging to any private dwelling-house cannot make such charge in respect of a water-closet to which water is not laid on, and which, though capable of being used as a water-closet, is in fact used solely as a tool-house. Roberts v. South Essex Waterworks Co., 1 L. G. R. 719; 67 J. P. 404—D.

— Communication Pipe—Company Cutting off—Trespass.—The builder and owner of a row of houses laid down communication pipes for the supply of water to the houses from the main of a waterworks company which had been incorporated by special Act. The special Act incorporated the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847. The pipes were laid down with the approval of the company. The company afterwards refused to make the connection between the pipes and the main. The house-owner thereupon lawfully made the connection which was then immediately cut off by the company. In an action by the house-owner against the company claiming damages and an injunction to restrain the company from preventing him from again connecting the pipes with the main, and from severing such connection if so made again by the plaintiff, Held, that there was nothing in sections 48 and 53 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, which disabled the plaintiff from bringing such an action. Gale v. Rhymney Gas and Water Co., 89 L. T. 399; 67 J. P. 430; 2 L. G. R. 80—C.A.

— Liability to Repair—Right to Supply of Water.—A consumer of water who, having the opportunity of repairing his communication pipe without opening the street, does not choose to do so, is not a person entitled to demand a supply of water under section 43 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847. Grand Junction Waterworks Co. v. Rodocanachi, 73 L. J. K.B. 441; [1904] 2 K.B. 230; 90 L. T. 819; 52 W. R. 508; 68 J. P. 290; 2 L. G. R. 689; 20 T. L. R. 410—D.

— Portion of Pipe Laid under Highway.—The defendant was supplied with water by the plaintiff company, the water reaching the defendant's house from the company's main through an inch pipe laid under a highway and a half-inch pipe connected therewith. The half-inch pipe was laid when the defendant first became a water consumer. The inch pipe had been laid previously, and at one time was used for the supply of premises other than the defendant's, but by whom or under what circumstances it was laid there was no evidence to shew:—Held that, under these circumstances, there was nothing to establish any liability on the defendant as between him and the company for the repair of the inch pipe, either under the Waterworks Clauses Acts or under provisions in the company's special Act making the consumer responsible if he "permits" any pipe connected with the supply of water to him to be out of repair. Colne Valley Water Co. v. Hall, 6 L. G. R. 115; 72 J. P. 25—C.A.

House not Exceeding 10l. Annual Value—Waste of Water—House in Occupation of Tenant—Liability of Owner.—By section 51 of the Staffordshire Potteries Waterworks Consolidation and Extension Act, 1853, "If any person supplied with water shall wilfully or negligently do or suffer any act so that the water supplied to him by the company shall be wasted" he is to be liable to a penalty:—Held, that the owner of a house let to a tenant upon a weekly tenancy, but who was liable for the payment of the water rate by reason of the house being under the annual value of 10l., was a person supplied with water within the meaning of the section. Brock v. Harrison, 68 L. J. Q.B. 730; [1899] 1 Q.B. 958; 80 L. T. 568; 47 W. R. 541; 63 J. P. 455; 19 Cox C.C. 298—D.

Water Supply from Land of Adjoining Owner—Fouling—No Claim to Easement or Right to Water.—The plaintiff drew a supply of water for her premises from a rubble drain on land belonging to B. and R. respectively. The water was conveyed by a pipe passing under a dyke to a cistern on her land, whence it was conveyed by a pipe to her premises. There was no evidence to shew how, when, or under what circumstances the pipe which conveyed the water from the rubble drain to the cistern was placed in position. The defendants on several occasions, by the permission of B. and R., opened the rubble drain for the purpose of ascertaining its direction, &c. The drain was left open by them for several weeks, and the water became muddied, and in that condition reached the plaintiff's premises. The plaintiff sued the defendants in the County Court for a wrongful interference with and damage to her water supply, and in that action expressly disclaimed any easement or right to the water supply:—Held, that in view of this disclaimer and of the fact that the defendants had not intentionally fouled the water, the decision of the County Court Judge dismissing the action was right. Dickinson v. Shepley Sewerage Board, 68 J. P. 363—D.

Workhouse—Domestic Purposes—Dwelling-house—Part of Dwelling-house—Business Purposes.—By section 43 of the Chester Waterworks Act, 1857, the water company were bound, upon the application of any person entitled to demand a supply of water for domestic purposes, to supply water for such purposes at rates per cent. varying with the annual value of the dwelling-house; and by section 47 the company were bound upon certain conditions to supply any person with water for other than domestic purposes at such rate as might be agreed upon or determined by two Justices. By section 22 of the Chester Waterworks Act, 1874, "no person shall be entitled to require nor shall the company be bound to supply any dwelling-house with water (otherwise than by meter or by special agreement) where any part of such dwelling-house is used for any trade or business purposes for which water is required." The water company supplied water to a workhouse where paupers and workhouse officials lived. The purposes for which the water was used were (inter alia) for two boilers for purposes of power to engines for a ventilating fan, for a drying fan in the laundry, for wringer and washing machines, and for rainwater pumping; for water pumping; for watering pigs and washing piggeries, the pigs being kept primarily to consume refuse, but being fed and sold when fattened; for engines used for heating purposes and chopping wood, the wood being sold; for watering the garden; and for flushing, drinking, and sanitary purposes:—Held, that section 22 of the Act of 1874 did not apply, and that the guardians were entitled to a supply for domestic purposes at the domestic rate, and for another supply for non-domestic purposes at a rate to be agreed upon or settled by Justices as provided by section 47 of the Act of 1857; the obligation being upon the guardians, as a condition precedent to make provision for the segregation of the two supplies, and to initiate the proceedings required under section 47. Chester Waterworks Co. v. Chester Union, 72 J. P. 121—C.A.

Swimming Bath—"Trade, manufacture, or business."—A supply of water for a swimming bath, erected and used for the purposes of the business of a school, is not a supply of water for "domestic purposes" within the Waterworks Clauses Acts, 1847 and 1863. Barnard Castle Urban Council v. Wilson, 71 L. J. Ch. 825; [1902] 2 Ch. 746; 87 L. T. 279; 51 W. R. 102—C.A.

Supply of Water by Meter—Premises—Land Used for Building Operations.—The owner of land abutting on a street in which a water-main is laid, and on which houses are in the course of erection, is not entitled under section 79 of the East London Waterworks Act, 1853, to a supply of water by measure upon the land for use in continuing building operations, because the place at which the supply is requested is not "premises" within the meaning of the word as used in that section. Metropolitan Water Board v. Paine, 76 L. J. K.B. 151; [1907] 1 K.B. 285; 96 L. T. 63; 71 J. P. 63; 5 L. G. R. 227; 23 T. L. R. 55—D.

Supply of Water under Pressure—Supply in Bulk.—The provisions of section 35 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, as to the supply of water under pressure do not relate to a supply in bulk. Wombwell Urban Council v. Dearne Valley Waterworks Co., 71 J. P. 415; 5 L. G. R. 1132—Swinfen Eady, J.

Contract Made with Water Company—Contract to Continue during Existence of Company—Company Taken over by Metropolitan Water Board—Effect of, on Contract.—Section 45 (b) of the Metropolis Water Act, 1902, which provides that "all contracts . . . subsisting immediately before the appointed day, and affecting any Metropolitan water company, shall be of as full force and effect against or in favour of the Water Board, and may be enforced as fully and effectually as if, instead of the company, the Water Board had been a party thereto," merely means that the contracts of the company are to be enforceable according to their terms. By a contract dated September 25, 1841, the Southwark Water Co. (which subsequently became the Southwark and Vauxhall Water Co.) covenanted with certain persons and their heirs, executors, &c., that they would as from December 25, 1842, "and from thenceforth during the continuance of the existence" of the company, supply water at a special rate. As from June 24, 1904, the Metropolitan Water Board took over, under the Metropolis Water Act, 1902, the undertaking, property, and liabilities of (inter alia) the Southwark and Vauxhall Water Co.:—Held, that the contract of September 25, 1841, was not enforceable against the Metropolitan Water Board. Edge v. Metropolitan Water Board, 97 L. T. 279; 71 J. P. 426; 5 L. G. R. 1183; 23 T. L. R. 698—Swinfen Eady, J.

Inspection of Fittings—Right of Entry—No Notice to Owner or Occupier to Supply Prescribed Fittings.—It is not a condition precedent to the right of an officer of the Metropolitan Water Board under section 80 of the Metropolis Water Act, 1871, to enter premises in order to inspect same for the purposes of the Act, that a notice should have been served under section 27 of the Act requiring the owner or occupier of the premises to supply same with prescribed fittings. Metropolitan Water Board v. Northcott, 96 L. T. 708; 5 L. G. R. 770; 71 J. P. 338—D.

Right to Maintain Action in High Court for Penalties—Recovery of Penalties "otherwise provided for" than before Justices.—Under a local water Act a corporation were bound to supply certain compensation water as compensation for the waters taken by them for the purposes of the Act, and in case of neglect to supply such compensation water they were, for every day on which such neglect occurred, to "forfeit and pay to the occupiers of each of the mills and works affected thereby (who may sue for and recover the same) the sum of five pounds," and were also to make compensation for any loss sustained by such occupiers in respect of which the penalties were not a sufficient compensation, and such compensation might be sued for in any Court of competent jurisdiction. Section 145 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, which was incorporated in the local Act, provides that every penalty or forfeiture, the recovery of which is not otherwise provided for, may be recovered by summary proceeding before two Justices:—Held, that the 5*l.* penalties imposed by the local Act were intended in the main to be a mode of compensation to the injured occupiers of the mills, and therefore the mode of recovering penalties which is prescribed in section 145 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, did not apply, and an action to recover the penalties was rightly brought in the High Court. Meltham Spinning Co. v. Huddersfield Corporation, 89 L. T. 403; 67 J. P. 445; 2 L. G. R. 32—C.A.

Extinction of Fire—Water taken through Private Pipe—Right to Compensation.—A water company who at the expense and request of the owner have laid down on private property a water pipe communicating with their main, and have fixed in the pipe a fire-plug, are not bound by the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, or otherwise, to allow the owner to use water from the fire-plug for the purpose of extinguishing fire, without his making compensation for it. Weardale and Consett Waterworks Co. v. Chester-le-Street Co-operative Society, 73 L. J. K.B. 659; [1904] 2 K.B. 240; 91 L. T. 293; 52 W. R. 684; 68 J. P. 386; 2 L. G. R. 805; 20 T. L. R. 464—D.

Hydrants—Rights of User—Metropolis.—A water company which has provided hydrants pursuant to section 32 of the Metropolitan Fire Brigade Act, 1865, and section 34 of the Metropolis Water Act, 1871, or either of these sections, may, in the absence of any agreement under section 4 of the London County Council (General Powers) Act, 1894, and without the consent of the London County Council, lawfully use such hydrants for purposes other than the supply of water for extinguishing fires and the purposes specified in section 37 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, and such user may, with the permission of the company, be exercised by other persons also. London County Council v. East London Waterworks Co., 69 L. J. Q.B. 304; [1900] 1 Q.B. 330; 82 L. T. 268; 48 W. R. 252—D.

Compensation Water—Statutory Obligation—Penalties.—In actions brought by the occupiers of certain mills and works to recover penalties under the above provisions in respect of a failure on the part of the corporation to deliver the statutory quantity of compensation water, which actions were consolidated and tried together, it appeared that the pipe for the delivery of the water had for many years delivered the proper quantity of water, but that on the days in respect of which the penalties were claimed, it did not deliver the proper quantity of water, though there was a head of water in the reservoir sufficient to cause the necessary quantity to flow through the pipe if it was properly laid and was not obstructed. It was also proved by experts called on behalf of the plaintiffs that pipes of the character of that in question are liable to become obstructed by some kind of deposit after being in use for many years. The defendants failed to prove what the cause of the shortage of water was, or to prove that they had taken any steps to inspect or clean the pipe:—Held, that there was ample evidence to justify a finding of the jury that the shortage of water was due to neglect on the part of the corporation; and, semble, this would have been so even in the absence of the expert evidence given by the plaintiffs to suggest a cause of the shortage, as the shortage of water was in itself evidence of neglect on the part of the corporation sufficient to throw on them the burden of disproving neglect on their part. Held, also, that the penalty imposed on the corporation of 5*l.* for each day's neglect to deliver the statutory quantity of water was not limited to one penalty of 5*l.*, but that this penalty was payable to each of the plaintiffs. Beaumont v. Huddersfield Corporation, 67 J. P. 579; 1 L. G. R. 118—C.A.

4. RATE.

Different Rates in the Pound in Different Districts.]—The Corporation of Northampton having in pursuance of statutory powers purchased the undertaking of a waterworks company, the purchase was carried into effect by the Northampton Waterworks Act, 1884, section 36 of which provided that the corporation might "thenceforward charge for the supply of water for domestic use to any dwelling-house a sum not exceeding $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum on the net rateable value of such dwelling-house." There was no section either in that Act, or in any other Act relating to the matter, which gave any specific directions or powers as to either equality or differentiation of rating. In 1901 the corporation charged the domestic consumers in one part of their district at the rate of $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum on the net rateable value of their dwelling-houses, and the consumers in another part of their district at the rate of 5 per cent. :—Held, that no implication arose from the words of section 36 of the Act of 1884 that the charge made by the corporation for the supply of water for domestic use must necessarily be at an equal rate in the pound on all consumers, and that the corporation were entitled to differentiate the water-rate in the manner above stated. Northampton Corporation v. Ellen, 73 L. J. K.B. 329; [1904] 1 K.B. 299; 90 L. T. 71; 52 W. R. 805; 68 J. P. 197; 2 L. G. R. 473; 20 T. L. R. 163—C.A.

On "annual rack rent or value" of Premises—Rate Payable by Owner—Owner Paying other Rates.]—By the Bury and District Joint Water Board Act, 1903, the respondents were to supply water at specified rates—namely, "where the annual rack rent or value of such house shall not exceed 20*l.*, at a rate per centum per annum not exceeding 10*l.*" The appellant was the owner of three cottages let to tenants, and the appellant paid all the rates on such cottages :—Held, that in order to arrive at the "annual rack rent or value," upon which he was liable to pay the water rate, the appellant was entitled to deduct the rates so paid by him. Wilkinson v. Bury Water Board, 92 L. T. 417; 69 J. P. 214; 3 L. G. R. 715—D.

Extension of Borough Boundaries—Right to Differentiate Rate.]—A corporation under a Waterworks Act were entitled to charge for the supply of water for domestic use to any dwelling-house a sum not exceeding $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the net rateable value, and they were also empowered, if there were a deficiency in the amount of the water account for any year, to make up the deficiency out of the general district rate. The corporation, whose boundaries were extended by an extension order, had been charging a uniform water rate of $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. over the whole borough, but for certain reasons they reduced it in the old borough to 5 per cent., while retaining it in the added part at $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. :—Held, that the corporation had no power so to differentiate the water rate, but must charge the same water rate over the whole borough. Northampton Corporation v. Ellen, 87 L. T. 335; 66 J. P. 744—Bigham, J.

"Rates" in Added Part not to Exceed a Specified Sum—Whether Water Rates are Included as "Rates."]—An article of the extension order provided that the general district rates to be levied in the added part should not in any one year for a number of years exceed such an amount in the pound as, when added to the poor rate and to the borough rate "and any other rate made by the corporation" in the same year, would make up a certain specified total on each pound of the rateable value :—Held, that the water rate was not a "rate" within the meaning of the words "any other rate" in this article, but was merely the price to be paid for the water supplied, and that the water rate, therefore, was not to be included in the computation of such total. Ib.

Arrears—Payment by Trustee in Bankruptcy under Protest—Right to Recover Back—"Incoming tenant."]—Where upon adjudication the trustee in bankruptcy takes possession of the debtor's premises and carries on thereon the business with a view to selling it as a going concern, he is in the position of an "incoming tenant" within section 48 of the Metropolitan Water Act, 1871, and is not liable for arrears of water rate left unpaid by the debtor. Where, therefore, a trustee has been required by a water company to pay such arrears, and has done so under protest, he is entitled to recover back the money so paid by him. Flack, In re; Berry, ex parte, 69 L. J. Q.B. 458; [1900] 2 Q.B. 32; 82 L. T. 503; 48 W. R. 446; 7 Manson, 141—Wright, J.

Recovery of—Summary Procedure—Demand—Time "Rate made under this Act."]—A person from whom a sum of money is due to a local authority under an agreement for the supply of water made under section 56 of the Public Health Act, 1875, is a person assessed to a "rate made under this Act" within the meaning of section 256, and may therefore, if in default for fourteen days after demand in writing, be summoned before a Court of summary jurisdiction. Elliott v. Russell, 72 L. J. K.B. 15; [1902] 2 K.B. 748; 88 L. T. 204; 51 W. R. 269; 67 J. P. 158—D.

For the purposes of section 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, the matter of complaint arises at the date of the demand, and the summons may be taken out within six months from that date. Ib.

— Cutting off Water not Condition Precedent.—There is no obligation upon a water company to exercise the power given by section 74 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, of cutting off the supply of water to premises as a condition precedent to their right to recover arrears of water rate. Rea v. Hutton; Metropolitan Water Board, Ex parte, 76 L. J. K.B. 1001; [1907] 2 K.B. 578; 97 L. T. 400; 71 J. P. 424; 5 L. G. R. 914; 23 T. L. R. 642—D.

— Costs—Discretion of Justices.—By section 37 of the Ruabon Water Act, 1870, which incorporates the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, and 1863, when a person neglects to pay a rate due to the water company, the latter may recover the same, with full costs of suit, in any Court of competent jurisdiction; and by section 38, after a defaulter has been summoned, water rates and costs ordered to be paid may be recovered by distress. Upon a summons before Justices for payment of a water rate,—Held, that the Justices were not bound, on making an order for payment of the rate, to order the defaulter to pay the costs, but they had a discretion in the matter. *Ruabon Water Co. v. 5. RIVER.

— Royal Charter—Exclusive Licence—Validity.—A Royal charter purporting to confer upon the patentee the exclusive navigation for all time of part of a public navigable river, and the exclusive licence of transporting goods thereover, is void both by the Statute of Monopolies, 1623, and by the common law. Simpson v. Att.-Gen., 74 L. J. Ch. 1; [1904] A.C. 476; 91 L. T. 610; 69 J. P. 85; 3 L. G. R. 190; 20 T. L. R. 761—H.L. (E.)

— Locks and Sluices—Grant by Crown to Owners of Right to take Reasonable Tolls—Franchise—Right of Public to Navigate—Dedication to Public—Duty of Person taking Tolls to keep Locks in Repair.—There is no presumption in favour of the legal obligation of an immemorial burden. Consequently, a person who under patent or statute has succeeded to the ownership of locks or other mechanical appliances for facilitating navigation, with the right to charge for their use a reasonable toll, is not bound to work or keep them in repair to his own detriment if the tolls are not sufficient to defray the cost of maintenance and repairs, and is justified in closing them altogether. Ib.

— Permissive Act of Parliament.—An Act of Parliament authorising and empowering a person to improve the passage of boats, and for that purpose to cleanse, scour, and deepen the river where and as often as occasion should require, although intended to serve a public purpose, must be construed to be permissive only, and not obligatory. Ib.

— Interference with Flow of Water.—The plaintiffs claimed damages for injury done to their premises owing to the flooding of same by a river, the waters of which were swollen by a heavy rainfall on a certain date. The plaintiffs alleged that the flooding was due to interference with the stream by means of sluices erected by the defendants:—Held, that the obstruction created by the sluices, although it might be regarded as an obstruction to the flow of water, was not the cause of the flooding, and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to damages nor to an injunction. Ambler v. Bradford Corporation, 87 L. T. 217—C.A.

— Pollution—Liability of Local Authority—“Causing or suffering to flow.”—By an agreement made between the predecessors of the appellants, the local board, and the owner of a margarine factory it was agreed that the owner of the factory, subject to certain conditions, should be entitled to discharge the liquids and effluent from the factory into the sewers of such board. A sewage farm, owned by the board, became vested in the appellants, and, owing to a breach of the agreement by the factory owner, the soil of the farm became clogged and rendered less capable of filtering the sewage in the appellants' district. By reason thereof sewage and other offensive matter flowed into the river B. from the appellants' sewage works:—Held, that the appellants “caused or suffered to flow or pass” sewage and other injurious matter into the river B. within section 13, sub-section 1 of the Middlesex County Council Act, 1898. Southall Norwood Urban Council v. Middlesex County Council, 83 L. T. 742; 49 W. R. 376; 65 J. P. 215—D.

— Channel—Stream or Sewer.—Water from a spring or source above the defendants' mill was conveyed thereto by a channel, and was caught and accumulated by the defendants in a reservoir above such mill. After being used in such mill it was discharged in a channel in a polluted state. After leaving the mill the water so polluted ran past certain cottages into a stream and so into a river. Many cottages emptied their sewage into the channel until 1892, when a sewage scheme was put into operation, and at the present time two cottages discharged their slop water, and three small watercourses fell into the channel below the mill:—Held, that the channel was a “stream” within section 20 of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876. Yorkshire (West Riding) Rivers Board v. Preston, 92 L. T. 24; 69 J. P. 1; 3 L. G. R. 289—D.

— Discharge of Polluting Liquid into Pipe Communicating with River—“Sewer.”—From the appellants' dye works a large quantity of polluting liquid was discharged into an open wooden trough, from which it flowed directly into an iron pipe or tap, from the further end of which it flowed into the river Aire. This pipe was laid in 1878 by the respondents, and when it was laid the wooden trough was shortened to make way for the pipe, and provision was made by an aperture in the pipe for the discharge into it of the contents of the wooden trough. The pipe was fixed at the outlet of an overflow culvert to carry the discharge from it into the river. The culvert was generally dry, but on about thirty days in the year a stream of storm water flowed along it, mingled with ordinary sewage matter, which, on its discharge from the culvert, entered the iron pipe, where it mixed with the polluting liquid from the appellants' works and thence into the river. The appellants contended that the iron pipe was a sewer, but the magistrate held that it was not, and that, even if it could be treated as such, it was not used by the appellants for the ordinary purposes of a sewer, but as a mere conduit pipe to convey the polluting liquids from their trough. He therefore convicted the appellants:—Held, that the conviction was right. Leeds and District Worsted Dyers and Finishers Association v. Yorkshire (West Riding) Rivers Board, 70 J. P. 480; 5 L. G. R. 72—D.

— Works Constructed after Passing of Act.]

—A manufacturing company against which proceedings were taken, under section 4 of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, for discharging polluting liquids into a river, relying on sections 6 and 10 of the Act, pleaded that they were not liable to be proceeded against as they were using every reasonably practicable and available means of rendering the pollution harmless:—Held, that this was no answer, inasmuch as their works had been entirely constructed after the passing of the Act. Midlothian County Council v. Pumpherson Oil Co., 6 F. 387—Ct. of Sess.

—Prescriptive Right to Pollute.—Section 16 of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, which enacts that "the powers given by this Act shall not be deemed to prejudice or affect any other rights or powers now existing or vested in any person or persons by Act of Parliament, law, or custom, and such other rights or powers may be exercised in the same manner as if this Act had not passed," keeps alive rights to abate a nuisance and does not have the effect of preserving the right to continue pollution. Id.

—Solid Matter—Prohibition against Putting into River—Deposit in Mill-dam—Cleaning out Dam—Deposit Mixed with Water and Turned into River.—Section 5 of the West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Act, 1894, makes it an offence for any person to put or cause to be put or knowingly permit to be put into any river or stream within the jurisdiction of the rivers board (after enumerating certain specified solid matters) "any deposit in a mill dam, or any sludge, or any solid sewage matter"; and "solid matter" was defined as not including "particles of matter in suspension in water." The respondents, who were manufacturers, were owners and occupiers of a mill and a large mill-dam into which flowed through a goit the water of a certain river; and polluting trade effluents from several mills and the sewage of several hundred houses also passed into the river above the respondents' mill and thence through the goit into the respondents' dam, and, in consequence of the waters being impounded in the dam by the respondents, a quantity of mud, sludge, and deposit had been formed in the basin of the dam; but there had been no discharge into the dam by the respondents themselves of any effluent or any polluting matter, solid or otherwise. The respondents, in order to clean out the dam, turned the whole waters of the river into the dam, while men with spades conveyed the mud and deposit into the current as it flowed through the dam, and by this operation the mud, sludge, and deposit in the dam became admixed with water and was carried in suspension through the outlet from the dam into the river below the mill, rendering the river muddy and turbid for a considerable distance. The effluent as it went from the dam into the river consisted of over 99½ per cent. of liquids, and less than ½ per cent. of solids:—Held, on the authority of Ribble River Joint Committee v. Halliwell (68 L. J. Q.B. 984; [1899] 2 Q.B. 385), that the respondents had committed no offence against section 5 of the Act, either in unlawfully causing to be put, or in knowingly permitting to be carried, into the river the mud, sludge, and deposit from the dam, as the stuff sent out into the river, being in a liquid state and containing less than ½ per cent. of solid matter, could not then be described as mud, sludge, and deposit, and that it was immaterial that it may have been so in the dam before the operation of cleaning began. West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Board v. Rawson, 89 L. T. 363; 67 J. P. 407; 1 L. G. R. 736—D.

—Putrid Solid Matter—Water Diverted and Impounded—Deposit becoming Putrid—Returning Deposit to River—Particles of Matter in Suspension in Water—Lawful Exercise of Right of Impounding Water.—The owner of a cotton-spinning mill on the banks of a stream had for many years prior to the passing of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, lawfully exercised the right of diverting and impounding in a reservoir water from the stream for the purposes of his business. The water so diverted contained vegetable matter, discharged into the stream by paper mills higher up the stream. While the water was impounded this vegetable matter settled at the bottom of the reservoir, and after two or three days became putrid. The reservoir was flushed out once a week (on Saturdays, after the mill was stopped) by opening sluice-gates into the stream and allowing the water from the stream to flow through the reservoir and out again into the stream, carrying with it the putrid deposit at the bottom of the reservoir. The effluent water as it went into the stream contained 97·6 per cent. of water, and 2·4 per cent. of solid matter in suspension. In proceedings taken against the mill-owner under section 10 of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, for having, contrary to the provisions of section 2, caused to be put or carried into the stream, so as to pollute its waters, "putrid solid matter,"—Held (A. L. SMITH, L.J., and RIGBY, L.J.; VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., doubting), that, assuming the deposit at the bottom of the reservoir was "solid matter," the mill-owner was not liable to be proceeded against under the Act, for at the time the effluent from the reservoir entered the stream the solid matter was in suspension in water, and by section 20 of the Act "solid matter" shall not include particles of matter in suspension in water." Held, also, that, assuming what was put into the stream was "solid matter" within section 2, the mill-owner was protected by section 17 of the Act, which provides that the Act "shall not apply to or affect the lawful exercise of any rights of impounding or diverting water." Ribble River Committee v. Halliwell, 68 L. J. Q.B. 984; [1899] 2 Q.B. 385; 81 L. T. 38; 48 W. R. 22; 63 J. P. 708—C.A.

— Stream otherwise Polluted—Increase of Pollution inappreciable—Discretion of Court.—The County Court is not justified, in the exercise of its judicial discretion under section 10 of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, in refusing to make an order under that section restraining the discharge of sewage into a stream in contravention of section 3, where the discharge would appreciably pollute the stream were it otherwise pure, merely because the pollution of the stream from other sources prevents the pollution due to the particular discharge from being appreciable. Staffordshire County Council v. Seisdon Rural Council, 96 L. T. 828; 71 J. P. 185; 5 L. G. R. 347—D.

— Manufacturing Refuse Discharged into Sewer—Sewer Communicating with Stream—Liability of Manufacturer to Penalty.—Persons draining noxious or polluting liquid proceeding from a factory or manufacturing process into a sewer which communicates with a stream, "commit an offence under section 4 of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (semble) even though they prove that they have obtained facilities for so draining into the sewer under section 7 of the Act. Yorkshire (West Riding) Rivers Board v. Butterworth, 98 L. T. 47; 71 J. P. 516; 5 L. G. R. 1246—D.

Notice to Discontinue Flow of Sewage—River Pollution—Notice Complied with—Accidental Recurrence of Flow Three Years Afterwards—"Failing to discontinue."—Under section 92 of the Lee Conservancy Act, 1868, as amended by section 23 of the Lee Conservancy Act, 1900, the Lee Conservancy Board may by notice require any person causing or suffering sewage to flow into the Lee or its tributaries to discontinue the flow of sewage within a time to be specified in the notice, not being less than three months. And by section 93 of the Act of 1868 the person notified is required to discontinue the flow in accordance with the notice, and "if he fails to do so" is liable to heavy penalties. The respondent council, in compliance with a notice from the board under these enactments, discontinued a flow of sewage into a tributary of the Lee from their sewage farm which was due to their using an inadequate number of the tanks at the farm. But three years afterwards, owing to the negligence of one of their employees, sewage was on one occasion again suffered to flow into the tributary in question from the sewage farm:—Held, that the mere proof of the discharge of sewage on this isolated occasion was not under the circumstances sufficient to shew that the council had been guilty of an offence under section 93. Lee Conservancy Board v. Leyton Urban District Council, 95 L. T. 487; 4 L. G. R. 662; 70 J. P. 318—D.

· Statutory Procedure Preliminary to Prosecution under Rivers Pollution Act.—A sanitary authority, without having obtained the consent of the Secretary of State for Scotland (in England, the Local Government Board) under section 6 of the Rivers Pollution Act, 1876, gave notice to a manufacturer within its district of its intention to institute proceedings against him under section 4 of the Act, and thereafter, having obtained the consent of the Secretary for Scotland, instituted proceedings:—Held, first, that the notice was insufficient, as, prior to obtaining the consent of the Secretary for Scotland, the sanitary authority was not in a position to take proceedings; and secondly, that as the defender had by the want of notice been deprived of his right to be heard under section 6 by the sanitary authority, he was entitled to object to the competency of the proceedings on the ground of want of notice. Midlothian County Council v. Oakbank Oil Co., 5 F. 700—Ct. of Sess.

Semble, the sanitary authority was not entitled to insist, as a condition of granting such hearing in regard to the remedial measures which the manufacturer had taken or was prepared to take, that the fact of pollution should be admitted. Id.

— Notice of Intention to take Proceedings—Consent of Local Government Board—Validity of Notice.—Where proceedings are proposed to be taken by a sanitary authority against a person for an offence within section 4 in Part III. of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, the consent of the Local Government Board, required by section 6 of the Act, to such proceedings being taken must be obtained before the notice under section 13 of the intention to take such proceedings at the expiration of two months after such notice can be given to the offender. Midlothian County Council v. Oakbank Oil Co. (5 Fraser, 700) followed. Yorkshire (West Riding) Rivers Board v. Scarr End Mill Co. (65 J. P. 776) overruled. Haylock v. Sparke (22 L. J. "Tidal waters."—The expression "tidal waters" in section 24 of the West Riding of Yorkshire Rivers Act, 1894, is not confined to those waters where there is a horizontal ebb and flow only; it may include waters in which there is only a vertical rise and fall. Yorkshire (West Riding) Rivers Board v. Tadcaster District Council, 97 L. T. 436; 71 J. P. 429; 5 L. G. R. 1208—D.

Application to Transfer Action from County Court to Chancery Division.—An action having been begun in a County Court by the plaintiffs against the defendants for an alleged pollution of a stream by the discharge into it of manufacturing-refuse, an application was made by the plaintiffs to transfer the action to the Chancery Division under section 11 of the Rivers Pollution Act, 1876, on the ground that the case involved legal questions of considerable difficulty and intricate questions of fact:—Held, that the application must be refused as great expense would be incurred, and, further, a local investigation precluded by acceding to it. Yorkshire (West Riding) Rivers Board v. Ravens- thorpe Urban Council, 71 J. P. 209—Joyce, J. And see LOCAL GOVERNMENT, col. 1360.

Medium Filum—Main and Subsidiary Channels.]

—Where the alveus between the banks of a river is divided by an island or islands into a main and subsidiary channels, the subsidiary channels being at times dry but carrying water when the river is in its ordinary state, the medium filum of the river is the centre-line of the alveus from bank to bank, and not the centre-line of the main stream. Menzies v. Breadalbane (No. 1), 4 F. 55—Ct. of Sess.

— Inclosure Act—Award—Several Fishery—Land Abutting on River—Ownership of Bed of River—Right to Take Gravel from Bed of River—Custom—Prescription—Lost Grant.]—In an action brought to restrain the defendants from taking gravel, &c., from the bed of a river in which the plaintiff had a several fishery, and of the bed of which he claimed to be the owner, the defendants justified the taking of the gravel—first, on the ground that the inhabitants of the parish had from time immemorial enjoyed the right (for which a legal origin could be presumed) to take gravel, &c., from the river; and secondly, under an inclosure award allotting, pursuant to the Inclosure Act under which it was made, a strip of land, eight yards wide, on each side of the river within the parish for the purpose of being used by the inhabitants for throwing and cutting weeds out of the river, and for such other purposes as might be necessary for their accommodation, and to the same extent as they enjoyed the same at the passing of the Act:—Held, first, that the immemorial right set up was not established by the evidence, and further, that the right claimed, being to take gravel &c., without stint in the land of another, could not exist in law. Constable v. Nicholson ([1863] 14 C. B. (N.S.) 230; 32 L. J. C. P. 240) followed; second, that the award gave the inhabitants no rights in the bed of the river; apart from other considerations the presumption that a grant of land adjoining a river includes the bed of the river ad medium filum was inapplicable to such an award. Ecroyd v. Coulthard (66 L. J. Ch. 751; [1897] 2 Ch. 554; 67 L. J. Ch. 458; [1898] 2 Ch. 358) followed; and thirdly, on the facts, that the plaintiff had established his ownership of the bed of the river. Hough v. Clark, 5 L. G. R. 1195; 23 T. L. R. 682—Swinfen Eady, J.

Power of Commissioners to Place on Adjoining Land Mud Taken from Rivers.]—Section 32 of the Middle Level Act, 1810, merely enables the commissioners appointed under the Act to place the mud and sillage taken from the rivers and drains in their area in such place as in their discretion they think proper, provided they have power to lay it in such place. Under section 59 of the same Act the commissioners can, however, deposit such mud and sillage upon adjoining lands on making compensation to the party or parties injured thereby. Moulton and Middle Level Commissioners, In re, 97 L. Thames Conservators—Upper Thames—Dredging Licences—Sale of Proceeds—Licensee's Own Profit—Riparian Owner.]—The Conservators of the River Thames are not empowered by the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894, to grant dredging licences for the Upper Thames to their agents, servants, or workmen, authorising them to dredge, and also to sell the proceeds of the dredging for their own personal profit. *Palmer v. 6. RIPARIAN PROPRIETOR.

Natural Watercourse—Spring Artificially Improved.]—The rule in Dudden v. Clutton Union (26 L. J. Ex. 146; 1 H. & N. 627), that the owner of a source of a spring may not destroy the natural flow from the spring into the course of the stream fed by the spring, is not affected by the circumstance that at some remote date the issuing point of the spring has been built over, and an artificial channel formed for the passage of the water. Mostyn v. Atherton, 68 L. J. Ch. 629; [1899] 2 Ch. 360; 81 L. T. 356; 48 W. R. 168—Byrne, J.

Abstraction of Water for Uses Unconnected with Riparian Tenement.]—A riparian owner is not entitled to abstract the water of a natural stream for purposes foreign to or unconnected with his tenement. McCartney v. Londonderry and Lough Swilly Railway, 73 L. J. P.C. 73; [1904] A.C. 301; 91 L. T. 105; 53 W. R. 385—H.L. (Ir.)

A railway company, owners of a small strip of land adjoining a stream, inserted a pipe into the stream for the purpose of carrying the water into a tank at some distance and using it for the service of their engines along the whole of their line:—Held, that they were not entitled to make such use of the water, and that the adjacent owner had a right to stop the pipe. Sandwich (Earl) v. Great Northern Railway (49 L. J. Ch. 225; 10 Ch. D. 707) overruled. Id.

Fish-ponds—Legitimate Purposes—Percolation—Prescription Act—Right of Way.]—A riparian proprietor abstracted water from a stream by pipes and syphons to supply his fish-ponds, and thereby interfered with the flow of water to the lower riparian proprietor's mill. The higher riparian proprietor made a claim that, prior to his use of the pipes and syphons to convey water from the stream to his fish-ponds, he had obtained the same amount of water by percolation through the banks of the stream, and therefore he had a right to such water under the Prescription Act. The lower riparian proprietor claimed a right of way by prescription to repair the bank of the stream where it ran through the higher riparian proprietor's property. The gate by which he entered the higher riparian proprietor's property had always been kept locked and the key kept by the higher riparian proprietor or his servants; but this key had always been asked for as a matter of right when it was required, and had never been refused:—Held, the lower riparian proprietor had such a right as mentioned in Beeston v. Weate (25 L. J. Q.B. 115; 5 E. & B. 986) to keep the bank in repair on the higher riparian proprietor's property, and for that purpose to have access to his premises. Such a right was from time immemorial, and the fact of the gate being kept locked did not affect such right. Held, also, the higher riparian proprietor could not justify abstracting water by pipes and syphons on the ground that if the bank had not been made watertight he would have been entitled to the same amount of water by percolation. Such a claim was not sustainable under the Prescription Act as a watercourse or otherwise. Held, an injunction must be granted to restrain the abstraction of water from the stream by such pipes and syphons, and that they must be taken up and removed; but the order must state that a riparian proprietor was not entitled to restrain absolutely another riparian proprietor from taking any water from the stream for legitimate purposes. Roberts v. Fellowes, 94 L. T. 279—Joyce, J.

Diversion of Water—Diminishing the Flow of Water—Unreasonable Use of Water—Pollution of Stream.—The owner and occupiers of lands abutting on a natural stream complained that the occupiers of dye-works immediately above their lands were diverting the water so as substantially to diminish the flow of water, and were also polluting the stream, and brought an action to restrain them. The defendants claimed a right to use the water of the stream for the purposes of their works, and denied that they were substantially diminishing the flow of water or polluting the stream except occasionally and accidentally:—Held, on the evidence, that the defendants were dealing unreasonably with the water of the stream, so as visibly and materially to diminish the quantity of water coming down, and also polluting the water; and that the plaintiffs were therefore entitled to succeed, even without proof of actual damage, on the general principles of law as to the rights of riparian owners laid down in Sampson v. Hoddinott (26 L. J. C.P. 148; 1 C. B. (n.s.) 590) and Wood v. Waud (18 L. J. Ex. 805; 3 Ex. 748). Sharp v. Wilson, 93 L. T. 155; 21 T. L. R. 679—Joyce, J.

Curtailment of Rights by Statute—Archiving over Stream—Girder—"Building, erection, or thing over the bed."—By section 135 of the Burnley Borough Improvement Act, 1871, "if any building, erection, or thing has been built, erected, or placed in or on the sides of either the Brun or Calder and within fifteen feet from the centre thereof," the corporation can summon the owner or builder before the Justices, who shall order the same to be removed and can inflict penalties. By section 135 "nothing in this Act contained shall prevent the owners of land adjoining the said streams from arching over the same, provided always that the span of such arch shall be not less than thirty feet," and a certain space was to be left under such arch. By section 46 of the Burnley Borough Improvement Act, 1883, "notwithstanding anything in the Act of 1871 contained, every building, erection, or thing . . . built, erected, or placed above the bed . . . shall be so built, erected, or placed as to leave a clear space between such building, erection, or thing, and any building, erection, or thing in or on the opposite side of such respective river of not less than thirty feet," and if this is not complied with the owner or person erecting can be summoned by the corporation. The appellants, who were the owners of both sides of the river, placed across the river an iron girder, which was the first of several, on one half of which girders they proposed to make a carriage-way. They were summoned for unlawfully erecting this girder and not leaving a space between such girder and a building on the side of the river of not less than thirty feet. The magistrates held that section 135 of the Act of 1871 was superseded, and that this was a building, erection, or thing placed above the head of the waterway:—Held, that the view of the magistrates was correct, and that this was in contravention of section 46 of the Act of 1883, section 135 not being applicable, but that so far as section 46 was inconsistent with section 135 it must be taken to override or limit the earlier section. Also that the words "above the bed" meant "over the bed." Per WRIGHT, J.: It was very doubtful whether this was arching at all. Burnley Co-operative Society v. Pickles, 77 L. T. 803; 62 J. P. 260—D.

Servitude Conferred by Charter—Claim to Abstract River Water without Restriction.—By the general law applicable to running streams every riparian proprietor has a right to the ordinary use of the water flowing past his land; and he may also, provided that he does not interfere with the rights of other proprietors below or above him, dam up the stream for the purpose of a mill. White v. White, 75 L. J. P.C. 14; [1906] A.C. 72; 94 L. T. 65—H.L. (Sc.)

A Crown charter granting a mill "Cum stagnis . . . aqueductis aliisque integris privilegiis et pertinentiis ejusdem quibuscunque," cannot be construed as conferring rights beyond those of ordinary dams or stagna, and gives no exclusive property in the running water. Ib.

Prescriptive Rights—Obstruction of Passage of Salmon—Rights of Upper Owners—Interdict—Form of Interdict.—Owners of a salmon fishery are entitled to interdict against the obstruction by a lower riparian owner of the free passage of salmon. Pirie v. Kintore (Earl), 75 L. J. P.C. 96; [1906] A.C. 478—H.L. (Sc.)

The effect of forty years' user of the water of a river is to give the persons so using it a right to continue that user modo et forma within the limits of the prescription. Ib.

The appellants for their trade purposes had diverted the river water—which by prescription they were entitled to abstract to a specified extent—into artificial channels impossible of passage to salmon, with the result at times of leaving the main channel bare of water. The respondents were owners of salmon fisheries on the upper reaches of the river:—Held, that the respondents were entitled to an interdict coupled with a declaration that in the event of any future substantial change in the river any party affected by such change might apply to the Court of Session for remedy. Ib.

Island—Ownership of Soil—Presumption of "medium filum aquæ"—River Running along

Waste.—By a Commons Act certain common and waste lands were vested in the plaintiffs freed and discharged from manorial rights, but upon the trusts and with the powers declared by the Act for the benefit of the inhabitants of a certain borough. The lands were bounded on one side by a river which flowed round a considerable island probably as old as the banks themselves. The plaintiffs were unable to shew a title to this island as such. In an action against the defendants, the owners of lands on the opposite bank of the river, for an injunction to restrain them from taking gravel from the river-bed at a spot on the island which was on the plaintiffs' side of a line drawn down the middle of the stream and across the island, but was not on the plaintiffs' side of a line drawn down the middle of the arm of the stream flowing on their side:—Held, that the plaintiffs' action failed, as the rule that, where a stream flows between two manors or properties, in the absence of evidence to the contrary the boundary is to be taken to be the medium filum aquæ, should be applied, where there is an island, by drawing a medium filum as a boundary through each arm of the stream. Great Torrington Commons Conservators v. Moore Stevens, 73 L. J. Ch. 124; [1904] 1 Ch. 347; 89 L. T. 667; 68 J. P. 111; 2 L. G. R. 397—Joyce, J.

Foreshore — Boundary — Medium Filum.—Where adjoining properties were situated ex adverso of the convex side of a bend in a tidal river, the actual medium filum (as determined by the report of a skilled geographer) being approximately an arc of a circle.—Held—first, that the method of determining the foreshore boundary by drawing a perpendicular from the end of the land boundary at high-water mark to an average medium filum represented by a straight line was inapplicable; and secondly, that the proper method was to draw a perpendicular to a tangent of the circular arc forming the actual medium filum, by joining the end of the land boundary at high-water mark to the centre of the circle. Darling's Trustees v. Caledonian Railway, 5 F. 1001—Ot. of Sess.

Accretion — Change in Course — Non-tidal River—Ownership of Soil.—Where a non-tidal river separating two estates belonging to different owners suddenly changes its course, the property in the soil does not change. Thakurain Ritraj Koer v. Thakurain Sarfaraz Koer, 21 T. L. R. 637—P.C.

Exercise of Statutory Powers—Pollution of Compensation Water—Absence of Negligence.—Riparian proprietors are entitled, except so far as their rights are varied by statute or special circumstances, to require that nothing shall be done to affect to their prejudice either the quantity or the quality of the stream as it flows in a natural state; and when an Act of Parliament authorises interference with the natural flow, the original rights of the riparian proprietors are impaired only so far as the reasonable exercise of the statutory rights impairs them. But where a water company was empowered by Act of Parliament to construct a reservoir on a stream, in order to supply a town with water, and the Act provided that a fixed amount of compensation water should be allowed to flow from the reservoir for the benefit of the riparian proprietors lower down the stream.—Held, that, in the absence of negligence, the water company was not liable for damage caused by the pollution of the compensation water from accidental causes. Edinburgh Water Trustees v. Somerville, 95 L. T. 217—H.L. (Sc.)

"Banks" of River Ure—Flood Banks Erected Outside Natural Banks—Liability to Repair.—Under 7 Geo. 3, c. xciii. and 1 Geo. 4, c. xxxv. there is no obligation on the North-Eastern Railway, as the successors of the Ure Navigation Commissioners, to keep in repair the flood banks erected outside the natural banks of the river Ure. *Fyner v. 7. CANAL.

Statute.—61 & 62 Vict. c. 16 is the Canals Protection (London) Act, 1898.

Right to Support—Working of Subjacent and Adjacent Minerals—Compensation for Minerals left Unworked.—By the Act 30 Geo. 3, c. 82, the plaintiffs were incorporated as a company for carrying on and maintaining a navigable canal; and it was enacted that they should for that purpose have power to purchase lands for making the canal and the several works thereby authorised to be made, and to enter into and upon the lands of any person or persons, and to construct and do all other matters which the company should think necessary and convenient for making and using the canal and other works, the company doing as little damage as might be in the execution of the several powers thereby granted, and making satisfaction in manner thereafter mentioned for all damages to be sustained by the owners of and persons interested in such lands as should be taken, used, or prejudiced in or by the execution of the Act, provided, nevertheless, that nothing in the Act should entitle the company, on purchasing any lands for making the canal or for any other the purposes aforesaid, to any mines of coal, ironstone, or other minerals which should be found in cutting or making the canal and other works aforesaid or that should be under the same, but that all such mines should appertain and belong to such person or persons as would have been entitled to the same in case the Act had not been made. The plaintiffs duly acquired the lands necessary, and constructed and completed the canal and works under the powers of the Act. The purchase-money and compensation properly payable upon taking the lands were duly ascertained, and there had been no default in payment. The defendants were the owners of a colliery which they were working, and the land under which their mines were situate was traversed for a considerable distance by the canal. The defendants, in the ordinary course of working their mines, were desirous of working the coal subjacent or adjacent to the canal.—Held, that the defendants were entitled to get so much of the subjacent and adjacent coal as they could get without destroying or injuring the proper support of the canal and works; but that they were not entitled to get the coal to the destruction or injury of that support; and that the whole compensation having been assessed at once at the time of the purchase by the plaintiffs—that is, compensation for the right of support as well as for the conveyance of the surface of the land—the defendants could not now be entitled to compensation for that in respect of which they had already been compensated. London and North-Western Railway Co. v. Evans (62 L. J. Ch. 1; [1893] 1 Ch. 16) considered and applied. Glamorganshire Canal Co. v. Nixon's Navigation Co., 85 L. T. 53—C.A.

— Compulsory Purchase—"Possession" of Lands Required for Support—Vendor and Purchaser—Purchase-money—Interest.—A railway company's special Act provided that, if the workings of any mine-owner in any seam of minerals should have come within a certain distance of a canal, and such mine-owner should desire to continue (and but for the existence of the canal would have continued) to work within such distance, the company might, if it should appear that such working was likely to damage the canal, give notice to the mine-owner of their willingness to purchase and make compensation for such seam within the prescribed distance, and then the said seam should not be wrought but should be purchased by the company, the purchase-money and compensation to be settled in case of dispute by arbitration, the compensation to include (in addition to the value of the seam) such additional expenses and losses as should be incurred by the mine-owner by reason of the leaving of minerals for the support of the canal or of the continuous working of his mines being interrupted or of other kindred matters. On November 19, 1892, the railway company gave the plaintiff notice of their willingness to purchase under the above provision. The parties endeavoured to settle the amount of the purchase-money and compensation between themselves, but it was eventually referred to arbitration, and in 1901 the arbitrator awarded the sum of 16,565*l.* as the amount of purchase-money and compensation to be paid by the company, with interest:—Held, that upon the construction of the Act the plaintiff was not entitled to interest, but that upon the general principles applicable to vendor and purchaser, as laid down in Birch v. Joy (3 H.L. Cas. 565) and applied in Rhys v. Dare Valley Railway (L. R. 19 Eq. 93), he was entitled to interest at 4 per cent. from November 19, 1892, to the time of payment. Caledonian Railway v. Carmichael (L. R. 2 H.L. Sc. 56) distinguished. Fletcher v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway, 71 L. J. Ch. 590; [1902] 1 Ch. 901; 50 W. R. 423; 66 J. P. 631—Buckley, J.

Obligation to Keep Branch Open—Power to Make Branch as Feeder—Subsequent Power to Make Navigable—Part of Branch Kept Open for Traffic—Part Closed and Used as Feeder—"Reasonable facilities."—A canal company were authorised by their special Act, passed in 1793, to construct a canal for navigable purposes, to levy rates, and to construct (amongst other things) reservoirs and feeders for supplying the canal with water; and all persons were to have the right of navigating and using the canal on payment of the specified rates, the owners of adjoining lands having some special privileges of navigation. Under this power to make feeders, a cut or branch from the main canal, some seven miles in length, was begun, and, by a special Act passed in the following year, the company were "authorised and empowered to make navigable" this cut, which was at first intended to act only as a feeder, and to make applicable to it the provisions of the previous Act as to the levying of rates and the rights of adjoining owners of land to use the branch. The branch was opened for traffic before the year 1800, and continued to be used as a navigable cut or branch down to 1898, when, owing to the scarcity of water through drought, the company drew off the water from the greater part of the branch for the supply of their canal, and that part of the branch had since been closed for navigable purposes and used only as a feeder; but the remainder of the branch—the two miles nearest the main line—had continued to be and was open and used for traffic. The company refused to re-open the closed part of the branch for traffic. Upon an application by adjoining landowners, under the "reasonable facilities" clauses of the Railway and Canal Traffic Acts, to compel the company to re-open the whole branch for traffic, the company proved that, having regard to the dwindling traffic on the branch, the very large cost necessary to re-instate it, and the extra cost of maintaining it, if opened, owing to the porous nature of the chalk soil through which it was constructed, the traffic would not be sufficient to compensate them for the outlay:—Held, that, as the provision in the second Act to make the cut navigable was permissive only and not obligatory, and as the power under the earlier Act to make the branch as a feeder was not taken away by the power in the second Act to make it navigable, the company were entitled to keep the cut, or any part of it, open as a feeder only, without thereby incurring any obligation to maintain and keep it open for traffic; that the mere fact that the company kept a part open for traffic did not impose upon them the obligation of keeping the whole branch open for traffic; and that the Court could not under colour of giving reasonable facilities under the Traffic Acts, order the company to work what they were not compellable to work, and were not in fact working; and, further, upon the facts, that, as the company had shewn that the cost of restoring and maintaining the branch for traffic would be far in excess of any advantage likely to accrue either to the applicants and persons using the branch, or to the company themselves, the facilities claimed were not "reasonable facilities." Rothschild (Lord) v. Grand Junction Canal Co., 91 L. T. 386; 12 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 141; 20 T. L. R. 503—Ry. Com.

Abstraction of Water—Proprietors of Canal—Millowners—Compensation—Private Acts of Parliament.—An Act of Parliament authorised the construction of a canal and cut, to be supplied with water from a river, and empowered the proprietors to do anything "which they shall think requisite and necessary or convenient for . . . maintaining and using the said canal and cut . . . doing as little damage as may be," and making compensation as provided by the Act. A later Act authorised the construction of a tidal basin and entrances in connection with the canal, and extended the powers conferred by the earlier Act to such additional works. The proprietors of the canal drew water from the river through the canal to scour out silt which was deposited in the tidal basin and entrances and tended to choke them, and by so doing interfered with the supply of water to mills situated on the river:—Held, that they were justified under the powers contained in the Act in so using the water, and that the remedy of the millowners was under the compensation clauses. Redler v. Great Western Railway, 96 L. T. 98—H.L. (E.)

Dredging—Statutory Obligation—Right of Traders to Sue.—By virtue of section 88, subsection 14 of the Manchester Ship Canal Act, 1885, as modified by an agreement of 1896, which was confirmed by and scheduled to the Manchester Ship Canal Act, 1896, the traders at Warrington are entitled to sue the canal company for breach of their statutory obligation to dredge the bed and banks of the Mersey so that at all times there shall be a depth of eight feet of water at low water of spring tides between certain specified limits. Crosfield v. Manchester Ship Canal (No. 2), 22 T. L. R. 192—C.A.

Waste Water—Wrongful Abstraction of Water.—By a private Act of Parliament it was provided that all the "waste water" of the appellants' canal, with certain immaterial exceptions therein mentioned, should be discharged into another canal, which had since become the property of the respondents. The appellants had for many years supplied water from their canal to various manufacturing works situated near the canal:—Held, that as the appellants were a canal company, not a waterworks company, "waste water" meant all water not legitimately needed for the purposes of navigation, and that they might be restrained from so disposing of their water as to prevent it from passing into the respondents' canal. *Rochdale Canal Co. v. 2. CLAIM TO RIGHT OF WAY.

Right not Established—User of Country Paths—Absence of Injury—Injunction Refused.—Where a defendant sets up, as a defence to an action for trespass, a public right of way which he fails to establish, and the public use of the way does no present injury to the landowner, who, moreover, disclaims any intention of stopping it so long as it does not conflict with the due enjoyment of his property, the Court will not interfere by injunction, but will make a declaration and impose nominal damages for the trespass. Behrens v. Richards, 74 L. J. Ch. 615; [1905] 2 Ch. 614; 93 L. T. 623; 54 W. R. 141; 69 J. P. 381; 3 L. G. R. 1228; 21 T. L. R. 705—Buckley, J.

From the public use of country paths by permission for the purpose of pleasure no dedication can be inferred. Ib.

Ancient Monument—Stonehenge—Free User and Access by Public—Trust—Presumption—Absolute Ownership—Thoroughfare—Cul-de-sac.—Where the owner of an ancient monument of great public interest produces his title-deeds shewing that he holds under conveyances made to him and his ancestors without any trust for the free user of and access to the monument by the public, it is impossible for the Court to presume a lost grant or lost Act of Parliament in order to establish such a trust. Att.-Gen. v. Antrobus, 74 L. J. Ch. 599; [1905] 2 Ch. 188; 92 L. T. 790; 69 J. P. 141; 3 L. G. R. 1071; 21 T. L. R. 471—Farwell, J.

On the evidence at the trial,—Held, that, with the exception of the Netterton Way, admittedly a public highway, there were no roads or tracks subject to public rights of way running up to and through the circle of stones at Stonehenge. Ib.

The rights of the public in relation to a cul-de-sac in a town and in the country discussed. Ib.

Right of Public to Pass and Repass—User for other Purposes—Trespass.]—Any user of a highway by the public beyond the reasonable user thereof as a highway is a trespass. Hickman v. Maisey, 69 L. J. Q.B. 511; [1900] 1 Q.B. 752; 82 L. T. 321; 48 W. R. 385—C.A.

The plaintiff was possessed of a piece of land and of the soil of a public highway crossing it. Over the land on each side of the highway he had granted to R. a licence to exercise horses. The defendant owned a newspaper in which he published the doings of racehorses. He entered upon the highway and walked up and down for a considerable time within a short space observing the doings of R.'s horses to the detriment of R. and the plaintiff by depreciating the value of the land. The defendant justified under the public right of passing and repassing:—Held, that he was a trespasser. Harrison v. Rutland (Duke) (62 L. J. Q.B. 117; [1893] 1 Q.B. 142) followed. Ib.

Ancient Highway—User by Defendant.]—A small triangular piece of ground adjoining a public bridge over the Ouse at St. Ives was in 1871, at the request of the defendant's father, who was allowed to use it, inclosed by the plaintiffs. At that time the defendant's father gave an acknowledgment in writing that the piece of ground belonged to the plaintiffs. The defendant's father died in 1890, and the defendant had since then occupied the piece of ground and claimed to have acquired a title to it under the Statute of Limitations:—Held, on the evidence that the defendant had acquired no title, as there was evidence that prior to 1871 the piece of ground formed part of an ancient highway. St. Ives Corporation v. Wadsworth, 72 J. P. 73—Swinfen Eady, J. And see EASEMENT.

3. DEDICATION.

Presumption from Public User—Rebutting Evidence.]—Entries in the court roll of a manor that greens along the side of a highway are described as waste, and evidence that they have been subsequently dealt with as private property, are admissible to rebut the presumption of dedication arising from the fact that the public have walked and ridden over the greens. Friern Barnet Urban Council v. Richardson, 62 J. P. 547—C.A.

Power to Dedicate—Land Vested in Company for Statutory Purposes—Canal Company—Reservoir Embankments.]—A statutory body cannot dedicate to the public a right of way which would be incompatible with the special purpose for which it was incorporated. So a canal company, which was empowered and obliged to make a canal and the works incident and necessary for the purpose of making and maintaining the canal, was held to have been incapable of dedicating to the public a right of way over the embankments of reservoirs constructed by or in pursuance of its powers in a case where it was subsequently proved that the user by the public of the right of way must ultimately lead to the destruction of the embankment and consequent damage to the public unless great expense was incurred by the company to prevent such a result. Great Western Railway v. Solihull Rural Council, 86 L. T. 852; 66 J. P. 772—C.A.

—Forecourts—Dedication—Consent of Freeholder—Presumption of—Dedication for a Term.]—The tenant, for a term of eighty-two years, of land adjoining a highway built houses on the land standing a few feet back from the highway, thus leaving a strip between the houses and the highway. Gratings communicating with the cellars of these houses were placed in the strip, and it was, from the time when the houses were built, to some extent used by the occupiers for exposing goods for sale and the like. The strip was, at the request of one L. who was interested in the property as sub-lessee and afterwards as assignee of the head-lease, paved by the local authority shortly after the houses were built, and there was no physical demarcation between the strip and the footpath at the side of the road:—Held, that, apart from the circumstance that the land was throughout on lease, there was no evidence from which dedication of the strip to the public as a highway could be presumed. Corseilis v. London County Council, 77 L. J. Ch. 120; [1908] 1 Ch. 13; 71 J. P. 561; 6 L. G. R. 78; 24 T. L. R. 80—C.A.

Held, also, by the COURT OF APPEAL, that, even if as against L. the local authority had a right to insist that the strip should be given up to the use of the public during his term, this right could not be enforced against purchasers for value without notice of the claims of the local authority. Ib.

Public Footway—Private Carriage-way along Same Line—Presumption as to Extent of Public Right of Footway.]—Where a public right of footway exists across land, and a certain amount of the surface of land lying along the course of the public footway is devoted to traffic, even if it be private traffic, the presumption is that the owner of the soil must be taken to have dedicated to the public so much of the surface as he has in fact devoted to traffic, even if it be private traffic. The principle laid down in Grand Surrey Canal Co. v. Hall (9 L. J. C.P. 329; 1 Man. & G. 392, 406) applied. Att.-Gen. v. Esher Linoleum Co., 70 L. J. Ch. 808; [1901] 2 Ch. 647; 85 L. T. 414; 50 W. R. 22; 66 J. P. 71—Buckley, J.

Grass Space between Hedge and Metalled Road—Margin—Presumption of Dedication to Public.]—There is no irrebuttable presumption that a strip of land left between a metalled highway and the fence of the adjoining property has been dedicated to public use as part of the highway. Belmore (Countess) v. Kent County Council, 70 L. J. Ch. 501; [1901] 1 Ch. 873; 84 L. T. 523; 49 W. R. 459; 65 J. P. 456—Cozens-Hardy, J.

The fact that the margin of such a strip.

adjoining the metalled road has occasionally been walked over by the public is too indefinite a use to form the foundation of a public right or to establish a dedication as part of the highway. Ib.

Strip of Roadside Land—Dedication—Presumption—Evidence.—“Once a highway always a highway.”—In the case of a highway running between fences the presumption is that the public right of way extends over the whole space of ground between the fences and is not confined to the hard or metalled portion. Prima facie the fences are to be taken as having been originally put up for the purpose of separating land dedicated as highway from land not so dedicated, unless there is something to rebut the presumption. The public right over a highway cannot be released nor lost by mere disuse, and no length of time will preclude the public from resuming the exercise of the right where once enjoyed. Need v. Hendon Urban Council (81 L. T. 405) and Belmore (Countess) v. Kent County Council (70 L. J. Ch. 501; [1901] 1 Ch. 873) observed upon and distinguished. Harvey v. Truro Rural Council, 72 L. J. Ch. 705; [1903] 2 Ch. 638; 89 L. T. 90; 52 W. R. 262; 68 J. P. 51; 1 L. G. R. 758—Joyce, J. And see Att.-Gen. v. Richmond Corporation, ante, VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

Roadside Waste—Presumption—Evidence.—Fences by the side of a highway are prima facie the boundaries of the highway so as to raise a presumption that the public right of way extends over the whole space of ground between the fences. But the mere existence of fences on either side of a highway is not conclusive. In order to raise the presumption it must be proved that there is nothing to shew that they were not put up as boundaries of the highway. The plaintiff claimed that a triangular piece of land abutting on and not fenced off from a highway belonged to him:—Held, that, in the absence of anything to shew the contrary, it must be assumed from the nature and position of the fence surrounding the land that it had been put up as a boundary of the highway; that the presumption therefore arose that the land formed part of the highway; and, on the evidence, that there was nothing to rebut that presumption. Offin v. Rochford Rural Council, 75 L. J. Ch. 348; [1906] 1 Ch. 842; 94 L. T. 669; 54 W. R. 244; 4 L. G. R. 595; 70 J. P. 97—Warrington, J.

Road and Ditch Alongside—Highway—Dedication to Public—Filling up of Ditch—Widening of Highway—Added Roadway—Paving Expenses.—There may be a dedication to the public of a space lying between two fences, including a ditch, although at the time of the dedication the ditch was incapable of being used for the passage of foot-passengers and carriages. Chorley Corporation v. Nightingale, 75 L. J. K.B. 793; [1906] 2 K.B. 612; 95 L. T. 443; 70 J. P. 500; 4 L. G. R. 1066—D.

Where an obstruction or excavation which for a time has prevented the user of the whole space of a highway for passage has been removed or disappears, the inclusion of the formerly obstructed or excavated portion is not to be treated as an addition to the highway so as to cast an obligation upon the frontagers of bearing the cost of making up the road under the concluding portion of section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875. Ib.

The appeal against this decision having been practically abandoned on the appeal by the plaintiffs, the appeal was dismissed upon the ground that as there was evidence to support certain findings of fact the COURT OF APPEAL could not interfere with those findings. Chorley Corporation v. Nightingale, 76 L. J. K.B. 1003; [1907] 2 K.B. 637; 97 L. T. 465; 71 J. P. 441; 5 L. G. R. 1114; 23 T. L. R. 651—C.A.

Footway Appointed under Inclosure Award—Subsequent Use for Wheeled Traffic—Nuisance Caused by Wheeled Traffic—Post Erected by Local Authority Pulled Down in Assertion of Right of Way—Action by Local Authority—Non-joinder of Attorney-General.—The plaintiff council, with the object of preventing the use of a narrow passage between buildings in their district, which they alleged was a highway for foot-passengers only, from being used by horses and wheeled vehicles, erected a post in the passage. The defendant, who contended that the way was a highway for all kinds of traffic, pulled down the post, whereupon the plaintiff council brought an action, claiming a declaration that the passage was a highway for foot-passengers only, an injunction, and damages. The passage was originally appointed as a public footpath of the width of 6 ft. by an inclosure award of 1811. It was subsequently encroached on in places by buildings, and so reduced to 4 ft. 4 in. in width at the narrowest point. There was evidence that for the past forty years it had been used to a considerable extent by fishermen with small carts drawn by ponies and donkeys; and that the lord of the manor, in whom the soil was vested, had long regarded it as a highway for all kinds of traffic:—Held—first, that the action, being in substance an action for interference with the plaintiffs' property, was maintainable, though the Attorney-General was not joined; secondly, that the use of the passage for wheeled traffic had all along been a public nuisance in view of the obstruction caused to foot-passengers; and that there could not, therefore, have been any dedication of the way as a highway for wheeled traffic, and that it remained a highway for foot-passengers only. Sheringham Urban Council v. Holsey, 91 L. T. 225; 2 L. G. R. 744; 68 J. P. 395; 20 T. L. R. 402—Joyce, J.

Obstructions—Embayments—User by Public—Cleaning and Repairing by Highway Authority—Evidence of Dedication.—A building erected in 1869 upon land leased from the Corporation of L., who were the owners of the freehold, was built with recessed windows or embayments on the ground floor, and the main wall of the building on either side projected beyond the embayments and overhung them above the windows, the embayments being some eleven inches deep. In 1899 the tenant of the house reconstructed these windows so as to cause them to project three inches beyond the main wall, and so as to fill up the embayments. During the period from 1869 till the reconstruction in 1899, the paving of the embayments was not distinguishable or marked off from the paving of the footway, and had been cleaned and repaired by the corporation, as the highway authority, at the same time as the paving of the footway, and the public were in the habit, without any objection by any lessee, of entering upon and passing in and out of the embayments, the windows of which were used for the exhibition of shop goods. Upon an information against the tenant for causing an obstruction in the street by building so as to fill up the embayments,—Held, that neither the user by the public nor the fact that the paving of the embayments was not marked off from the paving of the footway and was cleaned and repaired by the corporation as highway authority was any evidence of the dedication of the embayments to the public use as part of the highway, and that therefore no obstruction had been committed. Piggott v. Goldstraw, 84 L. T. 94; 65 J. P. 259; 19 Cox C.C. 621—D.

Custom—Promenade.]—In an action brought by an owner in fee for a declaration of title to a strip of land adjoining the town of Fermoy, called "The Barnane Walk," subject to a right of way on foot possessed by the public over the premises, the evidence adduced regarding the character and user of the premises shewed that so long as memory went back it had been devoted to the recreation of the inhabitants of the town, by whom it was used as a promenade:—Held, that the Town Commissioners of Fermoy had no right to erect a barrier across the entrance to the walk, and that the owner in fee of the land, subject to the said right of the inhabitants of Fermoy, could not encroach on the walk by granting to his tenants of other lands abutting thereon a right to pass over the walk in carriages, unless such grant were subject to the condition that the use of the inhabitants should not be thereby interfered with, or by converting the walk into a public road to be traversed by all kinds of vehicles. Distinction between the right to use a place as a promenade possessed by the inhabitants of a district, and a right of way over a place on foot possessed by the public. Abercromby v. Fermoy Town Commissioners, [1900] 1 Ir. R. 302—C.A.

Building Scheme—Plan—Implied Representation—Power to Vary—Vacant Space Used as Road—Subsequent Building on Road—Dedication to Public—Cul-de-sac.]—The plaintiff purchased a plot of land which was part of an estate laid out under a building scheme. Upon a plan annexed to the conveyance land adjoining the plot purchased was shewn as a vacant space, such space being used as a road, though only as a cul-de-sac. The conveyance was made subject to a power to vary the plan and conditions. In an action by the plaintiff to restrain the defendant from building on the vacant space in contravention of the building scheme,—Held, that the plan did not amount to a binding representation that the vacant space would always remain such; that the power to vary applied to this vacant space, and that it had not been dedicated to the public. Whitehouse v. Hugh, 75 L. J. Ch. 677; [1906] 2 Ch. 283; 95 L. T. 175; 22 T. L. R. 679—C.A. Affirming, 54 W. R. 294—Kekewich, J.

Evidence—Interruption.]—In order to constitute a valid dedication to the public of a highway by the owner of the soil there must be an intention to dedicate, an animus dedicandi of which the user by the public is evidence and no more, and a single act of interruption by the owner is of much more weight upon a question of intention than many acts of enjoyment. User by the public over land belonging to a non-resident owner is less cogent evidence of dedication than where the user is necessarily brought to his personal notice, and the weight to be attached to user depends somewhat upon the nature of the land itself—e.g. whether it is cultivated or is rough and uncultivated land. Chinnock v. Hartley Wintney Rural Council, 63 J. P. 327—Cozens-Hardy, J.

User.]—Where the user by the public of a path extended from the earliest memory of a witness aged eighty-seven, with the knowledge and consent of the owner of the path,—Held, to be sufficient evidence of an intention by the owner to dedicate the soil of the path to the public. Leckhampton Quarries Co. v. Ballinger, 68 J. P. 464; 20 T. L. R. 559—Swinfen Eady, J.

Land Acquired for Statutory Purpose.]—See Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway v. Davenport, ante, STATUTE, col. 2498.

4. BOUNDARIES AND FENCES.

Highway—Extent of User.]—Where a highway has been set out or fenced at each side by metes and bounds and afterwards for a length of time, or in course of time, part only of the space so defined has been metalled and used as a road, the public right of passage prima facie extends to the whole space set out. In the absence of clear evidence to the contrary, or with slight evidence of user of the land fringing the actual road, by foot-passengers, or for other public purposes connected with the highway, even the owner cannot appropriate or obstruct the more or less waste and useless land adjoining the metalled road; in such cases, however, the proof of original dedication of the whole space rests on the plaintiff, though such proof is sufficiently supplied by the evidence of the original setting-out or fencing of the space in question. But where there is a defined and metalled road edged by an appropriate water-table, the mere fact that adjoining land, more or less waste and useless, is open and accessible from the highway will not, in the absence of other evidence, establish dedication of any land except that which has been actually used for highway purposes, and even slight evidence of user for private purposes, having regard to the character of the place in question, will establish the private right of exclusive occupation. Att.-Gen. v. Perry, [1904] 1 Ir. R. 247—C.A.

Right of Passage—Extent of—Roadside Strips—Special Act—Construction.]—Where a highway, though of varying and unequal width, runs between fences, the public right of way prima facie extends over the whole space between the fences. The effect of descriptions in special Acts of Parliament affecting interests in land considered. Locke-King v. Woking Urban Council, 77 L. T. 790; 62 J. P. 167—Kekewich, J.

Roadside Strip—Waste of Manor—Land between Fences—Presumption—Rebutting Evidence.]—On one side of a metalled road, which was a public highway, was an irregular shaped piece of land, formerly part of the waste of the manor, beyond which was an ancient hedge inclosing private property. On the other side of the road was another ancient hedge. In 1864, by the licence of the lord of the manor, one of the copyholders dug up and carried away several cartloads of soil from the surface of this piece of land. In 1872, in accordance with the customs of the manor, the lord granted a licence to inclose the land, and admitted the licensee as copyholder thereof. In 1874 the copyholder inclosed the land by erecting a fence by the side of the metalled road at a distance of 15 feet from the centre of the road, the surveyor of the highway board assisting in setting out the line. In 1884 the fence, being decayed, was restored. In 1880 the lord of the manor enfranchised the land. No objection was made by any one to any of these acts until in 1897 the defendants threw down the fence, alleging that it was an obstruction to the highway:—Held, that, assuming that there was a prima facie presumption that the whole space of land between the two ancient hedges was part of the highway, such presumption was rebutted by the evidence before the Court, and that therefore the land inclosed in 1874 was not part of the highway. Neeld v. Hendon Urban Council, 81 L. T. 405; 63 J. P. 724—C.A.

Public Footpath through Lane of Varying Breadth between Fences—Presumption as to Extent of Public Right.—Where a public footpath passes through a lane of irregular shape containing a private occupation-road and of a varying breadth between the fences, there is no presumption, as there is in the case of an ordinary public highway bounded by fences, that the public right extends to the whole space between the fences. The question how far in such cases the public right extends depends upon the evidence in each particular case, and the mere fact that the public in passing through the lane have been accustomed, without objection, to walk upon the greensward or strips of grass land between the fences does not shew that any such presumption exists, or that the public right extends to the fences. Ford v. Harrow Urban Council, 88 L. T. 394; 67 J. P. 248; 1 L. G. R. 256—Ridley, J.

Dangerous Part of Highway—Removal of Fence—Misfeasance.—The defendant council, in which the powers of highway surveyors were vested, removed a fence which had been in existence for many years at the side of a dangerous part of a highway, with the intention of erecting posts instead. Before the posts were erected the plaintiff's husband, while driving along the road in the dark, drove into a ditch, which was in flood at this point of the road, and was drowned:—Held, that there was evidence of misfeasance on the part of the defendant council in removing the fence, and that the death of the deceased man was attributable to such act of misfeasance, for which therefore the defendants were liable. Whyler v. Bingham Rural Council, [1901] 1 Q.B. 45; 64 J. P. 771—C.A.

Lateral Fence.—Held, on the evidence, that the presumption was rebutted that a lateral fence of a highway was its boundary, and that the acts of user of a strip adjoining the metalled part of a highway which had been proved did not amount to a dedication to the public. Att.-Gen. v. Moorson-Roberts, 72 J. P. 123—Eve, J.

Defective Fence.—See NUISANCE, col. 1758.

5. OWNERSHIP OF SOIL.

Lane in Town—Evidence as to Streets in other Parts of Town—Acts of Ownership—Maintaining Post in Lane.—The Masters and Fellows of University College, Oxford, were the owners of land on both sides of Logic Lane, Oxford, and for a long period of time had exercised acts of ownership thereover, including the maintenance of a post in the lane to prevent vehicular traffic passing through it. The Corporation of Oxford claimed that the lane was vested in them, and they put in evidence acts done by them with reference to other streets or lanes in the city, claiming to be entitled to do so because under a Royal charter of 1199 the King granted and confirmed to the burgesses of Oxford the vill or town of Oxford:—Held (assuming, but without deciding in favour of the corporation that the evidence would be sufficient to establish a presumption from which the Court ought to draw the inference that the corporation owned those streets to which their evidence related), that, in the absence of evidence of acts of ownership by the defendants in the lane in question, and the fact of acts of ownership exercised over a long period of time by the Masters and Fellows of the college, they had established that the soil of the lane and the right to maintain a post therein was vested in the college. University College, Oxford v. Oxford Corporation, 68 J. P. 470; 20 T. L. R. 637—Swinfen Eady, J.

Conveyance of Land—Adjoining Highway—Street—Presumption—Ownership ad Medium Filum.—The presumption that a conveyance of land passes one-half of the soil of the adjoining highway extends to streets in towns and is not rebutted by the circumstance that the grantor is the municipal authority entitled to part of the soil of the other half of the street. White's Charities, In re; Charity Commissioners v. London Corporation, 67 L. J. Ch. 430; [1898] 1 Ch. 659; 78 L. T. 550; 46 W. R. 479—Romer, J.

Land adjoining Highway—Presumption as to Ownership.—Prima facie the presumption is, that a strip of land lying between a highway and the adjoining inclosure, is, as well as the soil of the highway ad medium filum viæ, the property of the owner of the inclosure. But if the strip of land communicate with open commons or other larger portions of land, the presumption is either done away or considerably narrowed, for the evidence of ownership which applies to the larger portions applies also to the narrow strip which communicates with them. Grose v. West (7 Taunt. 39) followed. Plumbley v. Lock, 67 J. P. 237; 1 L. G. R. 54—D.

Footway—Trespass—Right of Adjoining Owner—Obstruction—Mandatory Injunction.—Where a sanitary authority has taken a portion of a footway to a street in order to construct an approach to public conveniences, this constitutes a trespass upon the property of the owner of an adjoining house, to whom (in the absence of evidence to the contrary) the soil usque ad medium filum vice belongs, by virtue of a legal presumption; and a mandatory injunction will be granted for the removal of that portion of the approach, inasmuch as the subsoil of the footway does not vest in the sanitary authority under section 44, sub-section 2 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891. London and North-Western Railway v. Westminster Corporation, 71 L. J. Ch. 34; [1902] 1 Ch. 269; 85 L. T. 544; 50 W. R. 268; 66 J. P. 343—Joyce, J.

Lease of Land adjoining New Street—Presumption as to Ownership of Soil usque ad Medium Filum Viæ—Rebutting Circumstances.—The presumption that a conveyance of land abutting on a highway passes the soil of the road usque ad medium filum is rebutted by the surrounding circumstances where a new street is made by commissioners under an Act of Parliament which imposes on them duties and obligations inconsistent with the presumption, and where the parcels and plan shew no intention to pass any part of the street. Mappin v. Liberty, 72 L. J. Ch. 63; [1903] 1 Ch. 118; 87 L. T. 523; 51 W. R. 264; 67 J. P. 91; 1 L. G. R. 167—Joyce, J.

Semble, the presumption does not apply to building estates or schemes. Quære, whether the presumption applies to leases or to grants from the Crown. Ib.

Body Incorporated for Building Bridge and Approaches—Presumption of Ownership.—The plaintiffs were incorporated by an Act of 36 Geo. 3, c. xciv., for the purpose of building a bridge over the river Itchen, at Northam, and for making roads communicating therewith. The Act empowered the plaintiffs to set out the lands through which the roads were to pass, and to purchase the lands so set out, and the Act vested the bridge and the roads in them. The bridge and roads were completed in 1800, and the plaintiffs had ever since been in possession of the site and subsoil of the roads. The defendants, as the local authority, made a sewer under one of the roads, and upon an arbitration to assess the compensation payable to the plaintiffs therefor the latter were unable to produce any conveyance to them relating to the soil of that part of the road in which the sewer was laid. The lord of the manor in which the road was situated had joined in the conveyance to the plaintiffs of other portions of the road, but it was admitted that the lord of the manor was not entitled to the subsoil in question. The defendants contended that under the Act it was not necessary for the plaintiffs to purchase the subsoil of the road; that in the absence of any deed of conveyance of the subsoil it ought to be presumed that no such deed had been made; and that, therefore, the subsoil had never been acquired by the plaintiffs:—Held, that the whole scheme of the Act was that the plaintiffs should purchase the fee-simple of the lands set out for the roads, and that, having been in possession ever since the road was made, it must be taken that they had acquired the fee-simple in the subsoil and were the owners thereof. Northam Bridge Co. v. South Stoneham Rural Council, 71 J. P. 345; 23 T. L. R. 476—C.A.

6. TRESPASS.

User of Highway—Injunction.—An injunction to restrain the defendants from trespassing on a public highway by using it for the purpose of catching moths by means of lamps and other appliances, and from trespassing on the adjoining land, refused, the trespasses being merely technical and the defendants never threatening or intending to infringe any rights of property and desisting from doing so when requested. Fielden v. Cox, 22 T. L. R. 411—Buckley, J.

7. BRIDGE.

Liability to Maintain—Approaches to Bridge—Liability to Repair Highway for 300 feet from Each End of Bridge.—By the common law, where a person cuts through a highway, even although empowered to do so by statute, there is an obligation imposed upon him, even if the statute is silent on the subject, to make a bridge for the passage of the King's subjects and to maintain it for all time. The Statute of Bridges, 1581, which imposes upon the person liable to maintain a bridge the liability to maintain the highway also to the extent of 300 feet from each end of the bridge, applies to a case where the county at large is liable to repair the bridge, and where a party is liable to do so by prescription, or ratione tenuræ, but the Court will not extend the operation of the statute to a case where the obligation to make and maintain the bridge is imposed by the statute which enables the interference to be made with the highway. Hertfordshire County Council v. New River Co., 74 L. J. Ch. 49; [1904] 2 Ch. 513; 91 L. T. 796; 53 W. R. 60; 68 J. P. 532; 3 L. G. R. 64; 20 T. L. R. 686—Swinfen Eady, J.

The New River Company's Act, 1606, empowered the corporation to interfere with the highway by making cuts across it, but required them to make and maintain convenient bridges and ways:—Held, that the expression "bridge," as used in the statute, did not necessarily mean a bridge with the approaches defined by the Statute of Bridges—namely, a bridge and approach to the extent of 300 feet from each end. Ib.

Fences by Side of Raised Approach—Liability to Repair.—The defendants under their statutory powers constructed a canal and crossed a highway, which they carried over their canal by means of a bridge, to which they made a raised approach along the highway and fenced it off from the rest of the highway. The fences had since fallen into disrepair, so as to constitute a public nuisance. By their Act of Parliament passed in 1829, the bridges were vested in the defendants, and section 26 provided that the defendant company should not be liable to repair any part of the road approaching any bridge over the canal after such roads had been first made and used for one year, and then put into good and sufficient repair by the defendant company, beyond or further than the extremity of the wing walls of any such bridge, but nothing therein contained should be construed to exonerate the defendant company from the future repair of all such bridges and the wing walls, ramparts, and side banks thereof:—Held, that the Act of Parliament drew a clear distinction between the bridges, as such, which were vested in the defendants, and the approaches to the bridges, which were not vested in the defendants, and which they were now relieved from all liability to keep in repair, and that the defendants were therefore not liable to repair the fences. Semble, the obligation lay on the county council. Att.-Gen. v. Oxford Canal Navigation, 72 L. J. Ch. 285; 88 L. T. 250; 51 W. R. 386; 67 J. P. 130; 1 L. G. R. 282—C.A.

Liability of County Council.—A county council are not relieved from their prima facie duty of repairing a bridge built before the County Bridges Act, 1803, by proof that occasional repairs have been done to the bridge by the highway authority, or that the bridge was built over an artificial channel to carry a highway already in existence when the channel was formed. Att.-Gen. v. West Riding of Yorkshire County Council, 67 J. P. 173; 1 L. G. R. 223—Kekewich, J.

Bridge over Canal—Raised Approaches to Bridge—Liability to Repair Fences.—A canal company liable to repair bridges and “the wing walls ramparts and side banks thereof,” but not liable to repair “roads approaching bridges” beyond the extremity of the wing walls thereof, is not liable to repair the fences to the raised approaches to bridges. Att.-Gen. v. Oxford Canal Navigation, 71 L. J. Ch. 660; 87 L. T. 93; 66 J. P. 698—Kekewich, J.

8. FERRY.

Disturbance—Ferry from Vill to Vill—Change of Circumstances—New Traffic.—A right of ferry from one vill or township to another is a right known to the law. Cowes Urban Council v. Southampton, Isle of Wight, and South of England Steam Packet Co., 74 L. J. K.B. 665; [1905] 2 K.B. 287; 92 L. T. 658; 53 W. R. 602; 69 J. P. 298; 8 L. G. R. 807; 21 T. L. R. 506—Kennedy, J.

Under a lease from the Crown conveying an ancient ferry “across the river Medina between East Cowes and West Cowes” and also two landing-places, the plaintiffs claimed the exclusive right to carry persons between any point on the east bank and any point on the west bank of the river within East Cowes and West Cowes. The ferry had always been worked between two, but not always the same two, defined points:—Held, that the lease conveyed a right of ferry between the landing-places only. Semble, that East Cowes and West Cowes are not villis in such a sense that a right to ferry from any point in either to any point in the other could be validly granted. Id.

The defendants, who carried passengers in steamers between Cowes and the mainland, conveyed those and other passengers in steam launches between East Cowes and West Cowes, at landing-places distant 230 and 875 yards respectively from the termini of the plaintiffs’ ferry. The defendants’ launches dealt with a traffic which had newly developed and was different from that dealt with by the plaintiffs:—Held, that there had been no disturbance of the plaintiffs’ ferry. Id.

Bridge.—The owner of a ferry cannot maintain an action for loss of traffic caused by the construction of a bridge. The dictum of BLACKBURN, J., in Reg. v. Cambrian Railway (40 L. J. Q.B. 169; L. R. 6 Q.B. 422) is overruled by Hopkins v. Great Northern Railway (46 L. J. Q.B. 265; 2 Q.B. D. 224). Dillon v. Skirrow, 77 L. J. Ch. 107; [1908] 1 Ch. 41; 97 L. T. 658; 71 J. P. 555; 6 L. G. R. 108; 24 T. L. R. 70—C.A.

9. DRAIN.

Flow of Water from Public Highway over Adjoining Land—Pipe under Road connecting Catchpits—“Drain.”—A highway authority for many years prior to 1868 had kept in an efficient condition a pipe which ran through a bank separating the highway from the defendant’s adjoining land, and which carried through it and discharged on to the land the rain and storm waters running off the highway into catchpits, and thence through the pipe, but there was no defined channel on the land in question along which such water could flow after it had been discharged through the pipe:—Held, that the pipe was a drain within the meaning of section 67 of the Highway Act, 1835, and that, owing to the long period during which it had existed, the Court ought to presume a legal origin to a claim of right on the part of the highway authority to discharge the water through the pipe on to the defendant’s land. Att.-Gen. v. Copeland, 71 L. J. K.B. 472; [1902] 1 K.B. 690; 86 L. T. 486; 50 W. R. 490; 66 J. P. 420—C.A.

Easement—Dominant and Servient Tenement.—A highway authority can claim no easement to continue the flow of water through such a pipe, on the ground that the public, as occupiers of the road, have for more than the statutory period enjoyed the privilege of pouring the water through it, because a public right of way is not a dominant tenement for the purpose of having such a right attached to it. Per Lord ALVERSTONE, s.c., 70 L. J. K.B. 512; [1901] 2 K.B. 101; 84 L. T. 562; 49 W. R. 489; 65 J. P. 581—Lord Alverstone, C.J.

10. TRAMWAY.

Contract—Clearing Snow from Track.—By agreement between the corporation of M. and a tramway company running tram-cars through the streets it was agreed that “the company shall, under instructions from the city, keep their track free from ice and snow”:—Held, that the company were not bound to remove from the streets altogether the snow and ice cleared off the tramway track, and that the words "under instructions from the city" only applied to the extent of the work to be done, not to the particular method to be adopted for doing it. Ogston v. Aberdeen District Tramways Co. (66 L. J. P.C. 1; [1897] A.C. 111) distinguished. Montreal City v. Montreal Street Railway, 72 L. J. P.C. 119; [1903] A.C. 482; 89 L. T. 30—P.C. And see TRAMWAY.

11. TRAFFIC.

(a) Generally.

Extraordinary Traffic—Person by whose Order the Traffic is Conducted.—The appellant Pethick was the contractor for the erection of a lunatic asylum at Charminster, for the Dorset County Council. He entered into a contract with one Trenchard for the haulage of goods, plant, and materials to the works. These were to be delivered as required by Pethick, and either by carts or trucks drawn by traction-engines, but no route was prescribed by which these goods, plant, and materials were to be brought. This delivery caused extraordinary traffic, and the highway was thereby damaged:—Held, that the appellant was not the person by whose order the traffic was conducted within section 23 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, so as to make him liable for the damage done to the highway by such extraordinary traffic. Pethick v. Dorset County Council, 77 L. T. 683—D. Affirmed, 62 J. P. 579—C.A.

— Person "by whose order" Traffic is Conducted.—A purchaser who enters into contracts for the supply of materials to be delivered at a certain price, has no property in the goods until they are delivered, does not employ or pay the persons conveying them, and does not direct or control the mode of carriage or the road by which they are to be carried, is not a person "by whose order" such traffic is conducted within the meaning of section 23 of the Highways and Locomotives Act, 1878, and, such traffic being "extraordinary" in the statutory sense, is not liable for the expenses incurred in repairing the road in consequence of such excessive user. Kent County Council v. Lord Gerard, 66 L. J. Q.B. 677; [1897] A.C. 683—H.L. (E.)

— Hospital Building.—The defendants entered into agreements with two firms of contractors for the erection of a temporary hospital and for the alteration of certain existing buildings so as to adapt them for use as a permanent hospital. The site of both buildings was in the plaintiffs' district, and the works involved the carriage of exceptionally heavy traffic along certain roads in the district:—Held, that the defendants were persons "by or in consequence of whose order" the traffic was conducted within the meaning of section 23 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, as amended by section 12, sub-section 1 (c) of the Locomotives Act, 1898, and were therefore liable for extraordinary expenses incurred by the plaintiffs in repairing the roads. Kent County Council v. Gerard (Lord) (66 L. J. Q.B. 677; [1897] A.C. 683) considered. Epsom Urban Council v. London County Council, 69 L. J. Q.B. 933;

[1900] 2 Q.B. 751; 83 L. T. 284; 64 J. P. 726—Bigham, J.

— House Building.—The defendant, who was building a house in the plaintiffs' district, ordered from a brick company a quantity of bricks to be delivered upon the building land, but gave no instructions as to the mode in which they were to be delivered. The brick company gave an order to a contractor to deliver the bricks by means of a traction-engine and trucks. Damage having been caused to certain roads by the excessive weight of the engine and trucks, an action was brought in the County Court to recover the amount of the expenses of repairing the roads:—Held, that the County Court Judge was not wrong, under the circumstances, in coming to the conclusion that the defendant was not a person "by or in consequence of whose order" the traffic had been conducted within the meaning of section 23 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, as amended by section 12, sub-section 1 (c) of the Locomotives Act, 1898, and that he was therefore not liable. Egham Rural Council v. Gordon, 71 L. J. K.B. 523; [1902] 2 K.B. 120; 87 L. T. 31; 50 W. R. 703; 66 J. P. 759—D.

— Haulage of Timber over Roads—Timber the Natural Produce of Land—Period of Limitation for Recovery of Expenses—"Particular work extending over long period."—The defendants for a period extending over two years bought from the owner of an estate a large quantity of timber which was felled on the estate, and the timber was hauled by the defendants to the railway station over two roads for a distance of between two and three miles on each road, the haulage being done partly by horses and partly by a traction-engine. The quantity of timber so hauled was about 1,500 tons, and the felling and hauling were done under several separate contracts extending over two years. During this period the traffic of the defendants over the roads was unusual traffic, did unusual damage to the roads, and caused unusual expenses in repairing the roads, which were constructed to bear ordinary country traffic, usually agricultural traffic. In an action brought by the highway authority to recover the expenses of repairing the roads, as being "extraordinary expenses" incurred by them in consequence of the "extraordinary traffic" within section 23 of the Highways and Locomotives Act, 1878, the defendants alleged that the timber was the natural produce of the land and that the carting of such produce to the railway station was ordinary traffic and an ordinary user of the road:—Held, that, having regard to the total weight carried, the frequency of the loads, and the means by which it was carried, the traffic was "extraordinary traffic" within the meaning of section 23, and the fact that the timber was the natural produce of the land did not, under the circumstances, prevent the traffic from being "extraordinary," or the expenses from being "extraordinary expenses," which the highway authority were entitled to recover:—Held, further, that the work was not a "particular work extending over a long period" within the meaning of section 12, sub-section 1 (b) of the Locomotives Act, 1898, and that therefore the sub-section did not give the highway authority the right to bring their action for the recovery of the whole of the expenses within six months after the completion of the work, and consequently that by the sub-section their claim was barred for any expenses incurred more than twelve months before the commencement of the action. Norfolk County Council v. Green, 90 L. T. 451; 68 J. P. 223; 2 L. G. R. 652—Walton, J.

— By a contract made between the defendants and A., the latter agreed to make a reservoir in four calendar months, the contract being silent as to the method or route of haulage for any material that might be required. From May 4 to December 30, 1905, A. employed traction-engines with trucks to haul materials from the railway station to the site of the reservoir, a distance of about one and a quarter miles. In an action against the defendants for the extraordinary expenses incurred in repairing the highways alleged to have been damaged by this extraordinary traffic, a witness for the defendants stated that if during the period in question the same weight of material had been carried by carts no damage would have been caused to the roads; and the defendants' engineer, who was also called by the plaintiffs, said that he thought the contractor would have laid a light railway across the fields for the purpose of the haulage of materials. The County Court Judge having held at the close of the plaintiffs' case that there was no evidence of the traffic having been conducted in the way it was in consequence of the defendants' order, stopped the case:—Held, that the County Court Judge was wrong in stopping the case, and that there was a case for the defendants to answer. Reigate Rural Council v. Sutton District Water Co., 71 J. P. 405; 5 L. G. R. 917—D.

— Haulage of Materials for Repairing Roads—Contract for Twelve Months—"Work extending over a long period"—Limitation of Action.—The defendants entered into two contracts for the supply to them of flints and sand for the twelve months from March, 1904, to March, 1905. Under these contracts the contractors, by means of traction engines and waggons, hauled a quantity of flints and sand along a road within the plaintiffs' district in such a way as to constitute extraordinary traffic, and to cause damage to the road. The plaintiffs having brought an action to recover the amount of the expenses incurred by them in repairing the road during the whole period of twelve months,—Held, that the haulage work done under the contracts was not similar to work done under a "particular building contract," and was not "work extending over a long period" within the meaning of section 12, sub-section 1 (b) of the Locomotives Act, 1898, and that the latter part of the sub-section had therefore no application. Held, further, that under the earlier part of the sub-section the plaintiffs were only entitled to recover in respect of so much of damage as was done within the twelve months next before the date of the writ. Bromley Rural Council v. Croydon Corporation, 77 L. J. K.B. 335; [1908] 1 K.B. 353; 98 L. T. 165; 72 J. P. 17; 6 L. G. R. 165; 24 T. L. R. 132—C.A.

— Contributory Negligence of Local Authority—Road out of Repair—Excessive Weight.—While the fact that a local authority have been in default in failing to keep a road in proper repair affords no complete answer to a claim by them to recover under section 23 of the Highways and Locomotives Acts (Amendment) Act, 1878, extraordinary expenses incurred in repairing the road in consequence of extraordinary traffic passing over such road, it is an essential element for consideration in estimating the amount of damage caused by such extraordinary traffic. Hemsworth Rural Council v. Micklethwaite, 68 J. P. 345; 2 L. G. R. 1084—D.

Everything which bears upon the question of whether there has been excessive weight upon a road has to be taken into consideration in such cases—not only the amount of pressure per square inch of the wheels of the particular vehicles, but also the concentration of that weight upon a comparatively small space. Ib.

Per WILLS, J.—In considering whether traffic is extraordinary or not, it is not sufficient to take simply the year to which the question relates and compare other traffic on the road during that year with the traffic complained of; the test is whether the particular traffic has by the usage of trade and of society, and by the varying circumstances applicable to the case, by that time become such as can fairly be called ordinary traffic. Ib.

— Recovery of Expenses—Action Commenced before Repair Effected.—An action under section 23 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, and section 12 of the Locomotives Act, 1898, to recover expenses of highway repairs occasioned by extraordinary traffic or excessive weight, brought before the repairs have been executed, is premature and must be dismissed. Little Hulton Urban Council v. Jackson, 2 L. G. R. 986; 68 J. P. 451—D.

— Limitation of Time—Action against Public Authority.—The Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, s. 1, limiting to six months the period within which an action must be brought does not apply to an action against a public authority to recover the expenses of extraordinary traffic for which the public authority is liable under the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, s. 23, as amended by section 12, sub-section 1 (c) of the Locomotives Act, 1898, where the damage has been done not by the public authority or their servants, but by contractors under a contract to deliver stone to the public authority within their borough in connection with an improvement scheme which is in course of execution by the public authority. Kent County Council v. Folkestone Corporation, 74 L. J. K.B. 352; [1905] 1 K.B. 620; 92 L. T. 309; 53 W. R. 371; 69 J. P. 125; 3 L. G. R. 438; 21 T. L. R. 269—C.A.

The period within which such an action must be brought is, by the Locomotives Act, 1898, s. 12, sub-s. 1 (b), twelve months from the date when the damage was done, or six months from the completion of the work under the contract by the contractors to deliver the stone (whichever period is longer), but not six months from the completion of the entire improvement scheme. Ib.

— — — Contract to Lay Water Pipes—Maintenance Clause—“Building contract”—“Work extending over a long period.”—Section 12, sub-section 1 (b) of the Locomotives Act, 1898, requires proceedings for the recovery of expenses of extraordinary traffic to be commenced within twelve months of the time at which the damage has been done, or, where the damage is the consequence of any particular building contract, or work extending over a long period, not later than six months after the completion of the contract or work. That means that the time begins to run, in the case of a building contract, from the completion of that contract so far as relates to the work causing the damage, and, in the case of work extending over a long period, from the completion of the work causing the damage. Lancaster Rural Council v. Fisher, 76 L. J. K.B. 1070; [1907] 2 K.B. 516; 97 L. T. 560; 71 J. P. 401; 5 L. G. R. 1223; 23 T. L. R. 614—C.A.

Where, therefore, an action was, on May 20, 1905, commenced by the road authority to recover expenses incurred by them in repairing certain high roads by reason of the damage caused by extraordinary traffic thereon, such traffic being the haulage of water pipes by the defendants under a contract dated May 26, 1902, with the Manchester Corporation, which contained a maintenance clause under which the entire work was to be at the risk of the defendants for twelve months after the completion of the work, and the greater part of the damage had occurred prior to May 20, 1904, and the haulage had ended in August, 1904, the entire work being completed on October 31, 1904,—Held, without deciding whether the contract was a building contract within section 12, sub-section 1 (b) of the Locomotives Act, 1898, or whether the work was work extending over a long period within that section, that in either case the six months had expired, and that the defendants were not liable for such damage as had been occasioned before May 20, 1904. Ib.

— — — Motor Cars—Jurisdiction of County Court.—Section 17, sub-section 2 of the Locomotives Act, 1898, which enacts that nothing in that Act shall affect light locomotives within the meaning of the Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896, does not prevent the provisions in section 12 of that Act rendering expenses of highway repair occasioned by damage due to extraordinary traffic recoverable by action, instead of by summary procedure, from applying in cases where the vehicles causing the damage are light locomotives. Rex v. Bath County Court Judge, 77 L. J. K.B. 402; 6 L. G. R. 160; 72 J. P. 67—D.

— — — Inspection of Highway Authority's Books.—The defendant in an action brought by a highway authority to recover expenses in respect of extraordinary traffic upon a particular highway is not entitled to inspect the books of the highway authority to ascertain the amounts expended upon other highways; he is entitled to inspection of the highway authority's books in reference to the highway in question in the action, but he is not entitled to have such inspection made by an engineer. Bromley Rural Council v. Chittenden, 70 J. P. 409; 4 L. G. R. 967—C.A.

By-law — Lighting of Vehicles — Responsibility of Owner for Omission of Servant—Reasonableness.—H. was convicted under a by-law which provided that, during the period between one hour after sunset and one hour before sunrise, the owner of every vehicle which should be driven, or be, upon any street or public place should cause to be attached to such vehicle a lamp or lamps, so constructed and placed, and lighted, and kept lighted, as to exhibit an uncoloured light in the direction in which the vehicle was proceeding, and afford adequate means of signalling the approach or position of such vehicle. At the time in question H.'s vehicle was in charge of his servant:—Held (Gibson, J., dissentiente), that the by-law was not void for making a master liable to be convicted in respect of the quasi-criminal omission of his servant, or for unreasonableness, and that H. was rightly convicted. Heiton v. M'Sweeney, [1905] 2 Ir. R. 47—K.B. D. And see MAINTENANCE AND REPAIR, col. 2733.

(b) Locomotives.

Locomotives.—61 & 62 Vict. c. 29 is the Locomotives Act, 1898.

Traction-engine and Trucks—Damage to Highway—Neglect of Local Authority to Maintain Road—Nuisance—Injunction.—The defendant was in the habit of driving a traction-engine and trucks laden with stone from quarries in the vicinity over a main road repairable by the county council. The road became very rough, muddy and inconvenient for traffic. The immediate causes of this condition of the road were the defendant's traction traffic, the haulage of stone by carts and horses, the ordinary traffic, and the wetness of the weather; but the primary and chief cause was the failure of the county council to maintain the road in a fit state to bear the traffic, including the traction traffic, which was not more unusual than they ought to have expected to come upon it. The Attorney-General and the county council brought an action against the defendant claiming a perpetual injunction to restrain him from conducting any traffic upon the road in such a way as by damage thereto or obstruction thereof to cause a public nuisance:—Held, that the claim could not be maintained. Att.-Gen. v. Scott (No. 2), 74 L. J. K.B. 803; [1905] 2 K.B. 160; 93 L. T. 249; 69 J. P. 109; 3 L. G. R. 272; 21 T. L. R. 211—C.A.

Traction-engine — Damage to Pipes under Highway.—The defendant's traction-engine whilst being driven along a street injured the water and sewer pipes of the plaintiff authority laid beneath the street. The engine was properly constructed, and there was no negligence in its management. The pipes were at a depth beneath the street sufficient to protect them from injury by ordinary traffic, but not sufficient to protect them from injury by the traction-engine:—Held, that the defendant was liable upon the ground that a traction-engine was exceptionally calculated to inflict such damage, and injury had resulted from its use that would not have resulted from ordinary traffic, and that the Locomotive Acts did not restrict the defendant's liability. Armagh Union v. Bell, [1900] 2 Ir. R. 371—C.A.

Water Mains under Highway—Main Broken by Traction-engine — Excessive Weight of Engine—Road Authority also Owners of Water Mains.]—A traction-engine, which weighed ten tons and upwards, in passing through a street broke one of the water mains laid under the street. The water mains, which were the property of the plaintiffs, in whom also as the road authority was vested the duty of maintaining the roads, were sufficiently strong and well laid to withstand the pressure of the ordinary traffic of the district. There was no negligence or want of skill or care on the part of the owner of the traction-engine or his servants as regards either the construction or user of the engine; nor was there any neglect or default by the plaintiffs in their duty as road authority. The County Court Judge found that the engine by reason of its weight was likely to cause damage to pipes laid as the main in question was constructed and laid, and he held that the damage was in fact caused simply by the great weight of the engine:—Held, that, on these facts, the County Court Judge was entitled so to hold, and that the owner of the traction-engine was liable for the damage caused to the water main. Gas Light and Coke Co. v. St. Mary Abbott's Vestry (54 L. J. Q.B. 414; 15 Q.B. D. 1) and Att.-Gen. v. Scott (74 L. J. K.B. 803; [1905] 2 K.B. 160) considered. Chichester Corporation v. Foster, 75 L. J. K.B. 33; [1906] 1 K.B. 167; 93 L. T. 750; 54 W.R. 199; 70 J. P. 73; 4 L. G. R. 205; 22 T. L. R. 18—D.

Damage Caused to Highway—Public Nuisance — Injunction.]—The common-law liability of a person using a locomotive upon a highway to abstain from using it in such a manner as to create a public nuisance upon the highway, which is preserved in terms by section 13 of the Locomotive Act, 1861, still exists, and has not been destroyed nor affected by the provisions of the Highways and Locomotives Amendment Act, 1878, which gives county councils power to recover the expenses caused by extraordinary traffic, nor by the provisions of the Locomotives Act, 1898, which enables county councils to make by-laws prohibiting or restricting the use of locomotives upon highways. Att.-Gen. v. Scott (No. 1), 73 L. J. K.B. 196; [1904] 1 K.B. 404; 89 L. T. 726; 68 J. P. 137; 2 L. G. R. 461—C.A.

In an action by the Attorney-General, on the relation of a highway authority, for an injunction to restrain the defendant from using a locomotive upon a highway, so as by damage of the highway to cause a public nuisance, it is no defence that the nuisance was caused by the neglect of the highway authority to fulfil their statutory duty to keep the highway in repair, since the defendant should have availed himself of the provisions of the law enabling him to compel the highway authority to perform their duty. Ib.

Conformity with the provisions and regulations made in and under the Locomotive Acts is not a defence to such an action. Ib.

Excessive Speed—Motor Car driven to Common Danger of Passengers.]—To convict the driver of a motor car of the offence of driving it at an excessive speed "to the common danger of passengers" on a highway, contrary to Article IV. section 1 of the Light Locomotives on Highways Order, 1896, it is not necessary to prove that there were passengers on the highway. Mayhew v. Sutton, 71 L. J. K.B. 46; 86 L. T. 13; 50 W. R. 216; 20 Cox C.C. 146—D. And see cols. 2729–2732.

Light Locomotive — Excessive Speed.]—Article 4 (1) of the Light Locomotives on Highways Order 1896, provides that a person driving or in charge of a light locomotive when used on a highway shall "not drive the light locomotive at any speed greater than is reasonable and proper, having regard to the traffic on the highway":—Held, that in order to constitute an offence under this article it is not necessary to prove that any vehicle or person was interrupted, interfered with, incommoded, or affected by the speed at which the light locomotive was being driven. Smith v. Boon, 84 L. T. 593; 49 W. R. 480; 65 J. P. 486—D.

Interference with Vehicle or Person.]—Article 4 (1) of the Light Locomotives on Highways Order, 1896, provides that a person driving or in charge of a light locomotive when used on a highway shall "not drive the light locomotive at any speed greater than is reasonable and proper, having regard to the traffic on the highway":—Held, that in order to constitute an offence under this article it is not necessary to prove that any vehicle or person was interrupted, interfered with, incommoded, or affected by the speed at which the light locomotive was being driven. Smith v. Boon, 84 L. T. 593; 49 W. R. 480; 65 J. P. 486; 19 Cox C.C. 698—D.

Spikes on Driving-wheel of Road Locomotive.]—The driving-wheels of a road locomotive had diagonal cross-bars of not less than three inches in width or more than three-quarters of an inch in thickness. In these cross-bars holes were drilled, into which metal spikes could be fixed, and in frosty weather spikes were fixed into the holes to prevent the wheels from slipping. The spikes, when fixed, projected two inches from the cross-bars, and the effect of using the spikes was to damage the road:—Held, that the use of such spikes in the manner stated was a contravention of section 3, sub-section 4 of the Locomotives Amendment (Scotland) Act, 1878, which corresponds to section 28, sub-section 4 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878. Milne v. MacLennan, 4 F. (Just. Cas.) 79—Ct. of Justy.

User of Locomotive or Steam-Roller—Licence from County Council.]—A steam-roller crossing one county to perform work in another is, whilst passing over highways in its journey, being "used" within the meaning of section 32 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, and requires a licence in cases in which the county authority have made by-laws rendering a licence necessary. London County Council v. Wood, 66 L. J. Q.B. 712; [1897] 2 Q.B. 482; 77 L. T. 812; 46 W. R. 143; 61 J. P. 567; 18 Cox C.C. 639—D.

Regulation Made under Statutory Powers—Direction that Regulation be Laid before Parliament—Effect of Non-compliance with Direction.]—In a prosecution for a contravention of a regulation made by the Secretary of State for Scotland (in England, by the Local Government Board) under section 6 of the Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896, it is not incumbent on the prosecution to prove that the regulation has been laid before Parliament as required by sub-section 2 of that section. A prosecution is competent even if the regulation has not been laid before Parliament, in respect that the enactment does not import that presentation to Parliament is a condition precedent of the regulation coming into force. Hepburn v. Wilson, 4 F. (Just. Cas.), 18—Ct. of Justy.

Speed Limit in Royal Park.—By rule 4 of the Statutory Rules and Orders, 1904, No. 979: "Cars propelled or drawn by mechanical means shall only be admitted [into Royal parks] subject to such regulations as may from time to time be passed by the Commissioners of his Majesty's Works and Public Buildings, and published by notice exhibited in the parks." These rules were made under the Parks Regulation Act, 1872, and were duly laid before Parliament. The Commissioners published a notice, which was posted at the park gates, that no car propelled or drawn by mechanical means was to be allowed to proceed at a greater pace than ten miles per hour. This notice was not laid before Parliament:—Held, that the regulation contained in the notice was good. Musgrave v. Kennison, 92 L. T. 865; 3 L. G. R. 982; 69 J. P. 341; 20 Cox C.C. 874; 21 T. L. R. 600—D.

Offence against Park Regulations—Conviction—Indorsement of Licence.—The offence of exceeding the speed limit for motor cars in Royal parks, fixed under the regulations made under the Parks Regulation Act, 1872, stands in exactly the same position as regards indorsement of the conviction, under the Motor Car Act, 1903, upon the driver's licence, as a conviction for exceeding the speed limit under the Motor Car Act, 1903. Therefore, where a person is convicted of a first offence of driving a motor car in St. James's Park at a speed exceeding that fixed by the park regulations—namely, ten miles an hour—his licence cannot be indorsed, as he comes within the exception in section 4 of the Motor Car Act, 1903. Rex v. Marsham; Chamberlain, Ex parte, 76 L. J. K.B. 1036; [1907] 2 K.B. 638; 97 L. T. 396; 71 J. P. 445; 5 L. G. R. 998; 23 T. L. R. 629—D.

Excessive Speed—"Opinion of one witness"—Stop-watch.—A police sergeant stationed a police constable at a point upon a road a quarter of a mile distant from him. A motor car passed the point at which the constable was stationed, and the latter immediately gave a signal to the sergeant, who at once started a stop-watch which he had, and when the car passed the spot where he was he stopped the watch, and he found that the car had travelled the quarter of a mile in 31½ seconds, or at the rate of twenty-eight miles an hour. Upon an information charging the motor-car driver with exceeding the legal limit of speed, the stop-watch was produced in Court and not objected to, and the police sergeant alone gave evidence to the above effect. The driver was convicted:—Held, that this evidence was not merely the "opinion" of one witness as to the rate of speed within the meaning of section 9, sub-section 1 of the Motor Car Act, 1903, but was evidence of fact—namely, the time taken by the stop-watch in which the car covered the distance. Planey v. Marks, 94 L. T. 577; 4 L. G. R. 503; 70 J. P. 216; 21 Cox C.C. 157; 22 T. L. R. 432—D.

Driver—Evidence of Identity—Notice of Intended Prosecution—Sufficiency of.—The defendant was convicted under section 9, sub-section 1 of the Motor Car Act, 1903, of having driven a motor car at a speed exceeding the legal limit of twenty miles an hour. The evidence was to the effect that two constables were stationed at the seventh milestone and two other constables at the third milestone from St. Albans, at which latter milestone the car was stopped, which the defendant was then driving, the chauffeur sitting beside him. The defendant held a licence for driving. The car traversed the distance between the two milestones at the rate of twenty-eight miles an hour. The defendant did not give evidence:—Held, that there was evidence that the defendant had driven the car over the whole distance as alleged upon which the Justices could convict him. The notice under section 9, sub-section 2 of the Act, of the intended prosecution, alleged the offence to have been committed between Markyate and St. Albans, two places which were between ten and twenty miles apart. Held, that, as the defendant was not misled by it, the notice was valid. Beresford v. St. Albans (Justices), 22 T. L. R. 1—D.

Information for Driving "in a manner dangerous to the public"—Evidence of Excessive Speed.—Upon the hearing of an information under section 1, sub-section 1 of the Motor Car Act, 1903, against the driver of a motor car for having driven the motor-car on a public highway "in a manner which was dangerous to the public," evidence of the speed at which the motor car was driven is admissible and may be taken into consideration by the Justices, although the sub-section makes it a separate and distinct offence for a person to drive a motor car on a public highway "at a speed which is dangerous to the public." Rex v. Wells (91 L. T. 98) explained and distinguished. Hargreaves v. Baldwin, 93 L. T. 311; 69 J. P. 397; 3 L. G. R. 973; 21 T. L. R. 715—D.

Reckless Driving—Evidence of Offence.—A collector of tolls at a bridge who was rightly or wrongly endeavouring to obtain payment of toll from the driver of a motor car, after being warned to stand clear of the car, took hold of the car while in motion, and after being carried along hanging on to the car for some little time, during which he asked the driver to stop, let go the car, fell, and was injured:—Held, that these facts constituted no evidence of reckless driving on the part of the driver within section 1, sub-section 1 of the Motor Car Act, 1903. Per KENNEDY, J.—The sub-section does not strike at driving which is reckless as regards passengers in the car, but at driving which is reckless as regards the public. Troughton v. Manning, 92 L. T. 855; 53 W. R. 493; 69 J. P. 207; 3 L. G. R. 548; 21 T. L. R. 408; 20 Cox C.C. 861—D.

— Conviction for Driving at, "having regard to all the circumstances of the case"—Appeal to Quarter Sessions—Evidence as to Traffic Usually on Road—Admissibility.—The appellant was convicted under section 1, sub-section 4 of the Motor Car Act, 1903, for having driven a motor car on a certain highway at a speed which was dangerous to the public, "having regard to all the circumstances of the case":—Held, that at the hearing of an appeal to quarter sessions from such conviction evidence was properly admitted as to the traffic that might reasonably be expected to be on the highway in question. Elwes v. Hopkins, 75 L. J. K.B. 450; [1906] 2 K.B. 1; 94 L. T. 547; 70 J. P. 262; 4 L. G. R. 615; 21 Cox C.C. 133—D.

Refusal by Owner of Motor Car to Give Driver's Name or Address—Conviction of Owner—Omission of Allegation that Driver had Committed an Offence.—The conviction of the owner of a motor car under section 1, sub-section 3 of the Motor Car Act, 1903, for refusing to give the name or address of the driver of the car, must allege in terms that an offence has been committed by the driver. It is not, however, a condition precedent to the conviction of the owner under the sub-section that the driver should first have been asked, and should have refused to give, his name or address, or have given a false name or address. Rex v. Hankey, 74 L. J. K.B. 922; [1905] 2 K.B. 687; 93 L. T. 107; 54 W. R. 80; 69 J. P. 219; 3 L. G. R. 554; 21 T. L. R. 409; 21 Cox C.C. 1—D. S.P. Rex v. Chancellor, 69 J. P. 888; 3 L. G. R. 1012—D.

Driving Motor Bicycle at Speed Dangerous to Public—No Evidence of Actual Traffic.—The defendant was convicted under section 1 of the Motor Car Act, 1903, for having driven a motor bicycle recklessly and at a speed dangerous to the public on the highway in the middle of the day. No evidence was given as to the actual state of traffic at the time. The conviction stated that the defendant was convicted for that he "at Stephen's Green, East, . . . did drive a motor bicycle on the public highway at a speed dangerous to the public, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, including the nature, condition, and use of the highway, and to the amount of traffic which actually was at the time, or which might reasonably be expected to be, on the said highway":—Held, that the conviction was good in form, and that it was not necessary that it should appear on its face whether the circumstances taken into consideration by the magistrate were the amount of the traffic which was actually at the time on the highway, or the amount which might reasonably be expected to be there. Rex v. Dublin Justices, [1904] 2 Ir. R. 698—K.B. D.

Aiding and Abetting.—See CRIMINAL LAW, col. 648.

Smoke Nuisance—Smoke Caused by Excess of Lubricating Oil—Omnibus under Five Tons—Exemption.—A motor omnibus, not exceeding five tons in weight, which was driven by petrol, emitted quantities of blue-coloured smoke while being driven on a highway. The engine of the omnibus was a smokeless engine, and the smoke emitted was not made by the locomotive engine of the omnibus, but was caused through the negligence of the driver in supplying an excessive quantity of lubricating oil to the working parts of the machinery of the omnibus. The owner of the omnibus was charged with having unlawfully used on the highway a motor omnibus which did not consume, so far as practicable, its own smoke, contrary to the provisions of section 30 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878:—Held, that, as the omnibus was so constructed that no smoke or visible vapour could be emitted therefrom except by reason of the driver's negligence, section 1 of the Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896, applied so as to exempt it from the provisions of section 30 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878; and further that, even if section 30 of the Act of 1878 applied, that section did not apply to the mere putting of too much lubricating oil into the working part of the machinery of a properly constructed engine which consumed its own smoke. Star Omnibus Co. v. Tagg, 97 L. T. 481; 71 J. P. 352; 5 L. G. R. 808; 23 T. L. R. 488—D.

— Carelessness of Driver.—The owner of a motor car was convicted for having used, on a certain highway, his motor car, which did not consume so far as practicable its own smoke, contrary to the provisions of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878. The motor car was one which came within section 1 of the Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896. It appeared that, owing to the negligence of the driver of the motor car, smoke issued from it for a few moments:—Held, that, as the emission of smoke was due to a temporary cause, no offence had been committed. Rex v. Wilbraham; Rowcliffe, Ex parte, 96 L. T. 712; 5 L. G. R. 764; 71 J. P. 386—D.

Appeal to Quarter Sessions—Sum Adjudged to be Paid—Fine and Costs.—A person who is adjudged to pay a fine under the Motor Car Act, 1903, has under section 11, sub-section 2 of the Act the right to appeal where the fine, taken by itself, exceeds 20s., but any costs which he may be ordered to pay cannot be taken into consideration in calculating the amount of the fine for the purpose of ascertaining whether he has the right to appeal. *Rex v. (d) Cyclists.

Bicyclist Travelling at Night without Lamp—Arrest by Police Constable—Assault.—The powers given under section 78 of the Highway Act, 1835, to apprehend without warrant drivers of carriages offending against that Act, are not incorporated in section 85 of the Local Government Act, 1888, which declares bicycles to be carriages within the Highway Acts, and a police constable cannot arrest a bicyclist who commits the offence under section 85 of riding at night without a lighted lamp, and who refuses to stop when called upon. Hatton v. Treeby, 66 L. J. Q.B. 729; [1897] 2 Q.B. 452; 77 L. T. 309; 46 W. R. 6; 61 J. P. 586; 18 Cox C.C. 633—D.

12. MAINTENANCE AND REPAIR.

Failure to Clean out Ditch on Highway—Misfeasance or Nonfeasance.—The non-cleaning out of a ditch by the side of a highway is nonfeasance and not misfeasance. Irving v. Carlisle Rural Council, 71 J. P. 212; 5 L. G. R. 776—D.

Liability to Repair Ratione Tenuræ—Repairs Effected by District Council—Recovery of Sums Expended.—The remedy for the recovery of the expenses of placing in repair a highway repairable ratione tenuræ from "the person liable to repair," afforded to district councils by section 25, sub-section 2 of the Local Government Act, 1894, is confined to the occupier of the land chargeable with the obligation, and creates no liability in the owner of such land to repay sums so expended. Cuckfield District Council v. Goring, 67 L. J. Q.B. 539; [1898] 1 Q.B. 865; 73 L. T. 530; 46 W. R. 541; 62 J. P. 358—D.

Exemption from Highway Rates.—The fact that a person is liable to repair a highway ratione tenuræ is not by itself sufficient to entitle him to the exemption from the payment of highway rates given by section 33 of the Highway Act, 1835. To entitle him to the benefit conferred by that section there must also be evidence of the non-payment of rates or other circumstances to shew exemption. Ferrand v. Bingley Urban Council, 72 L. J. K.B. 734; [1903] 2 K.B. 445; 89 L. T. 333; 52 W. R. 77; 67 J. P. 370; 1 L. G. R. 845—D.

— Where the occupier of land liable ratione tenuræ for the repair and maintenance of a highway is legally exempt from the payment of highway rates under section 33 of the Highway Act, 1835, and the provisions of section 35 of the Highway Act, 1862, are put in force, and the highway converted into a parish highway, such occupier on payment of the composition provided for in that section is discharged from all liability in respect of the payment of highway rates for the repair and maintenance of highways generally in the parish. Dalton Overseers v. North-Eastern Railway, 69 L. J. Q.B. 650; [1900] A. C. 345; 82 L. T. 693; 64 J. P. 612—H.L. (E.)

Estoppel—Res Judicata.—An occupier of lands formerly liable for the repair of a certain highway, and on that ground exempt from highway rates, paid the composition provided for in section 35 of the Highway Act, 1862, on the conversion of the highway into a parish highway. He was subsequently rated in respect of his lands for the repair of the highways in his parish. He appealed to quarter sessions on the ground that he was exempt from all contributions towards the repair of the highways, and the rate was quashed:—Held, that on an appeal against a subsequent rate made for the same purpose against the same occupier in respect of the same lands, the rating authority was not estopped from denying that the occupier was entitled to the exemption which he claimed. S.C. C.A. 67 L. J. Q.B. 715; [1898] 2 Q.B. 66; 78 L. T. 524.

Highway rates have not ceased to exist since the passing of the Local Government Act, 1894, ss. 25 and 29. Ib.

Main Road—Paved Footways in Urban District—Contribution by County Council.—Where under section 11 of the Local Government Act, 1888, an urban authority undertake the maintenance and repair of the main roads within their district, the liability of the county council of the county to contribute to the costs of such maintenance and repair includes the costs of the maintenance and repair of paved footways at the side of disturnpiked roads, which were constituted main roads by section 13 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878. In re Warminster Local Board and Wilts County Council (59 L. J. Q.B. 434; 25 Q.B. D. 450) approved. In re Burslem Corporation and Staffordshire County Council, 65 L. J. Q.B. 1; [1896] 1 Q.B. 24—C.A.

Liability of Non-Occupying Owner of Lands.—Section 25, sub-section 2 of the Local Government Act, 1894, which gives a district council power to recover the expenses of placing a highway repairable ratione tenuræ in proper repair from the person liable to repair it, makes an alteration in procedure only, and makes no alteration in the onus of direct liability as it previously existed. The expenses, therefore, of placing such a highway in proper repair cannot be recovered from an owner of land who is not in occupation thereof. Daventry District Council v. Parker, 69 L. J. Q.B. 105; [1900] 1 Q.B. 1; 81 L. T. 403; 48 W. R. 68; 63 J. P. 708—C.A.

Inclosure of Ancient and Substitution of New Highway—Inquisition ad quod Damnum—Licence of Crown—Legal Origin of Obligation to Repair.—In 1773, upon the taking of an inquisition ad quod damnum, it was found that it would not be to the damage or prejudice of the King if licence were granted to the owner of a certain estate to inclose and stop up a highway for carts, carriages, and foot-passengers, if such owner did in his own lands set out in place of it another highway to be for ever thereafter kept in good and sufficient repair by him, his heirs and assigns:—Held, that a grant from the Crown may be a legal origin of an obligation to repair ratione tenuræ, and that the grant of a licence by the Crown in the terms of the inquisition of 1773 was sufficient to create such an obligation, apart from prescription and apart from the fact that the existing highway had been set out within legal memory. Further, that the present owner and occupier of the mansion and of part of the estate, being an assign of the owner referred to in the inquisition, was by reason of his tenure liable under section 25, sub-section 2 of the Local Government Act, 1894, to repay to a district council the expenses incurred in placing the existing highway in proper repair. Esher and Dittons Urban Council v. Marks, 71 L. J. K.B. 309; 86 L. T. 222; 50 W. R. 330; 66 J. P. 243—Walton, J.

Highway Repairable by Inhabitants—Substitution—Width not Specified in Indictment—Liability of Highway Authority.]—In 1891, by an order of quarter sessions, a highway was stopped and a new road substituted for it, which was made by the owner, at whose instance the change was made. The certificate stated that the new road was 12 yards wide, but in fact it was 1½ yards or 15 yards wide. The new road having got into bad repair, an order was made under section 10 of the Highways and Locomotives Act, 1878, on the defendants, and an indictment was preferred. After the order the defendants served notices on the frontagers under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875. The width of the road was not specified in the indictment, and the jury found that the old road was a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large before 1835:—Held, that judgment was rightly entered for the Crown. Rea v. Crompton Urban Council, 86 L. T. 762; 66 J. P. 566; 20 Cox C.C. 243—D.

Statutory Liability to Repair—Injury Occasioned by Nonfeasance.]—In construing an Act of Parliament which transfers to a public body the common-law obligations of the inhabitants at large to repair highways, there is a prima facie presumption that the Legislature did not by such a transfer intend to impose any greater obligation on the public body than that which existed on the inhabitants at large before such transfer. Maguire v. Liverpool Corporation, 74 L. J. K.B. 369; [1905] 1 K.B. 767; 92 L. T. 374; 53 W. R. 449; 69 J. P. 153; 3 L. G. R. 485; 21 T. L. R. 278—C.A.

By the Liverpool Improvement Act, 1846, s. 36, the corporation were constituted surveyors of highways within the borough, with similar powers and liabilities. By section 37 the management and control, and the pavements and materials, were vested in the corporation. By section 38 the corporation were to pave and keep in repair streets within the borough, and by section 58 the corporation were liable to be indicted at common law for the want of repair of any public highway within the borough in the same manner as any person or persons liable to the repair of such highways was or were before the passing of the Act. Owing to the non-repair of a public highway the plaintiff's horse was injured:—Held, that no action for damages lay by the plaintiff against the corporation. Ib.

Hartnall v. Ryde Commissioners (33 L. J. Q.B. 39; 4 B. & S. 361), if and so far as it lays down any general principle applicable to Acts of Parliament of this nature, is to be treated as overruled by Cowley v. Newmarket Local Board (62 L. J. Q.B. 65; [1892] A.C. 345). Ib.

Non-repair—Accident Due to Condition of Highway—Liability of Highway Authority.]—A highway which the highway authority had paved two years before became dangerous owing to the oozing up through the pavement, in exceptionally hot weather, of pitch from a composition on which the pavement was laid, and owing to the condition of the road an accident occurred resulting in damage to the plaintiff. There was evidence of negligence on the part of the highway authority in failing to restore the road to a safe condition after the pitch had oozed up, but no evidence, unless the fact that the pitch had oozed up afforded such evidence, of negligence on their part in the original paving of the highway:—Held, that there was no evidence of misfeasance as distinguished from nonfeasance on the part of the highway authority, and that they were consequently not liable in damages to the plaintiff. Shoreditch Borough Council v. Bull (2 L. G. R. 756) distinguished. Holloway v. Birmingham Corporation, 3 L. G. R. 878; 69 J. P. 358—D.

Footbridge—Right of Member of Public to Erect New Bridge—Trespass—Nuisance—Abatement.]—A person who is merely entitled as one of the public to use a highway has no right to enter on the plaintiff's land and construct on it a permanent footbridge because an old footbridge forming part of the highway has been allowed to decay and disappear. Such acts amount to a trespass, and do not fall within the doctrine of abating a nuisance. Campbell-Davys v. Lloyd, 70 L. J. Ch. 714; [1901] 2 Ch. 518; 85 L. T. 59; 49 W. R. 710—C.A.

“Driftway, or private carriage or occupation road”—Owners or Occupiers of Road—Person having Right of Way—Order for Maintenance of Road by Parish.]—A person who has a mere right of way over a driftway, or private carriage or occupation road, is not an “occupier” thereof within the meaning of section 36 of the Highway Act, 1862; his consent in writing is therefore not necessary before the Justices can make an order under the section declaring such a road to be a public highway repairable at the expense of the parish. Rea v. Somers; General Estates Co., Ex parte, 75 L. J. K.B. 144; [1906] 1 K.B. 326; 94 L. T. 194; 54 W. R. 402; 70 J. P. 37; 4 L. G. R. 161; 22 T. L. R. 137—D.

Fence between Highway Subject to Flood and Adjoining Ditch—Removal by District Council.]—A highway authority erected a fence between a part of a highway subject to flood and a ditch situate alongside. Twenty-two years afterwards the surveyor of the district council then having the management of the highway reported that the fence was in bad repair and not needed except a little at each end, and the council ordered the work recommended by the surveyor to be done. The fence was thereupon removed, it being the intention of the surveyor to erect a short fence at each end and guiding posts between. Three weeks after the removal of the fence, and before the guiding posts had been erected, the highway was flooded, and a person driving along it got into the ditch and was drowned. In an action by his widow to recover damages in respect of his death the jury found for the plaintiff, upon a direction that they ought to do so if the removal of the fence in the manner and circumstances in which it was done was an act which persons reasonably careful that other persons should not suffer damage from their contemplated act would not have done. Judgment having been entered for the plaintiff, —Held, that judgment was rightly entered, as the finding of the jury amounted to a finding that there had been an act of misfeasance on the part of the district council, and there was evidence to justify the finding. Whyler v. Bingham Rural Council, 70 L. J. K.B. 207; [1901] 1 K.B. 45; 83 L. T. 652; 64 J. P. 771—C.A.

Isle of Wight—Maintenance of Roads in—Dispute—Arbitration.]—In section 12, sub-section 2 of the Local Government Act, 1888 (which relates to the repair and maintenance of roads in the Isle of Wight), the words "arbitration under this Act" mean arbitration under section 62, and do not apply to arbitration under section 11, sub-section 4. This latter section deals with particular disputes arising in a particular way. Isle of Wight Rural Council and Isle of Wight County Council, In re, 65 J. P. 87—D.

Subsidence through Working Mines—Measure of Damages—Cost of Restoring Highway to Original Level.]—A highway was vested in the plaintiffs as the urban authority under section 149 of the Public Health Act, 1875. The defendants were owners of mines under the highway. By section 27 of the Highways and Locomotives Act, 1878, the defendants had the right of working and getting the mines, but so, nevertheless, that in such working and getting no damage should be done to the highway. In the course of working and getting their mines they caused a substantial subsidence in the soil of the highway. In an action brought by the plaintiffs to recover damages from the defendants in respect of the subsidence,—Held, that the measure of damages was the cost of restoring the highway to its original level. Wednesbury Corporation v. Lodge Holes Colliery Co., 76 L. J. K.B. 68; [1907] 1 K.B. 78; 95 L. T. 815; 71 J. P. 73; 5 L. G. R. 43; 23 T. L. R. 80—C.A.

Subsidence of Highway—Liability of Sanitary Authority.]—See LOCAL GOVERNMENT, col. 1366.

Sea Wall—Esplanade—Works Necessary for Protection of Road—Annual Payment.]—A local authority under an obligation to keep up a road is chargeable with the cost of works necessary for the preservation of the road, even though they may not actually form part of it, such as a sea wall and groynes necessary to prevent a road running along the sea shore from being periodically injured by inroads of the sea. The fact that a footpath along the top of such sea wall is, besides being part of the highway, used as a promenade or esplanade for the purposes of pleasure, does not affect the liability to repair. The words "annual payment towards the costs of maintenance and repair" in section 11, sub-section 2 of the Local Government Act, 1888, means a payment to be made annually in respect of the expenditure of the particular year, not a fixed sum to be arrived at by taking the average expenditure over a series of years. Sandgate Urban Council v. Kent County Council, 79 L. T. 425—H.L. (E.)

Tarmac Paving—Money Spent on—Motor-car Trials—Bona Fide Exercise of Statutory Powers—Ultra Vires.]—The Court refused to order a writ of certiorari to issue to bring up and quash a resolution of the Corporation of Brighton for the payment of certain sums of money for paving a road in the borough with tarmac, the expenditure not having been incurred solely for the purpose of enabling the motor-car speed-trials of the Automobile Club to be held on the road, but having been incurred in good faith for the purpose of improving the road for the benefit of the inhabitants of the borough, though the occasion of the alteration of the surface of the road was the meeting of the club. Rea v. Brighton Corporation, 96 L. T. 762; 5 L. G. R. 584; 71 J. P. 265; 23 T. L. R. 440—C.A.

Stile—Non-repair of.]—The fact that a person has done repairs to a way may be some evidence of liability to repair the way ratione tenurae. Where, however, a person and his predecessors in title have done slight repairs to a stile upon an immemorial public highway running through a farm of which such person is the yearly tenant, but there is no evidence that the parish has ever repaired or has ever required such person or any prior occupier to repair, and it is quite consistent with such small repairs as have been done by such person that they were done by him for his own benefit, there is no sufficient evidence of liability of such person to repair the stile ratione tenurae. It is not as if the repairs had been done outside such person's own land, or as if he had done the repairs under threat of legal proceedings, or had admitted that in doing them he was discharging a legal obligation. Rundle v. Hearle, 67 L. J. Q.B. 741; [1898] 2 Q.B. 83; 78 L. T. 561; 46 W.R. 619—D.

It is doubtful whether an action will lie at the instance of a private person against one liable ratione tenurae to repair. Id.

Footways Repairable by Frontagers—Effect of General on Previous Special Act.]—Section 11 of the Local Government Act, 1888, which casts the entire maintenance of main roads upon the county council, does not repeal section 53 of the Huddersfield Improvement Act, 1871, which empowers the corporation to call upon frontagers to make and repair footways. Ashton-under-Lyne Corporation v. Pugh (67 L. J. Q.B. 32) followed. Lodge v. Huddersfield Corporation (No. 1), 67 L. J. Q.B. 568; [1898] 1 Q.B. 847; 78 L. T. 422; 62 J. P. 387—D. Affirmed on facts, 67 L. J. Q.B. 571; [1898] 1 Q.B. 859; 62 J. P. 515—C.A.

Retaining Walls—Liability to Repair—County Council.]—A County Council is not, by virtue of the Local Government Act, 1888, under any direct liability to repair retaining walls by the side of a main road. Att.-Gen. v. Staffordshire County Council, 74 L. J. Ch. 153; [1905] 1 Ch. 386; 92 L. T. 288; 53 W. R. 312; 69 J. P. 97; 3 L. G. R. 379; 21 T. L. R. 139—Joyce, J.

The liability of a road authority to repair a highway, whether at common law or by statute, is general; and the Court will not, either by declaration or mandatory order or otherwise, prescribe what particular works or repairs are necessary, or whether any particular work or repairs be necessary for the maintenance of the road. Quare, whether there be any legal liability to repair a highway upon any one other than the inhabitants of the parish. Id.

Surface of Road—Obligation of Company to Keep in Good Condition—Structural Repair—Neglect of Duty—Damages for Accident.]—The obligation of a tramway company under section 28 of the Tramways Act, 1870, to keep in good condition and repair, to the satisfaction of the road authority, so much of the roadway as is in the Act defined, involves the duty, by temporary expedients or permanent work, of providing against temporary and recurrent sources of danger to traffic; and failure to discharge this obligation will make the company liable in damages to any person injured by such neglect. Dublin United Tramways Co. v. Fitzgerald, 72 L. J. P.C. 52; [1903] A.C. 99; 87 L. T. 532; 51 W. R. 321; 67 J. P. 229; 1 L. G. R. 386—H.L. (Ir.)

Standard of Maintenance—Nuisance Primarily Due to Default of Road Authority.—The defendant conducted traffic throughout a considerable period by means of a traction-engine over a main road repairable by the plaintiff council, and the road got into a condition so bad as to amount to a nuisance. The condition of the road was not caused primarily by the defendant's traffic, but, though that traffic with other traffic and the state of the weather were contributory causes, primarily by the failure of the plaintiff council to maintain the road in a fit state to bear the traffic over it, including the defendant's traction traffic, which was not more unusual or onerous than the council ought to have expected to come on it. The plaintiff council ultimately reconstructed the road in such a way that there was no appreciable risk, if ordinary care were exercised by the council, that in the future the defendant's traffic would cut up the road or reduce it to a condition such as to constitute a nuisance:—Held, that, under these circumstances, an injunction ought not to be granted, in an action brought by the Attorney-General on the relation of the plaintiff council and by the plaintiff council, to restrain the defendant from conducting traffic upon the road in such a way as to cause a public nuisance. Att.-Gen. v. Scott (No. 2), 2 L. G. R. 1113; 68 J. P. 502; 20 T. L. R. 630—Jelf, J.

Obtaining Materials for Repairs—River Bed—River Running through Inclosed Land.—The provisions of section 51 of the Highway Act, 1835, empowering a highway authority to obtain road-making materials in any "waste land or common ground, river or brook," without a Justices' licence, do not extend to the gathering of materials from the bed of a river running through inclosed land. Allison v. Cumberland County Council, 97 L. T. 187; 5 L. G. R. 871; 71 J. P. 398; 23 T. L. R. 606—D.

— "Waste land or common ground"—Welsh Mountain—Sheep Walks.—The plaintiff, claiming to be the owner of a mountain in Wales, sought to restrain the defendant council from obtaining stone for highway repair from it. The defendants claimed the right to obtain the stone as from "waste land or common ground" under section 51 of the Highway Act, 1835, and also disputed the plaintiff's title. The plaintiff proved no paper title to the land, but proved that she was the owner of certain farms adjoining the mountain, and had long been accustomed to let to the tenants of these farms rights of grazing sheep on the mountain, a particular part of the mountain being appropriated for this purpose to each farm. There was no evidence of any title to the soil of the mountain in the Crown or in any person other than the plaintiff:—Held, that the plaintiff had sufficiently proved ownership of the mountain to sustain the action, and that the mountain was not waste land or common ground. Scott v.

Towyn Rural Council, 5 L. G. R. 1050—Lord Alverstone, C.J.

Licence to Surveyor to take Materials from Inclosed Lands for Repair of Highways—Excepted Lands—Jurisdiction of Justice.—By the joint effect of sections 53 and 54 of the Highway Act, 1835, the Justices may license the surveyor of highways to take materials for the repair of the highways "at such time or times as to such Justices shall seem proper" from the inclosed lands of any person, "such lands . . . not being a . . . park." On an application by a surveyor of highways for a licence under those sections the Justices made an order authorising him to take materials for a period of five years from certain inclosed land which in the opinion of the High Court was a park:—Held, that the question whether the land was a park or not was one which was preliminary to the exercise of the jurisdiction given by the statute, and that the Justices could not by wrongly deciding that the land was not a park give themselves jurisdiction in the matter. Rea v. Bradford, 77 L. J. K.B. 475; [1908] 1 K.B. 365; 72 J. P. 61—D.

— Time for which Licence may be Granted.—A licence, to be valid, must not purport to operate for a longer period than is necessary for the execution of the repairs, and the licence, being for a period of five years without reference to the necessities existing at the date of the grant, was bad. Ib.

Surveyor Supplying Team Work—Member of District Council—Surveyor or not.—By the Highways Act, 1835, s. 46, the surveyor of the parish may contract for the purchasing, getting, and carrying of materials required for the repairing of the highways, but he may not share or have any interest in any such contract without the licence in writing of two Justices of the peace previously obtained by him, under certain penalties. By the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 144, urban authorities have the powers of surveyors of highways and of parish vestries under the Highways Acts. By the Local Government Act, 1894, s. 25, the district council of every rural district "... shall also have as respects highways all the powers, duties, and liabilities of an urban sanitary authority under sections 144 to 148 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and those sections shall apply in the case of a rural district, and of the council thereof, in like manner as in the case of an urban district and an urban authority." And by section 46 of that Act a person is not to be disqualified from being a member of the council "by reason of being interested . . . in the transport of materials for the repair of roads or bridges in his own immediate neighbourhood." The respondent H. was a member of the Saddleworth District Council, and in March, 1897, he on his own account let to hire a team to be used in repairing a highway within the district of the council of which he was a member, and he received from the council payment in respect thereof. He did not before letting for hire as aforesaid obtain any licence in writing from two Justices of the peace. He was thereupon summoned before the magistrates for the penalties contained in the Highways Act, 1835, s. 46, who, however, dismissed the summons:—Held, that the magistrates were right. Burkley v. Hanson, Restoration of Highway after Laying Sewer—Misfeasance of Local Authority—Negligence.]—The Metropolitan Vestry of S., the predecessors of the defendant council, being both highway authority and sewer authority, laid a sewer in a highway and negligently filled in the trench in such a way that, though made temporarily fit for traffic, the part of the highway where the trench had been dug became dangerous in a few days. A cab-driver driving along the side of the road which had thus become dangerous, which was his near side, crossed to his off side in order to avoid the danger, and drove against a heap of soil which had been placed on the latter side of the highway without the knowledge or consent of the vestry, but of the existence of which they were, by their officers, aware; and the cab overturned. Held—first, that the vestry, having negligently failed to put the highway, which they had themselves rendered impassable, into a proper condition of permanent repair, were in the position of misfeasors, and not of mere non-feasors, with reference to the consequences of their dealings with the road; secondly, that the accident was such a consequence of the vestry's misfeasance as to render them and their successors liable in damages to a person injured by the accident. Semble, that the vestry and their successors would have been equally liable had the vestry not been aware of the existence of the heap of soil. Bull v. Shoreditch Borough, 67 J. P. 37; 1 L. G. R. 81—C.A.

Non-repair — Indictment — Rural District Council.]—Proceedings were taken before Justices under section 19 of the Highway Act, 1862, in respect of the non-repair of a certain highway, and upon liability being denied by the defendant council the Justices made an order that an indictment should be preferred against them for such non-repair: Held, that neither under the Highway Acts of 1835 or 1862 had the Justices power to make such an order, and that the indictment should be quashed. Semble, where Justices make an order that an indictment shall be preferred the order should be set out in the indictment. Reg. v. Biggleswade Rural Council, 64 J. P. 442—Wright, J.

— Order for Repair by County Council “to the satisfaction of county surveyor.”]—The fact that a county council in making an order on a highway authority under section 10 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, requires the highway to be repaired “to the satisfaction of the county surveyor” does not vitiate an indictment following thereon against the highway authority for the non-repair of the highway. *Reg. v. 13. HIGHWAY AUTHORITY.

Surveyor of Highways—Period of Office—Power to Bind Successor—Agreement for Construction of Bridge.]—The period of office of the surveyor of highways appointed under section 6 of the Highway Act, 1835, is limited to one year. By section 3 of the Highways and Bridges Act, 1891, power is given to the council of any administrative county and any highway authority to make agreements for the construction, alteration, or improvement of any highway or bridge wholly or partly situate within the jurisdiction of any one of the parties to the agreement, and for defraying expenses incurred in pursuance of that section. Where the highway authority is the surveyor of highways, Held, that the power to make such agreements is not limited to cases where the construction, alteration, or improvement is to be completed within the surveyor's year of office. Hertfordshire County Council v. Barnet Rural Council, 71 L. J. K.B. 610; [1902] 2 K.B. 48; 86 L. T. 880; 50 W. R. 582; 66 J. P. 531—C.A.

14. OBSTRUCTION OF HIGHWAY.

Interference with Road—Duty of Public Body Authorising Interference towards Public.]—Per PALLES, C.B.: Where a body, having lawful authority, authorises an interference with a public road, or authorises works which in the natural course of things will result in such an interference, there is a duty cast upon that body to use due care to prevent danger being caused to the public using the road, by the execution of the works authorised; that that duty extends to seeing that the workmen actively engaged are careful; and that such body cannot relieve itself of the obligation by delegating it to another who fails to perform it. Clements v. Tyrone County Council, [1905] 2 Ir. R. 415—K.B. D. Affirmed, [1905] 2 Ir. R. 542—C.A.

Right of Action—Particular Damage—Dedication—Dedication of Substituted Way—Dedication by Limited Owner.]—Between 1884 and 1850 the sublessee for a term of years of certain lands, over which there had been in existence prior to 1805 a public right of way, substituted therefor another way, with a bridge and path. In 1874 the sublessee surrendered his interest to his immediate landlord, who held under a fee-farm grant dating from 1857. The fee-farm grantee continued in occupation of the lands for two years, when he re-let them to the defendant. During the two years of his occupation the fee-farm grantee acquiesced in the public user of the substituted way, and at the trial the jury found that he had acquiesced in and adopted the dedication to the public of the right of way as so altered. There was no evidence of dedication or of acquiescence in the substituted way by the owner in fee. The plaintiff, a small farmer, had been using said way as a means of access from his farm to the public road leading to the market town, about four miles distant. The defendant obstructed the way by removing the bridge and erecting a fence. The plaintiff was thereby forced to take a longer and more circuitous route when going to the market town, which he required to do about once a week, and was obliged on some occasions to pay for a car.—Held, that it was competent to the grantee in a fee-farm grant to dedicate a public right of way, and that, under the circumstances of the case, the acquiescence of the fee-farm grantee in the act of his former tenant amounted to a dedication to the public of the substituted way, binding upon his interest, and all claiming under him, including the defendant. Held, further (KENNY, J., dissenting), that the evidence was sufficient to sustain the finding of the jury that the plaintiff had suffered particular damage beyond that which was common to the public at large, and that the verdict for damages found for the plaintiff by the jury at the trial could not be disturbed. Smith v. Wilson, [1903] 2 Ir. R. 45—K.B. D.

Damage Arising Therefrom—Tramway—Reconstruction under Statutory Powers.—In converting a tramway system from horse traction to electrical driving power, the alterations were carried out in such a way as to be an obstruction to a highway. The alterations were so carried out with a view to maintain a continuous service of tramcars on a double set of rails, but there was no obligation to do so. The statute under which the alterations were made contained a clause, "Subject to the provisions of this Act, the council, for the purpose of working the tramways by electrical power . . . may exercise the following powers (that is to say): . . . they may reconstruct or make such alterations of the tramways, and may execute all such works on or in connexion therewith in over or under the streets or roads in which the same are laid, as may be necessary for adapting the same to be so worked":—Held, that the clause did not authorise the obstruction to the highway, inasmuch as the works constructed were not works necessary for adapting the tramways to be worked by electricity. Tilling, Lim. v. Dick Kerr & Co., 74 L. J. K.B. 359; [1905] 1 K.B. 562; 92 L. T. 731; 53 W. R. 380; 69 J. P. 172; 3 L. G. R. 369; 21 T. L. R. 281—Warrington, J.

Coffee Stall—Right of Passage—Finding of Jury—Traffic in Street not Appreciably Interfered with—Verdict of "Guilty" Entered—Verdict set Aside.—The defendant was indicted for a nuisance by placing and keeping a coffee stall upon a public carriage-way, and so obstructing the same. The coffee stall was placed as a permanent structure in a space between a public convenience and a fountain, nearly in the middle of one of the main streets of a certain town. The jury found that "the coffee stall was an obstruction, but that it did not appreciably interfere with the traffic in the street." The Judge directed a verdict of "guilty" to be entered:—Held, that the conviction must be quashed, as the finding of the jury, in the absence of a finding that the coffee stall was a nuisance, was insufficient to support a verdict of "guilty." Rex v. Bartholomew, 77 L. J. K.B. 275; [1908] 1 K.B. 554; 72 J. P. 79; 6 L. G. R. 262—C.C.R.

Fowl Straying on Highway Causing Injury to Cyclist—Fowl Frightened by Dog of Third Person—Liability of Owner of Fowl.—Some fowls belonging to a person whose premises adjoined a highway strayed on to the highway.

Having been frightened by the dog of a third person, one of them flew into the spokes of a wheel of a bicycle passing along the highway, causing the cyclist to be upset and the bicycle to be damaged:—Held, that the owner of the fowl was not liable in damages, as the proximate cause of the injury was the tortious act of a third person's animal; and, further, that there was no evidence that the presence of fowls on the highway constituted a danger to passers-by. Hadwell v. Righton, 76 L. J. K.B. 891; [1907] 2 K.B. 345; 97 L. T. 133; 5 L. G. R. 881; 71 J. P. 499; 23 T. L. R. 548—D.

Semble (per BRAY, J.), that it is not an unreasonable and improper user of a highway for the owner of premises adjacent thereto to allow his fowls to stray on to the highway. Ib.

Cox v. Burbidge (32 L. J. C.P. 89; 13 C. B. (N.S.) 430) followed. Ib.

"Leaving" Carriage on Highway so as to Obstruct it.—The driver of a carriage may be convicted under section 78 of the Highway Act, 1835, of leaving the carriage on the highway so as to obstruct the passage thereof, notwithstanding that the carriage was not at the time in question left unattended. But the fact that there was some one in attendance may be material in determining whether in fact the passage of the highway was obstructed. Hinde v. Evans, 96 L. T. 20; 4 L. G. R. 1152; 70 J. P. 548; 21 Cox C.C. 331—D.

Rubble—Laying, to the "interruption and personal danger" of Persons on Highway—Separate Offences—Form of Conviction.—Section 72 of the Highway Act, 1835, in prohibiting the laying of anything upon a highway "to the injury of such highway, or to the injury, interruption or personal danger of any person travelling thereon," has created not four separate offences but only two—namely, (a) the doing of something to the injury of the highway, and (b) the doing of something to the injury, interruption, or personal danger of any person travelling thereon. Therefore a conviction of a person for having laid rubble on a highway "to the interruption and personal danger of any person travelling thereon" is not bad for duplicity. Smith v. Perry, 75 L. J. K.B. 124; [1906] 1 K.B. 262; 94 L. T. 140; 70 J. P. 93; 4 L. G. R. 224; 22 T. L. R. 158; 21 Cox C.C. 98—D.

Rubbish in Road—Liability of Local Authority.—The appellants, who were both the sanitary and the highway authority, dug a trench along a road under their control for the purpose of laying a sewer. When the work was completed they filled in the trench and opened the road for traffic. About a week afterwards the respondent was driving along the road in a cab at night. The driver found that the part of the road where the trench had been opened was soft, and crossed on to the other side, and ran into a heap of rubbish, with the result that the cab was overturned and the respondent was injured. The rubbish had been wrongfully deposited in the road without the permission of the appellants, but they knew that it was there, and had not lighted or fenced it. The jury found that the part of the road where the trench had been opened had been properly filled in, but had been rendered soft by subsequent rain, and was dangerous to traffic at the time of the accident:—Held, that the appellants were liable for the injury. Shoreditch Corporation v. Bull, 90 L. T. 210; 68 J. P. 415; 2 L. G. R. 756; 20 T. L. R. 254—H.L. (E.)

Timber—Order for Removal of, from Highway—Omission of Word “Timber” from Operative Part of Section.]—Under section 73 of the Highway Act, 1835, an order may be made for the removal from a highway of any timber which has been laid thereon so as to be a nuisance, notwithstanding that the word “timber” (which is referred to in the first part of the section) is omitted in the operative part. Dixon v. Chester, 70 J. P. 380; 4 L. G. R. 1127; 22 T. L. R. 501—D.

Trees—Cutting Near—Timber Trees—Yew.]—The appellant Bullen was summoned under section 65 of the Highway Act, 1835, for that a yew-tree growing on his lands obstructed a carriage-way, and the magistrates made an order for its removal. It was contended on his behalf that, as no order had been made for widening the road, under section 66 he could not be ordered to remove it, even if it was an obstruction. But, even if they could order its removal, they could not do so in July, when they made the order:—Held, that the order was right, and that section 66 did not apply to such a case as this at all. Bullen v. Wakely, 77 L. T. 689; 62 J. P. 166; 18 Cox C.C. 692—D.

User for Loading and Unloading Goods—Temporary Appropriation—Injunction.]—The primary object of a public street is the free passage of the public, and anything which obstructs that free passage without reasonable necessity is a nuisance and may be restrained. In a case of doubt the right of a private individual to carry on his business by means of the street must give way to the public right of using the street. Att.-Gen. v. Brighton and Hove Co-operative Supply Association, 69 L. J. Ch. 204; [1900] 1 Ch. 276; 81 L. T. 762; 48 W. R. 314—C.A.

Per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—The mere fact that the width of a roadway is temporarily reduced by the user of it by an individual does not necessarily make that user unlawful or the obstruction caused an unlawful obstruction. To ascertain whether a particular user is reasonable and lawful it is necessary to consider all the facts of the case. Ib.

The appropriation by a tradesman of half of a highway for several hours in each day for the purpose of loading and unloading goods to and from his vans,—Held, not to be a reasonable user of the highway. Ib.

Inappreciability—Rule as to—Resolution of County Council—Action by Attorney-General on Behalf of Public.]—A county council cannot legally sanction the erection of a permanent structure, not authorised by the necessities of the public service, along or upon a county road. The Attorney-General, as representing the public, is the proper person to prevent this by injunction. When the soil has been taken for county purposes everything between the road fences is prima facie part of the public highway.

An obstruction placed upon a county road can only be looked on as inappreciable when the obstruction is temporary in character, or where it is so small in extent that it could not, under any circumstances, impede traffic. Att.-Gen. v. Mayo County Council, [1902] 1 Ir. R. 13—M.R.

15. DIVERSION OF HIGHWAY.

Notices at Each End of Diverted Highway—Period of Publication.]—It is not a condition precedent to the granting of a certificate by Justices under section 85 of the Highway Act, 1835, that, before an order can be made for the diversion of a highway, the notices directed by that section to be affixed at each end of the highway proposed to be diverted should be so affixed for four consecutive weeks—that is, for the full period of twenty-eight days, after the Justices have viewed such highway. Rev. v. Kent Justices, 74 L. J. K.B. 50; [1905] 1 K.B. 378; 92 L. T. 132; 53 W. R. 183; 69 J. P. 69; 3 L. G. R. 261; 21 T. L. R. 95—C.A.

Certificate of Justices—Validity.]—The Justices who give the certificate need not be the Justices to whom the original application was made. Ib.

Consent of Landowners.]—The consent in writing of the owners of the land through which the diverted highway is to pass need not be recited in the certificate. Ib.

Substitution of One Highway for Another—Statutory Requirements—Absence of Evidence—Presumption from Long User.]—By a resolution of a vestry in the year 1842, a new highway was substituted for an older one which was repairable by the inhabitants at large. The old highway was thereupon closed, and the substituted one was continuously used by the public:—Held, that a Court of summary jurisdiction was entitled, by reason of the long user of the new highway, to presume that the requirements of sections 84 to 92 of the Highway Act, 1835, had been duly complied with, and to find that it was a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large. Leigh Urban Council v. King, 70 L. J. K.B. 313; [1901] 1 K.B. 747; 83 L. T. 777; 65 J. P. 243—D.

Diverting and Stopping up—Plan—“Ad-measurement.”]—The plan attached to a certificate of Justices as to the stopping up and diversion of a highway consisted of a sheet of the Ordnance Survey with a scale printed thereon, on which the old and proposed new highway was indicated in colours. The width thereof was stated on the plan in writing, but not the length, which could only be ascertained by measuring the highway so indicated and by reference to the scale:—Held, that the plan did not describe the highway by “ad-measurement” as required by section 85 of the Highway Act, 1835. Rev. v. Surrey Justices; Locke-King, Ex parte, 77 L. J. K.B. 167; [1908] 1 K.B. 374; 98 L. T. 42; 72 J. P. 53; 6 L. G. R. 98—D.

Justices’ Certificate—Refusal of Quarter Sessions to Enrol—Mandamus.]—Held, also, that where quarter sessions have decided as to the sufficiency of the plan, the Court will not interfere by mandamus to compel them to enrol the certificate. Ib.

Proposed New Road — Appeal to Quarter Sessions from Justices' Certificate — Proposed Road found to be more Commodious to Public, but that Appellant would be Injured & Aggrieved.]—Where under section 89 of the Highway Act, 1835, the jury find that the party appealing to quarter sessions would be injured or aggrieved by a proposed new highway, the appeal must be allowed, notwithstanding the fact that the jury may also have found that the proposed new highway would be more commodious to the public than the existing highway. Walker v. York Corporation, 75 L. J. K.B. 413; [1906] 1 K.B. 724; 94 L. T. 744; 54 W. R. 493; 4 L. G. R. 524; 70 J. P. 270; 22 T. L. R. 456—D. And see METROPOLIS.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Statute.]—4 Edw. 7 c. 28 is the Weights and Measures Act, 1904.

Disc Affixed to Arm of Scale — Weight of Article Sold Less than that Indicated—"False or unjust" Scale.]—The respondents, wholesale tea merchants, had upon their premises two beam scales in use for weighing tea. One scale had a metal disc affixed by wire to the arm of the scale on which the scoop for receiving the tea was placed, the effect being that the quantity of tea required to turn the scale with a weight of $\frac{1}{2}$ lb. in the opposite pan was less than $\frac{1}{2}$ lb. by the weight of the disc—that is, by 2 or 2½ drachms. The weight of the disc was as nearly as possible equivalent to the weight of the paper bag in which each quantity of the tea was to be placed. The second scale had a paper bag placed underneath the scoop in which the tea was weighed. This had the same effect as the disc. The respondents weighed out tea in this manner only for customers who were retail dealers in tea, and who requested to be supplied with it so packed, and such customers themselves supplied the bags for the purpose. Each bag had printed on it an intimation that the weight of the paper was included. Upon informations charging the respondents with having used for trade scales which were "false or unjust," contrary to section 25 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1878,—Held, that the scales were "false or unjust" within the meaning of that section, notwithstanding the acquiescence of the customers in the use of the scales. London County Council v. Payne (No. 1), 73 L. J. K.B. 192; [1904] 1 K.B. 194; 89 L. T. 632; 52 W. R. 299; 68 J. P. 21; 2 L. G. R. 184; 20 Cox C.C. 580; 20 T. L. R. 93—D.

Paper placed under Scoop of Weighing Machine.]—A tea-merchant, with a view to quicken the process of weighing out tea to be made up into packets, weighed the tea for each packet without first putting it into the bag in which it was to be sold; but in order to throw upon the customer part of the cost of the bag, placed between the bottom of the scoop of the weighing machine in which the tea was weighed and the cup in which the scoop rested a piece of paper weighing less than the bag, which caused the machine to indicate a weight greater by the weight of the paper than the actual weight of the tea in the scoop:—Held, that he was liable to the fine imposed by section 25 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1878, upon a person who has in his possession for use for trade a weighing machine which is "false or unjust." Lane v. Randall, 69 L. J. Q.B. 8; [1899] 2 Q.B. 673; 81 L. T. 445; 43 W. R. 153; 63 J. P. 757; 19 Cox C.C. 399—D.

Paper Bag Placed under Scoop—Weight of Article Sold Less than that Indicated—"False or unjust" Scale.]—The respondents, wholesale tea merchants, had upon their premises a beam scale in use for weighing tea. The scale had a paper bag (supplied by the customer) placed underneath the scoop in which the tea was weighed, the effect being that the quantity of tea required to turn the scale with a weight of a quarter of a pound in the opposite pan was less than a quarter of a pound by the weight of the bag—that is, by 2½ drachms. The scale without the paper bag was accurate. The paper bag was given by the respondents' forewoman to the girl who weighed the tea to fold up and place under the scoop at the commencement of each weighing operation, and was always removed by the forewoman a few minutes after it was finished. No two weighings out with a bag were allowed to be consecutive, a full-weight order being always interposed. Tea was never so weighed out by the respondents unless at the request of the customer. Upon an information charging the respondents with having used for trade a beam scale which was "false or unjust," contrary to section 25 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1878,—Held, that the scale was "false or unjust" within the meaning of that section, inasmuch as it would not hang true at the time of the weighing when an equal weight was put into the goods scoop and into the weight dish on the other side. London County Council v. Payne (No. 2), 74 L. J. K.B. 108; [1905] 1 K.B. 410; 92 L. T. 120; 53 W. R. 319; 69 J. P. 80; 3 L. G. R. 118; 20 Cox C.C. 768; 21 T. L. R. 162—D.

Paper Added to Goods Pan when Weighing Tea — Custom or Trade Usage — Weighing in Customer's Presence.]—In proceedings against a grocer, under section 26 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1878, for being unlawfully and wilfully a party to the commission of a fraud in using a certain scale by adding paper to the goods pan when weighing tea, evidence of a custom or trade usage to weigh tea with paper is admissible as bearing on the question whether there has been a wilful commission of a fraud. King v. Spencer, 91 L. T. 470; 2 L. G. R. 979; 68 J. P. 530; 20 Cox C.C. 692—D.

The offence in question may be committed where tea is weighed with paper though the weighing is done before the customer's eyes, if it is so done as to suggest to the customer that the net weight of the tea alone is being ascertained. Id.

Article Weighed in Paper Bag.—The appellant, a grocer, handed to a purchaser, who asked for and expected to receive one pound of sugar, a package consisting of a quantity of sugar in a paper bag, the sugar and the bag together weighing exactly one pound, and the sugar without the bag weighing less than one pound. The package was one of a number of similar packages which had been previously weighed by the appellant, the sugar in each package having been weighed in the paper bag in which it was contained. The scales in which the packages were weighed were perfectly just and accurate, and gave the weight of each package correctly. The appellant had no intention to defraud the customer:—Held, that the appellant's conduct did not amount to a fraud wilfully committed in the "using" of a weighing machine within the meaning of section 26 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1878. Stone v. Tyler, 74 L. J. K.B. 18; [1905] 1 K.B. 290; 92 L. T. 83; 69 J. P. 4; 2 L. G. R. 1363; 20 Cox C.C. 763; 21 T. L. R. 33—D.

Barrel used as Measure—No Facility by Local Authority for Verification and Stamping.—A local authority are not precluded from prosecuting a person for using a measure not stamped in conformity with section 29 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1878, by reason of having failed to fix times and places for verifying and stamping weights and measures in accordance with section 44 of the same Act. Hayley v. Taylor, 82 L. T. 803; 19 Cox C.C. 538—D.

Testing Weights and Weighing Machines—Detention and Seizure—Duty of Inspectors—Misconduct.—The respondent, an inspector of weights and measures, ascertained that certain weights carried in a cart for the purpose of weighing coal were unjust, whereupon he defaced the stamps on such weights and handed them to the driver of the coal cart, but took no proceedings against the owners of the weights in question. He also ascertained, otherwise than by comparing it with a local standard, that the weighing machine carried in the cart was unjust, whereupon he seized the weighing machine. Two informations were thereupon preferred against the respondent, charging him with misconduct in his office within section 49 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1878, the first information stating the misconduct to consist in his having defaced the stamps on the weights, the second stating the misconduct to consist in his having seized the weighing machine without having first tested it with a local standard. Both informations were dismissed:—Held, that the Justices were right in dismissing the informations. Wedderburn v. Smith, 92 L. T. 853; 3 L. G. R. 533; 69 J. P. 217; 20 Cox C.C. 855—D.

Statutory Fees—Resolution of Local Authority that such Fees be not Taken—Non-collection of Fees by Inspector—Liability of Inspector to Surcharge.—The local authority has no power to resolve that the fees directed by section 13 and the First Schedule of the Weights and Measures Act, 1889, to be taken in respect of the verification and stamping of weights, measures, and weighing instruments, be not taken; and an inspector of weights and measures ceasing in pursuance of a resolution of the local authority to take such fees is liable to be surcharged with the amount of such fees which he has not collected. Rea v. Roberts, 70 L. J. K.B. 590; [1901] 2 K.B. 117; 84 L. T. 530; 49 W. R. 488; 65 J. P. 359—D.

Coal—By-law—"Correct weighing instrument"—Coal Carried out in Cart for Sale by Retail—Failure of Seller to Carry Sufficient Proper Weights.—A by-law made under section 28, sub-section 1 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1889, provided that every coal dealer should provide, and every person employed by him to carry out coal for sale by retail out of any vehicle should carry, a correct weighing instrument, stamped by an inspector, for the purpose of weighing any quantity of coal not exceeding two hundredweight. The respondent, a coal dealer, was carrying out a number of sacks of coal in a cart for sale by retail, some of the sacks containing half a hundredweight and others a hundredweight. He had in the cart a correct weighing machine, duly stamped, but only one 56-lb. weight:—Held, that, inasmuch as the respondent had no proper weights for weighing in one operation the coal in one of the larger sacks, he had committed an offence against the by-law. Crick v. Nicholls, 74 L. J. K.B. 283; [1905] 1 K.B. 501; 92 L. T. 169; 53 W. R. 481; 69 J. P. 144; 3 L. G. R. 277; 20 Cox C.C. 777; 21 T. L. R. 235—D.

Sale in Bulk—Tare Weight of Vehicle—Weight "previously ascertained."—Under section 22 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1889, which relates to the selling of coal in bulk exceeding two hundredweight, it is not necessary that the vehicle in which the coal is conveyed to the purchaser should be weighed before every delivery; the true test is whether the Justices had evidence before them that the vehicle had been weighed so recently and under such circumstances that its correct weight previous to the particular delivery had been ascertained. Beardsley v. Pike, 90 L. T. 652; 68 J. P. 273; 2 L. G. R. 710; 20 Cox C.C. 648—D.

Delivery in Vehicle in Bulk—Time and Place of Weighing.—The weighing of coal for delivery on sale in a vehicle in bulk contemplated by section 22, sub-section 1 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1889, the result of which is by section 21 to be indicated on a ticket to be forwarded to the purchaser, is to be performed at the premises of the seller previous to the load being sent out, and not on delivery at the premises of the purchaser. Knowles v. Sinclair, 67 L. J. Q.B. 67; [1898] 1 Q.B. 170; 77 L. T. 624; 46 W. R. 188; 62 J. P. 102; 18 Cox C.C. 681—D.

— Delivery of Coal Exceeding Two Hundred-weight—Weight Ticket—Insertion of Seller's Name—Trade Name of Seller.—The requirements of section 21 and schedule 3 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1889, as to the insertion of the seller's name upon the weight ticket required to be delivered to the purchaser of coal before the unloading of the coal, are sufficiently satisfied by the insertion of the name under which the seller carries on business. Cameron v. Tyler, 68 L. J. Q.B. 759; [1899] 2 Q.B. 94; 80 L.T. 764; 47 W. R. 559; 63 J. P. 567; 19 Cox C.C. 353—D.

— Delivery in Vehicle—Weighing—Time and Place of Insertion of Weight in Ticket.—It is a sufficient compliance with section 21 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1889, that the ticket in the form in schedule 3, to be delivered by the seller to the purchaser of coal, be filled up after the arrival but before the unloading of the coal at the purchaser's premises, and that the weight so inserted be ascertained at the purchaser's premises. Edwards v. Purnell, 68 L. J. Q.B. 272; [1899] 1 Q.B. 449; 79 L. T. 737; 47 W. R. 380; 63 J. P. 249; 19 Cox C.C. 286—D.

Unjust Measure Found in Possession of Servant—Measure Made Unjust by Servant for his own Purposes—Use of Measure by Servant off Master's Premises—Liability of Master.—The appellants supplied their servant with two correct measures to be used by him in supplying oil to customers on his rounds. For his own purposes and not in the interests of the appellants, and without their knowledge, the servant substituted for one of the correct measures with which he had been supplied a measure which had been discarded by the appellants and which the servant had made unjust, and which he was using on his rounds when it was seized by an inspector of weights and measures. The appellants were thereupon charged with having such unjust measure in their possession for use for trade, and were convicted:—Held, that the conviction must be quashed, as in the circumstances the possession of the unjust measure by the servant was not the possession of the appellants. Anglo-American Oil Co. v. Manning, 77 L. J. K.B. 205; [1908] 1 K.B. 536; 72 J. P. 35—D.

Prosecution by Inspector—Consent of Local Authority.—The consent by the local authority, required by section 14 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1904, to a prosecution before a Court of summary jurisdiction or Justices of an information, complaint, or proceeding arising under that Act, need not be a particular consent in each case, a general consent being sufficient. Tyler v. Ferris, 75 L. J. K.B. 142; [1906] 1 K.B. 94; 93 L. T. 843; 54 W. R. 469; 70 J. P. 88; 4 L. G. R. 201; 21 Cox C.C. 73; 22 T. L. R. 181—D.

4 Edw. 7 c. 4 is the Wild Birds Protection Act, 1904.

4 Edw. 7 c. 10 is the Wild Birds Protection (St. Kilda) Act, 1904.

Exposing for Sale—"Recently taken."—A wild bird is not of necessity not recently taken because it has been in the possession of a person for a period of three weeks. The offence of exposing for sale, or having possession of any wild bird recently taken, is dependent upon section 3 of the Wild Birds Protection Act, 1880, as amended by the Act of 1881, and it is incumbent upon the prosecution to shew that the birds were wild birds and have been recently taken. Green v. Carstang, 85 L. T. 615; 66 J. P. 102; 20 Cox C.C. 92—D.

No Public Notice of Secretary of State's Order.—By an order of the Secretary of State of January 30, 1906, made under the Wild Birds Protection Acts, 1880 to 1902, the killing and taking of certain birds is prohibited during that period of the year to which the protection afforded by the Wild Birds Protection Act, 1880, does not extend. On a prosecution for an infringement of the Acts and order, it did not appear that the county council had given public notice of the order as directed by section 4 of the Wild Birds Protection Act, 1894:—Held, that public notice by a county council was not a condition precedent to proceedings against a person charged with a breach of the Acts and order. Duncan v. Knill, 96 L. T. 911; 5 L. G. R. 620; 71 J. P. 287—D.

1. CAPACITY.

Instructions for Will.—If a person has given instructions for his will, and the will has been prepared in accordance therewith, it is sufficient to establish the validity of the will that the testator should, in executing it, accept the instrument as carrying out his instructions, even if he fail to follow all the dispositions of his property as they are read over to him. Parker v. Felgate (52 L. J. P. 95; 8 P. D. 171) approved. Perera v. Perera, 70 L. J. P.C. 46; [1901] A.C. 354; 24 L. T. 371—P.C.

Insane Delusions.—In an action for reduction of a will the pursuers averred that the testator was "subject to insane delusions," and that "he believed that he had a special and imperative duty to further the cause of total abstinence and to oppose the Church of Rome by devoting his pecuniary resources to these objects, in consequence of commands which he conceived he had received from the Deity by direct communications on various occasions." That these insane delusions dominated his mind and overmastered his judgment to such an extent as to render him incapable of making reasonable and proper settlement of his means and estate, or of taking a rational view of the matters to be considered in making a will:—Held (Lord DAVEY dissenting), that a relevant case for trial was averred. Hope v. Campbell, [1899] A.C. 1—H.L. (Sc.)

Testamentary capacity is not disproved by evidence of the testator's merely eccentric acts and conduct. Pilkington v. Gray, 68 L. J. P.O. 68; [1899] A.C. 401—P.C.

Estoppel.—See ESTOPPEL.

2. BY WHOM MADE.

Of English Subject made Abroad—No Specific Form Required by Lex Loci.—A will of a British subject made abroad is valid, according to the provisions of Lord Kingsdown's Act (24 & 25 Vict. c. 114), s. 1, if valid according to the law of the country or place where it is made, although no specific form or forms are prescribed for the making of wills by the law of such country or place. Stokes v. Stokes, 67 L. J. P. 55; 78 L. T. 50—Jeune, P.

Naturalised British Subject—English Domicil—Will made in Italy in Foreign Form—Validity to Pass Leaseholds—"Personal estate."—"Personal estate" in the Wills Act, 1861, includes leasehold property. A will made out of the United Kingdom by a British subject, whatever his domicile at the time of making it or at his death, and made according to the law of the place where it was made, or where he was domiciled when it was made, or where in the King's dominions he had his domicile of origin, is effectual to pass his beneficial interest in leaseholds. Grassi, In re; Stubbsfield v. Grassi, 74 L. J. Ch. 341; [1905] 1 Ch. 584; 92 L. T. 455; 53 W. R. 396; 21 T. L. R. 343—Buckley, J.

Will made by Englishwoman in England—Subsequent Marriage of Testatrix to Domiciled Scotsman.—A will dealing with movable property duly executed in England by a spinster domiciled in England at the date of its execution is not revoked by her subsequent marriage in England to a domiciled Scotsman. Westerman v. Schwab, 8 F. 132—Ct. of Sess.

Seaman's Will—"At sea"—Voyage not yet Begun.—A letter containing testamentary dispositions written on a ship lying in a river, and before the ship has actually sailed, may be a valid will as made by a seaman at sea. Patterson, In the goods of, 79 L. T. 123—Gorell Barnes, J.

Soldier "in actual military service."—

"Mobilisation" is a fair test of whether a soldier is or is not "in actual military service" with the exception contained in section 11 of the Wills Act, 1837, but mere warning for mobilisation is not sufficient. Gattward v. Knee; May v. May, 71 L. J. P. 34; [1902] P. 99, 103; 86 L. T. 119, 120—Jeune, P., and Gorell Barnes, J.

Where a letter written by a soldier "in actual military service" contains passages that are clearly testamentary, the general testamentary character of such letter will not be affected by the mere fact that it also shews the writer's intention to draw up some more formal document at a later date. Id.

This principle applies equally to any letter written by a soldier on active service, whether literate or illiterate; and the Court will not distinguish between a letter written by a private shewn to have been illiterate and a letter written under similar circumstances by an officer shewn to have been a man of business habits and exceptional ability, who must have known how to make a formal will, had he chosen to do so. Id.

— A sergeant in the Army Ordnance Corps, who was stationed at Woolwich, received, on August 15, 1899, orders from the War Office to proceed in marching order, on the 19th inst., to Fermoy, where he was to report himself to the commanding officer of the Munster Fusiliers, and proceed with the regiment to South Africa on the 24th inst., for special service. On August 17, while still at Woolwich, the sergeant wrote a letter to a friend of his fiancée, in which he stated that if anything happened to him she would come in for everything he had. He died while serving in South Africa:—Held, that the letter should be admitted to probate as a soldier's will. Gordon, In the goods of, 21 T. L. R. 653—Gorell Barnes, P.

— Infant.—A volunteer offered himself for service in South Africa. On February 3, 1900, he was accepted. On February 19 he left his home and went to reside in barracks. On March 2 he received his final orders to sail. On March 8 he made his will, and on March 10 he sailed for South Africa. In May he came of age, and on July 27 died of his wounds in South Africa:—Held, that from the moment he left his home and went into barracks on February 19 the testator had taken the first step in compliance with his orders to proceed to the front, and was therefore in expeditione or "in actual military service" within the meaning of section 11 of the Wills Act, 1837, and that his will was therefore entitled to probate, although he was an infant at the time he made it. Drummond v. Parish (3 Curt. 522) considered. Bowles v. Jackson (1 Spinks Ecc. & Adm. 294) followed. Hiscock, In the goods of, 70 L. J. P. 22; [1901] P. 78; 84 L. T. 61—Jeune, P.

— "Effects to be credited."—An oral declaration made by a soldier on active service that in the event of death he desired "all his effects to be credited" to a person named admitted to probate as a soldier's will, irrespective of the probable construction of the gift. Scott, In the goods of, 73 L. J. P. 17; [1903] P. 243; 89 L. T. 588—Jeune, P.

Mutual Wills—Agreement to Make Mutual Wills Departed from by Testator who Dies First—Notice to Survivor by Reason of the Death—No Relief to Survivor.—The testator who dies first of the two who have made mutual wills, dies with the promise of the survivor that the agreement effectuated by the execution of their wills shall stand, and if the survivor after taking any benefit of the agreement alters his will, although it will stand if validly executed, his personal representative will take the property on trust to perform the contract between the testators, because the will of the testator who dies first becomes irrevocable. Stone v. Hoskins, 74 L. J. P. 110; [1905] P. 194; 93 L. T. 441; 54 W. R. 64; 21 T. L. R. 528—Gorell Barnes, P.

An entirely different conclusion results where the testator who dies first has not stood by his bargain and has revoked his will. In such a case the survivor has notice of the alteration on the death of the testator who dies first, and cannot claim any relief against a later will of the testator who dies first either by way of declaration of trust or otherwise. Id.

Joint and Mutual Will—Part of Document Admitted to Probate.—A husband and wife duly executed a joint and mutual will. Upon the death of the wife in the lifetime of the husband, THE COURT, on his application, executor, made a grant to the husband of so much of the will only as had become operative in consequence of her decease. Piazz-Smyth, In the goods of, 67 L. J. P. 4; [1898] P. 7; 46 W. R. 426—Jeune, P.

3. EXECUTION.

Signature of Testator on First Page of Will only.—A will which was written on three pages of paper was signed by the testatrix and by the attesting witnesses on the first page only:—Held, that the first page of the will ought to be admitted to probate. Millward v. Buswell, 20 T. L. R. 714—Gorell Barnes, J.

Position of Signature.—Though certain pages of a testamentary document are materially subsequent to the signatures of the testator and witnesses, it may be held that the other pages of the document are substantially a part of the will, and that they can be construed for purposes of probate as anterior to the signatures. Gilbert, In the goods of, 78 L. T. 762—Jeune, P.

Part of Will Subsequent to Signature.—A testator executed a testamentary document, which consisted of two pages, and the whole of which was written before execution. The first page, which alone was signed by the testator and the witnesses, contained the major part of the will. It concluded with an unfinished sentence continued on the second page. The second page also contained bequests:—Held, that the first page only could be admitted to probate. Gee, In the goods of, 78 L. T. 843—Gorell Barnes, J.

Signature Made or Acknowledged in Presence of Witnesses—Variance between Attestation Clause and Affidavit—Notice to Next-of-Kin.—A will was holograph, written on one page and signed and attested on another, the signatures being in the nature of an indorsement. The attestation clause stated that the will was "signed" by the testator in the presence of the witnesses, whereas the affidavit of one of them shewed that the will was "acknowledged" but not signed in their presence. THE COURT admitted the will to probate, but doubted whether the next-of-kin ought not to have had notice of the motion. Moore, In the goods of, 70 L. J. P. 16; [1901] P. 44; 84 L. T. 60—Jeune, P.

Attestation Clause—Presumption.—Where a will appears to be duly signed and witnessed, it is a presumption of law that the execution was duly carried out according to the requirement of the Wills Act, 1837, even though the witnesses may afterwards be in doubt as to what took place at the time of its execution. Whiting v. Turner, 89 L. T. 71—Buckmill, J.

No Attestation Clause—Signature of Two Witnesses followed by Signature of Deceased—Both Attesting Witnesses Dead—Handwriting of Deceased and of one Attesting Witness Proved by Affidavit.—A testamentary document in the handwriting of the deceased disposed of certain property and contained no attestation clause, but was signed by two persons, whose signatures were followed by that of the deceased. The three signatures purported to have been signed on the same day. The two persons were dead, but the handwriting of one of them and of the deceased herself were proved by affidavit. There was no other evidence of attestation:—Held, that, the document being testamentary, the Court was justified in assuming that all things were done rightly and in order, and that the document was signed first by the deceased and afterwards by the other two persons, and accordingly made a grant of administration with the will annexed. Peeverett, In the goods of, 71 L. J. P. 114; [1902] P. 205; 87 L. T. 143—Jeune, P.

Attestation.—"In the presence of the testator."—A testator signed his will in his bedroom, and the attesting witnesses added their signature in the adjoining dressing-room, the door between the two rooms being open at the time. On its being shewn that the testator could not have had the witnesses in sight when they attested the will, it was held that the will was not duly executed. Carter v. Seaton, 85 L. T. 76—Gorell Barnes, J.

Subscription and Attestation—Identification of Constituent Portions of Testamentary Document.—The question which portion or portions of a testamentary document have been duly executed is a matter for parol evidence, provided that it be clearly established, so as to avoid fraud, that the several portions were produced to the attesting witnesses at the time of execution or acknowledged in a state of attachment, and that they are identified. It is no objection to the admission to probate of any portion that it does not bear the signature of the testator. Lewis v. Lewis, 77 L. J. P. 7; [1908] P. 1; 98 L. T. 58—Bargrave Deane, J.

Presence of Attesting Witnesses.—Testatrix went into a shop and asked J., who was standing behind the left-hand counter, to witness her signature to her will. Testatrix produced the will and signed it at the left-hand counter, J. meantime facing her and seeing her write. J. then attested her signature. Whilst this was going on, R. was standing in front of the right-hand counter, talking to a person on business. R. did not see what was passing between the testatrix and J., nor could he have done so without shifting his position. After J. had witnessed the signature of the testatrix, the latter walked over to R. and asked him to come round. He did so, and went behind the left-hand counter into the same place that J. had previously occupied. The testatrix then said to R., "This is my will. I have signed it, and J. has signed it. Will you sign it?" R. then signed the will:—Held, that the will was not signed in the presence of the second attesting witness within the meaning of 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 9. Brown v. Skirrow, 71 L. J. P. 19; [1902] P. 3; 85 L. T. 645—Gorell Barnes, J.

Signature of Witnesses in Body of Will.—The attesting witnesses to a will (already signed by the testator) signed their names in a blank space left for the names of the executors in the body of the will, the testator having acknowledged his signature in their presence, and directed them to sign in the space where their names appeared:—Held, on satisfactory proof that the witnesses had signed with the intention of attesting the testator's signature, that this was a valid subscription by the witnesses within section 9 of the Wills Act, but that there was no appointment of executors, as the testator had only acknowledged his signature in the will and had not re-signed it after the witnesses had signed their names in the body of the will. Ellison, In the goods of, [1907] 2 Ir. R. 480—Andrews, J.

Each Sheet of Will Signed and Attested—All Purporting to be Executed on same Date—First Two Sheets in reality Re-copied and Re-signed and Attested Eighteen Months after last Three Sheets.—A testator left a will contained in five sheets of paper. Each of such five sheets was signed by the testator and attested by two witnesses, and the last sheet bore the date of June 16, 1900. In reality the first two sheets of the will had been altered by the testator after June 16, 1900, re-engrossed for him by a firm of law stationers, and re-signed by him and the attesting witness on December 9, 1901:—Held, that, although the acts done by the testator had not been done by him with the intention of revoking the whole will, but that, on the contrary, he intended the will to stand as he had left it, the effect of his destruction of the original first two sheets on the last three was such that the last three sheets became unintelligible and unworkable; that such destruction of the part destroyed the whole; and that the whole will was therefore revoked, and must be pronounced against. Leonard v. Leonard, 71 L. J. P. 117; [1902] P. 243; 87 L. T. 145—Gorell Barnes, J.

Will and Codicil—Separate Constituent Parts of same Testamentary Paper—Effect to be Given to Form of Words Used and Place where Written.—In deciding as to the constituent parts of a testamentary paper, the form of words used and the place where they are written may be immaterial so long as the formalities of the Wills Act, 1837, as to execution are proved to have been satisfied. Where the intention of the testator is clear, and is carried out in a properly executed holograph paper written at the same sitting, such matters as an unusual form of words or the insertion of part of what is written in an unusual place, having, for instance, the appearance of an interlineation in another testamentary paper, will not be regarded as having any technical effect in excluding from probate any part of the testamentary paper so executed. Oldroyd v. Harvey, 76 L. J. P. 161; [1907] P. 326; 98 L. T. 56; 23 T. L. R. 723—Bargrave Deane, J.

A testator, desiring to revoke certain legacies, purported to do so by a second codicil in which the words of revocation were in fact inserted in the middle of a first codicil, and above a formal heading of the second codicil, which was placed below the first codicil. On due proof of execution, the words so inserted were admitted to probate as part of the second codicil. Ib.

Separate Pieces of Paper Fastened by Pin—Arrangement of Pieces.]—A testatrix wrote her will on several sheets of paper pinned together. At the time of the application for probate, the testatrix's signature and the attestation clause was the first of these papers. The Court, being of opinion on the evidence that the sheet containing the signature and attestation clause was originally written last, and therefore at the end of the will, and might have been afterwards inadvertently misplaced, granted probate. Character of evidence to sustain an application on such grounds considered. Madden, In the goods of, [1905] 2 Ir. R. 612—Andrews, J.

Erasures.]—A testator left a will containing three bequests to legatees whose Christian names were written on erasures. THE COURT, being satisfied by expert evidence what were the names under the erasures, in making a grant of administration with the will annexed, ordered the original names to be substituted for those written on the erasures. Brazier, In the goods of, 68 L. J. P. 6; [1899] P. 36; 79 L. T. 472—Gorell Barnes, J.

Supplying Words from Context.]—A testator left his personal property for life to A, with a power of appointment in case of her death unmarried or without issue. There was no gift over in default of appointment; but the power of appointment was given "subject as hereinafter set forth," and in a later clause the testator provided "that in the event of my said daughter, under the circumstances before detailed, in case of non-marriage or no issue living at the time of her decease," all his property was to go to certain persons named:—Held, that it was clear that some word or words was or were omitted in the latter clause which provided for the event of the daughter doing or not doing something, but did not say what, and that the Court should supply the words "failing to exercise the said power of appointment" in order to effectuate the testator's intention, which had been imperfectly expressed, but was to be gathered from the context and the whole will. Munro v. Henderson, [1907] 1 Ir. R. 440—Barton, J.

Omission in Will Supplied by Inference—Mis-copying.]—Where upon the construction of a will it is clear that words have been omitted from the will, owing to its having been mis-copied, the Court will supply the necessary words, where it can be inferred from other parts of the will what the testator intended should be inserted. Dictum of KNIGHT-BRUCE, L.J., in Key v. Key (22 L. J. Ch., at p. 647; 4 De G. M. & G. 73) approved. Phillips v. Rail, 54 W. R. 517—Swinfen Eady, J.

Knowledge and Approval by Testator—Presumption of Law—Will Read over by Testator of Sound Mind, &c.—Words Inserted by Mistake of Solicitor.]—Although a will may have been read by or read over to a testator of sound mind, memory, and understanding, and in every way competent to comprehend the purport of it, it is nevertheless competent to the Court to hold that it was not properly read by or read over to the testator, and that he did not know and approve of its contents, if, on the consideration of all the facts and special circumstances of the case, the Court should be of opinion that it ought to do so. Guardhouse v. Blackburn (35 L. J. P. 116; L. R. 1 P. & D. 109); Fullon v. Andrew (44 L. J. P. 17; L. R. 7 H.L. 448) reviewed. Garnett Botfield v. Garnett Botfield, 71 L. J. P. 1; [1901] P. 335; 85 L. T. 641—Jeune, P.

Testator's Knowledge of Contents of Will—Benefit to Person Drawing the Will—Findings of Jury—New Trial.]—Where a jury are not satisfied that a will, mainly in favour of the person who prepared it, was read over to the testator, and have found that the testator did not know and approve of the legacy to such person, the jury's expression of opinion of the testator's intention is no ground for a new trial, or for revocation of the probate of the will excluding such bequest. Farrelly v. Corrigan, 68 L. J. P.C. 133; [1899] A.C. 563—P.C.

Re-execution or Republication of Will—Subsequent Codicil—Incorporation of Document.]—Where a will, if treated as executed on the date of a codicil and read as speaking from that date, contains language which may be taken to refer to a certain document, such document may be incorporated and admitted to probate, although it was not in existence at the date of the execution of the will, provided it came into existence before the date of the execution of the codicil. Rendle, In the goods of, 68 L. J. P. 125—Gorell Barnes, J.

A testatrix executed her last will March 28, 1888, together with four codicils thereto dated respectively August 20, 1890, March 17, 1891, June 7, 1893, and May 22, 1894. She died March 4, 1899. In her will of 1888 she referred to a certain "list of articles." After her death a "list of articles" was found in her tin box answering the description in the will of 1888. It was, however, executed as a will in several places, the dates of such executions being respectively December 15, 1890, April 21, 1892, March 21, 1893, and October 1, 1894:—Held, that the execution of the codicil of May 22, 1894, republished or re-executed the will of March 28, 1888, which must be taken to speak from the later date, and that the will and codicils must be admitted to probate, together with so much of the list of articles as upon examination should be found to have been executed before the date of the last codicil, May 22, 1894. Truro (Lady), In the goods of (35 L. J. P. 89; L. R. 1 P. & D. 201), followed. Ib.

4. UNDUE INFLUENCE.

What is.—The definition of undue influence given by HANNEN, P., in Wingrove v. Wingrove (55 L. J. P. 7; 11 P. D. 81), that there must be "coercion," and not merely persuasion or inducement, however improper that may be, approved. Baudains v. Richardson, 75 L. J. P. C. 57; [1906] A.C. 169; 94 L. T. 290; 22 T. L. R. 333—P.C. And see col. 2616.

5. REVOCATION.

Several Papers—Intention—Dispositions of Property—"Last and only" Will.—In the absence of express words of revocation in a later testamentary paper, the admissibility to probate along with it of an earlier paper is a matter of intention to be sought from the dispositions of property made by the testator. Simpson v. Foxon, 76 L. J. P. 7; [1907] P. 54; 96 L. T. 473; 23 T. L. R. 150—Gorell Barnes, P.

The question which paper or what number of papers the testator desired or expected to be admitted to probate is not the true test. Ib.

A testator duly executed a formal will disposing of his entire estate and appointing executors. At a later date, on a printed form commencing with the words, "This is the last and only will," he purported to deal only with certain policy moneys and appointed an executor.—Held, that the words "last and only" effected no revocation of the earlier will. The principle of Lemage v. Goodban (35 L. J. P. 28, at p. 30; L. R. 1 P. & D. 57, at p. 62) followed. Ib.

Two Inconsistent Wills—No Clause of Revocation or Residuary Gift in Second Will—Intention—Extrinsic Evidence.—The question whether a later testamentary paper is so far inconsistent with an earlier paper as to revoke it is one of intention to be implied on the construction not of the form, but of the substance, of the later paper, and the earlier will be revoked by the later if it can be collected that by the later the testator intended to dispose of his property in a different manner from that in which he disposed of it by the earlier, although in fact the later will may not dispose of all the property of the testator. Bryan, In the goods of, 76 L. J. P. 30; [1907] P. 125; 96 L. T. 534—Gorell Barnes, P.

If the intention of the testator remains doubtful on the face of the document, evidence of the surrounding circumstances dehors the document may be admitted. See Iquere, whether this proposition goes further than to permit the Court to place itself by enquiry in the place of the testator when he sat down to write his will so that it may know to what he was applying his mind. Ib.

A testatrix, by a will made in 1864, bequeathed several legacies, appointed two executors, and formally bequeathed the residue of her estate. By a subsequent codicil she dealt with one of the legacies. By a still later will, executed in 1867, the deceased repeated the substance of the first will except as to the residue, which was now undisposed of, appointed the same executors, and omitted any clause of revocation of former wills. Both wills expressed the beneficial bequests to be subject to payment of debts.—Held, that, even without considering evidence, dehors the later will, of the circumstances under which it was executed, although such evidence was forthcoming and admissible, the second will revoked the first. Ib.

By Operation of Law—Devise of Real Estate—Subsequent Conveyance to Testator.—A testator, by his will made in 1832, devised certain freehold property which he had contracted to purchase, but the purchase of which had not been completed at the date of the will, and all other his real estate wheresoever and whatsoever, to his three sons in manner therein mentioned. In 1834 the property which the testator had contracted to purchase was conveyed to him in fee to uses to bar dower. In 1835 the testator died.—Held, that the conveyance of 1834 operated as a revocation of the devise in the will of the freehold property so conveyed. Jacob v. Jacob, 82 L. T. 270—H.L. (E.)

Will Made and not Forthcoming at Death—Presumption—Rebuttal—Declaration of Testator.—If a will duly executed was in the testator's possession when last seen, and is not forthcoming after his death, there is a presumption of law that he destroyed it animo revocandi, but that presumption may be rebutted by evidence of facts. A letter written by the testator after the will that he had cancelled it is not evidence of an effective revocation, but it is admissible in evidence as shewing the state of mind and intention of the testator. The evidence in the particular case held, by FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., and BUCKLEY, L.J. (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., dissenting), not to be sufficient to rebut the presumption. The dictum of LORD PENZANCE in Finch v. Finch (L. R. 1 P. 371), that "to support the presumption that Court must be satisfied that it (the will) was not in existence at the time of death," dissented from. Sykes, In re; Drake v. Sykes, 23 T. L. R. 747—C.A.

Destruction of Will after Execution of Codicil—Mistake.—A testator, having duly executed a codicil to his last will, destroyed the latter document under the impression that it was of no further use. The Court admitted the contents of the will as set forth in a draft thereof, together with the codicil, to probate. Beardsley v. Lacey, 67 L. J. P. 35; 78 L. T. 25—Jeune, P.

"Writing declaring intention to revoke"—Form of Grant.—Where a testatrix duly executed a paper writing, practically amounting to a declaration of intention to revoke her existing will, the Court, in pronouncing for revocation and intestacy, ordered a grant of administration to go as in intestacy, with a note thereon that the grant was so made in consequence of the execution of the aforesaid paper writing, but without annexing the paper writing to the grant. Toomer v. Sobinska, 76 L. J. P. 19; [1907] P. 106; 96 L. T. 475—Bargrave Deane, J.

Will Torn up by Testator when Intoxicated—Pieces Pasted Together again by him when Sober—Grant on Motion—Infant Next-of-Kin Consenting.]—Where a will had been destroyed by the testator when drunk, and the pieces pasted together by him next day when sober, and it was evident he wished the will to stand,—THE COURT, the estate being worth 1,300*l.*, granted probate to the executrix and universal legatee named in the will, on motion, without requiring the will to be propounded, with the consent of the next-of-kin, although such next-of-kin were infants and were prejudicially affected by the will. Apted, In the goods of (68 L. J. P. 123; [1899] P. 272), followed. Brassington, In the goods of, 71 L. J. P. 9; [1902] P. 1; 85 L. T. 644—Gorell Barnes, J.

Directions to Destroy Will.]—A testatrix, in a letter addressed to her daughter, which was signed by her in the presence of two witnesses, directed her will to be destroyed:—Held, that the letter was a writing declaring an intention to revoke the will, though, not being of a testamentary character, it was not admitted to probate; but liberty was given to a next-of-kin to apply for a grant, as in the case of intestacy. Eyre, In the goods of, [1905] 2 Ir. R. 540—Andrews, J.

Revocation by Marriage.]—The rule of English law which makes a woman's will null and void on her marriage is part of the matrimonial, and not of the testamentary law. Per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J. Martin, In re; Loustalan v. Loustalan, 69 L. J. P. 75; [1900] P. 211; 82 L. T. 806; 48 W. R. 509—C.A.

—Execution According to Foreign Law by Foreigner Resident in England—Subsequent Marriage in England—Domicil.]—The provision of English law by which a will is revoked by the subsequent marriage of the testator is part of the testamentary and not part of the matrimonial law of England. Loustalan v. Loustalan, 68 L. J. P. 106; 81 L. T. 459—Jeune, P.

Where a Frenchwoman in 1870 executed in England a will valid according to French law, and subsequently (in 1874) married a Frenchman in England, and continued to reside in England up to the time of her death in January, 1895,—THE COURT (having first found that the domicile of the testatrix was French at the time of her death) held, that although it was a fair inference from the evidence that the parties at the time intended to marry according to English matrimonial law, and to be bound by the English régime rather than by the French law of Communauté, the will of the testatrix was not revoked by her subsequent marriage, and ought to be admitted to probate. Id.

Document Inoperative by Statute—Testamentary on Face of it.]—Section 25 of the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1893, enables a member of a registered society to sign a nomination paper stating to whom his property in the society shall pass at his death, and under such document such property passes at once on his decease. This power of nomination is, however, subject to certain limitations, one of which is that such property must not exceed 100*l.* sterling. Where a member of such a society signed a nomination paper in the presence of two witnesses but his property was above the value of 100*l.* sterling,—Held, that, although the document was inoperative under the statute, nevertheless, being testamentary on the face of it, and having been duly executed in accordance with the provisions of the Will Act, 1837, it would take effect as a will and ought to be admitted to probate. Baxter, In the goods of, 72 L. J. P. 2; [1903] P. 12—Gorell Barnes, J.

Exercise of Appointment by Will—Words “give, devise, bequeath and appoint” —No further or other Reference to Power.]—A testator executed a will in 1894 wherein he purported to exercise a power of appointment over certain property in which he took a life interest under the terms of his father's will. In 1896 he executed a second will, whereby he did not in terms revoke the will of 1894, and which did not in terms allude to the power of appointment or purport to execute it. The second will, however, contained the words, “I give, devise, bequeath and appoint all my real and personal estate whatsoever unto my trustees upon trust. . .” THE COURT, following Mayhew, In re; Spencer v. Outbush (70 L. J. Ch. 428; [1901] 1 Ch. 677), held that the use of the word “appoint,” taken with the context and surrounding circumstances, was a sufficient exercise of the power, and that the will of 1894 was revoked. Kent v. Kent, 71 L. J. P. 50; [1902] P. 108; 86 L. T. 536—Jeune, P.

Trusts Containing Power of Appointment—Codicil—Intention to Vary—Trusts Declared Afresh—No Reference to Power.]—By his will dated February 6, 1892, the testator declared (inter alia) that, as to one-eighth share of his residuary estate, it should be held by executors on certain trusts. These trusts provided that the income of the said share should be paid to the testator's son T. W. until “he should become bankrupt or do or suffer something whereby the said income if belonging absolutely to him or some part thereof would become payable to or vested in some other person”; and, on determination in the lifetime of T. W. of the above trust, that the income should be applied during the remainder of T. W.'s life in favour of certain other specified persons; and after the decease of T. W., that the share should be divided among his children; “provided always that the said T. W. might by deed or will appoint that the whole or any part of the income of the said share should after his death be paid to his widow (if any) during her life or for any less period.” T. W. became bankrupt early in 1893. By a codicil dated July 27, 1893, the testator declared his intention to vary the trusts of the share of T. W., and in pursuance thereof declared that such share should be held by his trustees upon the trusts thereafter recited. The trusts so recited made provision in the event of T. W. being prevented by reason of antecedent bankruptcy or by the happening of any other event from enjoying the life interest if it were given to him. In other respects, the trusts so cited followed the trusts in the will, except that do mention whatever was made of the power given by the will to T. W. to appoint to his widow. The trusts in the will were not expressly revoked by the codicil:—Held, that the power of appointment still subsisted. Wood, In re; Wood v. Wood, 83 L. T. 157—Farwell, J.

Dependent Relative Revocation.]—Testator duly executed a will on December 16, 1887, whereby he left all his property to his wife, subject to a legacy of 2,000*l.* to a niece whom they had brought up. On May 1, 1897, he executed a second will, whereby he left his property to his wife for life, with remainder to a sister-in-law. On April 6, 1899, he executed a third will, revoking all previous wills. This will benefited his wife to a greater extent than the will of May 1, 1897, but not to the same extent as the will of December 16, 1887. On May 24, 1899, it being his wedding day, testator told his wife it should not pass without the destruction of the will of April 6, 1899, in which he said he had been unjust to her; and he said he wished his property to go by the will of December 16, 1887. The servant was ordered to come into the room that she might be present when the will was destroyed, and in her presence the testator tore it up and gave her the pieces to burn, repeating to her first what he had previously said to his wife:—Held, that testator destroyed the will of April 6, 1899, with the sole intention, wish, and expectation, and in the belief that the result of such destruction would be to revive and set up the will of December 16, 1887, and that therefore the doctrine of dependent relative revocation applied, and the Court pronounced for the will of April 6, 1899, as contained in a draft propounded by the plaintiff. Powell v. Powell (85 L. J. P. 100; L. R. 1 P. & D. 209) followed. Cossey v. Cossey, 69 L. J. P. 17; 82 L. T. 203; 64 J. P. 89—Bucknill, J.

Unfulfilled Intention to Execute Fresh Testamentary Paper—Interval of Time.]—In order to apply the doctrine of dependent relative revocation, it is not necessary that at the time of the actual revocation there should be in existence an earlier valid document which the testator intends to revive. The doctrine may extend to cases where there is an intention not in fact fulfilled to execute a fresh testamentary paper. The question of intention is one of fact to be determined on the circumstances of each individual case. Dixon v. Treasury Solicitor, 74 L. J. P. 33; [1905] P. 42; 92 L. T. 427; 21 T. L. R. 145—Gorell Barnes, J.

Quere—In the case of intention to execute a fresh paper, what interval (if any) of time elapsing between the date of actual revocation and death ensuing without any further testamentary act will debar a testator from the benefit of the doctrine and cause him to die intestate? Id.

Settlement—Mistake.]—A testator, in 1882, after his second marriage, made a will whereby, among other things, he appointed certain funds comprised in a settlement made on his first marriage amongst the issue of such marriage. Subsequently, in 1895, he executed a fresh will containing no allusion to the settlement, or dealing in any way with the property comprised therein, and at the same time he revoked the will of 1882. THE COURT, being satisfied by evidence that at the time the testator revoked the will of 1882 he only did so under the erroneous impression that the settlement would by its own force and effect give the property to the children of his first marriage, and that therefore the will of 1882 was useless, and that he all along intended his children by his first wife to be benefited substantially as they were benefited by the will of 1882, and thought they would be so benefited by the effect of the settlement itself, held it was a case of dependent relative revocation, and admitted the will to probate. Stamford v. White, 70 L. J. P. 9; [1901] P. 46; 84 L. T. 269—Jeune, P.

Three Testamentary Documents—Power of Appointment—Exercise by Will.]—A testatrix who, besides other property, was entitled to a sum of 4,000*l.* under the will of her father for life, with power of appointment by will among her children, left three testamentary documents, dated respectively 1890, 1894, and 1895. By the will of 1890 she bequeathed to her daughter G. the sum of 4,000*l.* absolutely, for her use and benefit, "being the sum left me by my late father, &c." By the will of 1894 she left 4,000*l.* to her daughter G. without specifying any fund. By the will of 1895 she left all her property to her daughter G., with remainder over in case she should predecease her. Neither the will of 1894 nor the will of 1895 contained any words of revocation:—Held, first, that the will of 1890 was a sufficient execution of the power; and secondly, that in the absence at least of a general revocatory clause, the fact that the will of 1895 disposed of the whole property was not by itself sufficient to revoke the execution of the power effected by the will of 1890. Cadell v. Wilcocks, 67 L. J. P. 8; [1898] P. 21; 78 L. T. 83; 46 W. R. 394—Jeune, P.

Lost Will.]—See col. 2773.

6. WILL AND CODICIL.

Inconsistency—Intention—Consent.]—Where there are two inconsistent testamentary documents, and the Court is satisfied that the second document, though purporting to be a last will and testament, was only intended to operate as a codicil of the former will, and there is no objection raised on the part of other parties interested, probate will be granted of both documents, the second being considered to be a codicil only. Summers, In the goods of, 84 L. T. 271—Gorell Barnes, J.

Two Codicils of Same Date—No Evidence as to Priority of Execution—Inconsistency.]—Prima facie, every document purporting to be testamentary and executed in accordance with the provisions of the Wills Act ought to be admitted to probate. This presumption may be displaced where there is more than one document if there is a sequence in the dates of the documents which, coupled with the words of the later, leads to the inference that the later was meant to be a revocation in whole or in part of the earlier, or if the documents are proved to have been executed on the same date and occasion, or are undated, and it is impossible to say which was executed first, and they are so inconsistent that they cannot stand together. Townsend v. Moore, 74 L. J. P. 17; [1905] P. 66; 92 L. T. 335; 53 W. R. 338—C.A.

Where, however, two testamentary documents are duly executed on the same day and occasion, and practically simultaneously, and the circumstances are such as to lead to the inference that they were both intended to be effective, then though there are apparent inconsistencies both will be admitted to probate, unless they are so inconsistent that they cannot stand together; and in determining that question the Court will, so far as possible, read the words of the documents so as to support the admissibility of both to probate, even though the construction should be one which the Court would not have otherwise arrived at. The statement of the law in 1 Williams on Executors (7th ed. p. 162; 8th ed. p. 138) approved. Ib.

Codicil—Revocation—Revival.—A testatrix made a will dated January 31, 1888. By a subsequent codicil dated August 1, 1893, and headed: "Memorandum for my trustee A. W. G.," the sole surviving executor and trustee of the will, she disposed of the whole of her property without any specific appointment of an executor. By another will made abroad she confirmed her will "made in England in or about the year 1889," and thereby disposed only of her property situate abroad, of which latter will she appointed another executor:—Held, that probate of all three documents might be granted to A. W. G. as executor, with liberty to the foreign executor to come in. Green, In the goods of, 79 L. T. 738—Gorell Barnes, J.

Mistaken Reference to Will Already Destroyed—Revival.—Where a testator refers by mistake in a codicil to a will, which has not only been revoked but actually destroyed at the time of the execution of such codicil, the Court may, if satisfied that such reference is a pure mistake and that the testator intended to refer to an existing will, grant probate of the codicil, omitting the words of reference which have been inserted by mistake. But it is otherwise if the will referred to by mistake is in existence at the time of the execution of the codicil. Reade, In the goods of, 71 L. J. P. 45; [1902] P. 75; 86 L. T. 258—Gorell Barnes, J.

A testator executed a will on January 10, 1895, with two codicils thereto later on in the same year. In 1898 he executed his last will, with one codicil thereto in 1899 and another in 1900. In the codicil of 1900 he referred to his will "dated January 10, 1895." There was evidence—first, that this was a mistake, and that the reference should have been to the will of 1898; and secondly, that the wills and codicils of 1895, which had been duly revoked by the will of 1898, had been destroyed by the testator at the time of its execution. THE COURT admitted the will of 1898 and the two codicils thereto to probate, omitting from the second codicil the reference to the will of January 10, 1895. Rogers v. Goodenough (31 L. J. P. 49; 2 Sw. & Tr. 342) followed. Ib.

Semble, that if the will of January 10, 1895, had been in existence and not destroyed at the time of the execution of the codicil of 1900, the reference to it in that codicil, although inserted by mistake, would have operated as a revival. Ib.

Republication of Will Referred to by Date—Codicil not Mentioned.—The testator made a will dated October 21, 1895, and a codicil thereto dated October 31, 1895. He made a new will, revoking all previous testamentary instruments on November 18, 1896, but he revoked this will by tearing it on January 7, 1897. He then on January 15, 1897, made two codicils, one republishing the will of October 21, 1895, written on the same sheet of paper as that will, and referring to it as "my above written will," and the other stated to be a codicil to the will of October 21, 1895, making a few different bequests, but in all other respects confirming the same:—Held, that the codicil of October 31, 1895, was not republished, and that probate should be granted only of the will of October 21, 1895, and the two codicils of January 15, 1897. Burton v. Newbery (1 Ch. D. 234) explained. Gordon v. Reay (Lord (5 Sim. 274) questioned. French v. Hoey, [1899] 2 Ir. R. 472—Andrews, J.

Unsigned and Unattested Cancellation of Three Legacies—Subsequent Codicil Revoking only One—Effect.—Where a testator after execution of his will makes alterations without further signature or attestation and then by codicil confirms "his will," it is in every case a question of construction what the instrument is which the testator by his codicil intends to confirm—whether it is his will as originally executed or his will as subsequently altered by him. Hay, In re; Kerr v. Stinmean, 73 L. J. Ch. 33; [1904] 1 Ch. 317; 52 W. R. 92—Buckley, J.

A testatrix by her will gave certain legacies to A, B, and C. Subsequently her maid, at her direction, drew her pen through the names of the three legatees. Two days later the testatrix executed a codicil to her will, by which she revoked the legacy to A, and concluded by stating that in all other respects she ratified and confirmed her will:—Held, that the instrument which she confirmed by the codicil was her original will without the alterations, and that the legacies to A, B, and C were therefore good under the will, but that one of them having been revoked by the codicil the remaining two only were payable. Ib.

Will and Two Codicils—Erasures and Alterations—One Codicil Undated—Will and Codicils Admitted to Probate on Motion.—A deceased person left a will and two codicils thereto. The will was in every way formal. The first codicil, which was entirely in the handwriting of the deceased, was duly executed but contained certain erasures. The second codicil, which was also entirely in the handwriting of the deceased, was duly executed in the presence of two witnesses, but was undated. The interests of six infants were affected by the codicils. THE COURT, being satisfied of the due execution of the codicils, and that it was in reality to the interest of the infants that they should be established without further expense, admitted all three documents to probate on motion. O'Brien, In the goods of, 69 L. J. P. 55; [1900] P. 208—Jeune, P.

Separate Constituent Parts of same Testamentary Paper—Effect to be Given to Form of Words Used and Place where Written.]—In deciding as to the constituent parts of a testamentary paper, the form of words used and the place where they are written may be immaterial so long as the formalities of the Wills Act, 1837, as to execution are proved to have been satisfied. Where the intention of the testator is clear, and is carried out in a properly executed holograph paper written at the same sitting, such matters as an unusual form of words or the insertion of part of what is written in an unusual place, having, for instance, the appearance of an interlineation in another testamentary paper, will not be regarded as having any technical effect in excluding from probate any part of the testamentary paper so executed. Oldroyd v. Harvey, 76 L. J. P. 161; [1907] P. 326; 23 T. L. R. 728—Bargrave Deane, J.

A testator, desiring to revoke certain legacies, purported to do so by a second codicil in which the words of revocation were in fact inserted in the middle of a first codicil, and above a formal heading of the second codicil, which was placed below the first codicil. On due proof of execution, the words so inserted were admitted to probate as part of the second codicil. Ib.

English Will and Codicil—American Will Dealing Solely with American Property—Copy of American Will to be Lodged.]—In a probate action the jury found for the will and codicil propounded by the plaintiffs, and the Court had accordingly pronounced for them. At the Probate Registry the officials refused to deliver out probate until either an American will, which the testator had made dealing solely with his American property, or an exemplification of probate thereof was lodged:—Held, that probate of the English will and codicil should issue on the plaintiffs' lodging a copy of the American will. Paul, In re; Gilmer v. Overman, 23 T. L. R. 716—Bucknill, J.

7. PROBATE.

(a) Grant of.

Document partly Testamentary admitted to Probate.]—Where a document, duly executed as a will, is partly testamentary and partly not testamentary, the Court has jurisdiction to admit the testamentary part of the document to probate. Wolfe v. Wolfe, [1902] 2 Ir. R. 246—Andrews, J.

Colonial Grant of Probate—Re-sealing—Jurisdiction.]—On being satisfied that a Colonial grant has been properly made, the Court has jurisdiction under the Colonial Probates Act, 1892, to direct re-sealing. Smith, In the goods of, 73 L. J. P. 28; [1904] P. 114; 90 L. T. 169; 20 T. L. R. 119—Bucknill, J.

Foreign Domicil—Marriage—English Domicil subsequently Acquired.]—Section 3 of the Wills Act, 1861, the title of which is, "An Act to amend the law with respect to wills of personal estate made by British subjects," is not limited in its operation to the wills of British subjects, but extends to the will of a foreign testatrix, made before her marriage, and in strict conformity with the law of her foreign domicil at that time, according to which, marriage does not revoke a will. Groos, In the goods of, 73 L. J. P. 82; [1904] P. 269; 9 L. T. 322—Gorell Barnes, J.

Foreign Will—Revoked Codicil—Foreign Grant—Exemplification.]—A testator died domiciled in India, leaving a will and two codicils, one of which had been revoked. The Indian Court granted probate of the will and both codicils:—Held, that probate might be granted here of the exemplification probate granted in India, notwithstanding that it comprised a revoked codicil. Gubbey, In the goods of, 80 L. T. 808—Gorell Barnes, J.

Property in England—Extracts from Will.]—Where the will of a foreigner resident abroad was proved by the executor in the foreign Court, and the testatrix died possessed of property in England, the Court refused to make a grant to the executor of administration with extracts from the will annexed, such extracts relating to the English property and being furnished by the foreign Court to enable the application to be made. Von Faber (Baroness), In the goods of, 20 T. L. R. 640—Jeune, J.

Alien—Marriage Subsequent to Execution of Will and Prior to Acquiring English Domicil—Grant of Probate, Limited in Time.]—A Dutch subject domiciled in Holland made her will and afterwards married, which, by the law of the domicil, effected no revocation of her will. She subsequently became domiciled here, whilst retaining Dutch allegiance, and died here:—Held, her will entitled to probate in England, in spite of the marriage subsequent to its execution but before the change of domicil. Ib.

By the law of her foreign domicil the powers of the executor were limited in time. The Court, following that law, made a grant of probate here, limited in time. Ib.

Will in Custody of Foreign Court—Notarial Copy—Exemplification.]—Even where a will is in the possession of a foreign Court merely for purposes of custody and not for purposes of probate, the Court here will not admit a notarial copy to probate, but will require the original will or a copy authenticated by the foreign Court. Brown, In the goods of, 80 L. T. 360—Jeune, P.

Incorporation of Documents—Unattested Memorandum.]—In order that an executed testamentary paper may incorporate an unattested document two factors are necessary. First, the document must be shown to have existed at the time of the execution of the executed paper, for which purpose parol evidence is clearly admissible; and secondly, the document must be referred to in the executed paper in such terms as contemplate a then existing document and identify the particular document in question. This latter proposition is a matter involving the proper construction of the language used in the executed paper; and, in deciding that, extrinsic evidence is admissible to such an extent and of such circumstances as will enable the Court to place itself in the situation of the testator, the meaning of whose language it is called upon to decide. University College of North Wales v. Taylor, 76 L. J. P. 49; [1907] P. 228; 96 L. T. 587; 23 T. L. R. 395—Gorell Barnes, P. Reversed in C.A., 24 T. L. R. 29.

— Probate of Codicil to Non-existent Will.]

—The substance of the draft of a will which is not proved to have been executed or to exist is not incorporated by the execution of a subsequent codicil, referring in terms to a will supposed by the person who draws the codicil to have been validly executed in accordance with what is expressed in the draft will. Such a codicil, however, may be admitted to probate as a valid testamentary paper in itself, though its expressed dependence upon the will, which is not shown to have been executed or to exist, may necessitate resort to a Court of construction. Eyre v. Eyre, 72 L. J. P. 45; [1903] P. 131; 88 L. T. 567; 51 W. R. 701—Bucknill, J.

— Evidence—Inadmissibility of Statements of Testator to Prove Execution of Will.]

—The acquiescence by a testator in the preparation of such a codicil and the execution of it by him, and his statements at the time, are not admissible evidence to prove the existence or execution of a will in accordance with the draft. Ib.

— Reference to Document to be afterwards Executed.]—A book or other document referred to in a testamentary paper cannot be incorporated unless it is in existence at the time of the execution of such testamentary paper, and is actually referred to as an existing and not as a future document. Smart, In the goods of, 71 L. J. P. 123; [1902] P. 238; 87 L. T. 142—Gorell Barnes, J.

So, where a will contained the following words, "I direct my trustees to give such of my friends as I may designate in a book or memorandum that will be found with this will, the different articles specified for such friends in such book or memorandum," and subsequently the testatrix did write up such book or memorandum, and after she had so written it up executed a codicil which did not refer in any way to such book or memorandum, but confirmed the will with certain alterations,—Held, that, although the will was republished by the codicil and must be taken to speak from the date of such codicil, the allusion therein to the "book or memorandum" was still to a "future" and not to an "existing" document, and that therefore such "book or memorandum" was not incorporated, and could not be included in the probate. Ib.

— Unattested Document — Admission of Parol Evidence.]—Testator, by will made in June, 1905, bequeathed a legacy of 10,000*l.* to each of the plaintiff institutions upon trust to apply the same in founding scholarships to be held upon such terms and subject to such rules "as are contained in any memorandum amongst my papers written or signed by me relating thereto." There was then in existence a memorandum of March, 1905, containing terms and rules addressed to the executors of his will, which had been written by the testator shortly after making a former will bequeathing similar legacies, and the executors sought to include this memorandum in the probate of the will of June, 1905, and adduced parol evidence to shew that it was in fact the document referred to by the testator:—Held, that, on the true construction of the will, the testator intended to include any future memorandum; that parol evidence was not therefore admissible to shew that the testator was referring to the memorandum of March, 1905; and that this document ought not to be included in the probate of the will. University College of North Wales v. Taylor, 77 L. J. P. 20; [1908] P. 140; 24 T. L. R. 29—C.A.

— Two Paper Writings—Grant to Executors Named in the Two Instruments.]

—Where probate was granted of two testamentary papers as together constituting the last will of a testator, the grant was made to the two executors named in the first instrument and one executor named in the second instrument, the second executor named in the latter document having renounced. Strahan, In the goods of, [1907] 2 Ir. R. 484—Andrews, J.

— Two Wills — English and Foreign Wills — Incorporation.]

—The testatrix, who was an American by birth, but had married an English subject, executed in 1898 an English and an American will dealing with different properties. There were separate sets of executors appointed under each will. In 1903 the testatrix executed an English will in which reference was made to a French will and to the American will of 1898. This last English will revoked the earlier English will of 1898, but contained a specific declaration that it did not extend to her property in the United States nor to her property in France. The French will could not be found:—Held, that probate should be granted of the English will of 1903 without incorporating either the American or the French will. Schenley, In the goods of, 20 T. L. R. 127—Bucknill, J.

— Clerical Error—Striking out Word Inserted in Will by Mistake.]

—Where it is clear that a word has been inserted in a will by mistake, the Court will order it to be struck out, but will not, under any circumstances, order another word to be substituted for it. Bushell, In the goods of (57 L. J. P. 16; 13 P. D. 7), and Huddleston, In the goods of (63 L. T. 255), not followed. Schott, In the goods of, 70 L. J. P. 46; [1901] P. 190; 84 L. T. 571—Jeune, P.

— — When it is clear that a word has been inserted into a will by mistake in the process of copying, the Court will cause such word to be struck out. Vaughan v. Clerk, 87 L. T. 144—Jeune, P.

— Omission of Words from Probate—Words Inserted by Mistake of Solicitor.]

—Certain words introduced into a will by mistake of the solicitor who prepared it, he being under the impression that the testatrix was possessed only of an "undivided moiety" of an estate, whereas she was possessed of the whole interest therein, completely altered the testamentary intentions of the testatrix. THE COURT, there being no direct evidence that the will or the draft had been read by the testatrix or had been read over to her, and the inference from such evidence as there was being all the other way, granted probate of the will with the omission of the words inserted by mistake. Brisco v. Baillie Hamilton, 71 L. J. P. 121; [1902] P. 234; 87 L. T. 746—Jeune, J.

Ambiguity—Partial Blank in Description of Legatee and Executrix—More than one Individual Answering Description Given—Parol Evidence Admitted in Explanation.—Where the meaning of the will is neither ambiguous nor obscure, and a gift or appointment of an executor in it is on the face of the document perfect and intelligible, but from circumstances admitted in proof an ambiguity arises as to which of two or more persons, each answering the description, is intended, parol evidence is admissible in explanation. A complete blank in a will cannot be filled up in this way, but parol evidence may be resorted to in order to explain, with reference to a partial blank, words which of themselves have a reasonable meaning. The words in a will, "my granddaughter," followed by a blank, in the description of a legatee and executrix, in a case where the testatrix had in fact three granddaughters, explained by evidence dehors of intention. Hubbuck, In the goods of, 74 L. J. P. 58; [1905] P. 129; 92 L. T. 665; 54 W. R. 16; 21 T. L. R. 333—Gorell Barnes, P.

Married Woman—Assent of Husband—Probate—Probate Registrars Rules, 15 and 18.—Since the amended rules (15 and 18) for the Probate Registrars in non-contentious business took effect—namely, on April 19, 1887—a grant to a husband of probate of the will of his wife does not necessarily operate as an assent to the will as a disposition of property which she had no right to dispose of by will without his assent. Held, further, that upon the true construction of the will the property in dispute was not included in the bequest, and the question of assent did not arise. Atkinson, In re; Waller v. Atkinson, 68 L. J. Ch. 404; [1899] 2 Ch. 1; 80 L. T. 505; 47 W. R. 469—C.A.

Personalty Abroad—Certified Copy.—Where a later will confirms an earlier will, dealing only with assets out of the jurisdiction, both wills must be proved. Where a will has been filed in a Court in the colonies for probate, but has not yet been proved, a certified copy issuing from that Court will be admitted to probate. Western, in the goods of, 78 L. T. 49—Gorell Barnes, J.

Lost Will—Evidence—Presumption of Destruction by Testator.—The presumption arising from the facts of a will being traced to the testator's possession and its non-production at his death that it was destroyed by him animo cancellandi can only be rebutted by such evidence as produces moral conviction that it was not so destroyed. Allan v. Morrison, 69 L. J. P.O. 141; [1900] A.C. 604—P.C.

—Motion to Establish Copy—Consent of Next-of-Kin.—Notwithstanding the decision in Pearson, in the goods of (66 L. J. P. 8; [1896] P. 289), the Court may under special circumstances, in a very clear case, admit a copy of a lost will to probate or administration with the will annexed, on motion, without requiring the consent of all the persons interested in intestacy. Apted, In the goods of, 68 L. J. P. 123; [1899] P. 272; 81 L. T. 459—Gorell Barnes, J.

H. died, leaving a will, whereof she appointed A. sole executrix and universal legatee. A. died without having proved the will of H., leaving a will whereby she appointed B. sole executrix and universal legatee thereof. B. lost or mislaid the will of H. The estate of H. consisted of personalty 5l. 2s. 6d., and realty 192l. There were several persons entitled in distribution to the personalty. The heir-at-law consenting, and all the other persons interested in intestacy having had due notice of the application, the Court made a grant of administration with a copy of the original will of H. annexed, on motion, without requiring the consent of all the other persons interested in intestacy. Ib.

—Draft—Probate—Testatrix Confined in a Lunatic Asylum.—After making her will a testatrix became of unsound mind, and was confined in a lunatic asylum. The will was seen after the date of the removal to the asylum, but was missing after the death of the testatrix. With the consent of the Master in Lunacy and of the receiver of the deceased's property, appointed under the Lunacy Act of 1890, the Court granted probate of the draft of the will made by the testatrix to her next-of-kin. Crandon, In the goods of, 84 L. T. 330—Gorell Barnes, J.

Statutory Nomination—Document Inoperative by Statute—Testamentary on Face of it.—Section 25 of the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1893, enables a member of a registered society to sign a nomination paper stating to whom his property in the society shall pass at his death, and under such documents such property passes at once on his decease. This power of nomination is, however, subject to certain limitations, one of which is that such property must not exceed 100l. sterling. Where a member of such a society signed a nomination paper in the presence of two witnesses, but his property was above the value of 100l. sterling, Held, that although the document was inoperative under the statute, nevertheless, being testamentary on the face of it and having been duly executed in accordance with the provisions of the Wills Act, 1837, it would take effect as a will and ought to be admitted to probate. Baxter, In the goods of, 72 L. J. P. 2; [1903] P. 12; 87 L. T. 748; 51 W. R. 302—Gorell Barnes, J.

Incapacity of One of Several Executors—Revocation of Grant—Fresh Grant.—Where one of several executors, who have taken probate, becomes incapable, the former grant will be revoked on motion and a fresh grant issued to the remaining executors, with power reserved to the executor who has become incapable to come in and prove if and when again capable. Shaw, In the goods of, 74 L. J. P. 39; [1905] P. 92; 92 L. T. 427—Gorell Barnes, J.

Attesting Witness—Absolute Gift to Wife of—Alternative Contingent Gift to her Children.—Where there is an absolute gift to the wife of an attesting witness to the execution of a will with an alternative contingent gift to her children in the event of her being dead at the period of distribution, there is an intestacy if the wife is living at the period of distribution. Jull v. Jacobs (3 Ch. D. 703), Clark, in re;

Clark v. Randall (55 L. J. Ch. 89; 31 Ch. D. 72), Townsend, In re; Townsend v. Townsend (56 L. J. Ch. 227; 34 Ch. D. 357), considered. Aplin v. Stone, 73 L. J. Ch. 456; [1904] 1 Ch. 543; 90 L. T. 284—Swinfen Eady J.

— A Beneficiary under Secret Trust.—By his will the testator gave all his estate to O. "to be distributed as he thinks right." O. was verbally informed by the testator at the time of the execution of the will that he wished the property to be divided as he thought fit among five named persons, of whom B. (one of the next-of-kin) was one. B. was one of the attesting witnesses to the will—Held, that she was not thereby incapacitated from taking a benefit under the secret trust. Fleetwood, In re (49 L. J. Ch. 514; 15 Ch. D. 594), not followed. O'Brien v. Condon, [1905] 1 Ir. R. 51—M.R.

(b) Appointment of Executor.

— Erroneous Description of.—Where it is shown that a testator has misdescribed the name and residence of an executor, probate may be granted to the executor in his real name and as of his real residence, described in the will as of another name and another residence. Baskett, In the goods of, 78 L. T. 843—Gorell Barnes, J.

— Omission of Surname.—A testator bequeathed all his estate on certain trusts to his wife "M. C.," his friend "T. S.," and his son "W. C." T. S. was mentioned twice in the will, which continued: "I appoint my said wife, the said 'T. C.,' and my said son 'W. C.,' executors of this my will." THE COURT being satisfied on the evidence that the testator intended to appoint T. S. one of his executors, struck the "C" out after the "T" in the clause appointing executors, and granted probate to "T. S." as one of the executors named in the will. De Rosas, In the goods of (46 L. J. P. 6; 2 P. D. 66), followed. Cooper, In the goods of, 68 L. J. P. 65; [1899] P. 193; 80 L. T. 632—Jeune, P.

— Will Appointing no Executor—Universal Devisee and Legatee—Real Estate—Land Transfer Act, 1897.—The practice of the Court in cases where some one is not named as executor in a will and no duties are indicated in the will as would constitute him executor thereof according to the tenor, but who has such an interest that in spite of not being named as executor he might be looked to to act as such, is to grant to such person letters of administration with the will annexed, and not probate. This practice is applicable in the case of the will dealing with real estate of a person dying after the commencement of the Land Transfer Act, 1897. Pryse, In re, 73 L. J. P. 84; [1904] P. 301; 90 L. T. 747—C.A.

— Executor according to the Tenor.—A will contained the following words: "I will that E. M. C. . . . shall be one trustee and H. E. . . . the other trustee to hold and administer my estate, well known to the said H. E." Also "I wish to give the said trustees the same power as I have now myself." THE COURT held that the effect of the above words was to constitute the trustees executors according to the tenor, and, E. M. C. having predeceased the testator, granted probate to the said H. E. Way, In the goods of, 71 L. J. P. 13; [1901] P. 345; 85 L. T. 643—Gorell Barnes, J.

— "Administer"—Construction of Will.—A testator, by his will, appointed H. E. "to hold and administer in trust all my estate well known to the said H. E."—Held, that as this person had duties to perform, the word "administer" was, without any express instruction to pay debts, sufficient to constitute him executor according to the tenor. Way, In the goods of, [1901] P. 345—Gorell Barnes, J.

— Direction to Person to Pay Debts without Specific Gift or Bequest.—A will contained the following words, "I desire J. G. of . . . to pay all my just debts," but bequeathed nothing to the said J. G., either by way of legacy, gift, remuneration, or otherwise:—Held, that such direction constituted J. G. executor according to the tenor of the will. Cook, In the goods of, 71 L. J. P. 49; [1902] P. 114; 86 L. T. 537—Jeune, P.

— Reference in Marginal Note.—A reference in a marginal note to certain persons as executors, whose express appointment as executors has been cancelled, but who are left trustees of the will, may have the effect of appointing them executors, and not only according to the tenor. Nussey, In the goods of, 78 L. T. 169—Gorell Barnes, J.

— Intermeddling by an Executor—Executor Compelled to take up Probate.—If an executor have intermeddled with an estate, he may be compelled on the application of a legatee to take up probate, though from his conduct he appears an undesirable person to fill the office of executor. Coates, In the goods of, 78 L. T. 820—Jeune, P.

— Grant to Corporate Body and to Individuals.—The Court will not make a grant of probate to a body corporate and to one or more individuals, all of whom have been appointed executors by a will. Martin, In the goods of, 90 L. T. 264; 20 T. L. R. 257—Jeune, P.

— Appointment of "Trustees."—A testator by his will, which was drawn for him by a friend, and executed nearly two years before his death, directed all his just debts "to be paid by my executors hereinafter named." The word "executor" did not occur again in the will. The will also contained a direction that his younger children should be sent to a boarding school "where the trustees shall think fit." The testator then appointed his wife and two of his sons "trustees," and directed that the expense of maintaining and educating the younger children should be paid out of the estates bequeathed to them, and he also bequeathed certain leasehold houses to his two sons as remuneration for their services as trustees, but no trust property was vested in the trustees by the will. There was evidence that the testator intended his wife and the two sons named to act as his executors, and that he had intended to execute a more formal document, but had died without carrying his intention into effect. THE COURT made a grant of probate to the trustees named, as executors according to the ignor of the will. Kirby, In the goods of, 71 N. J. P. 116; [1902] P. 188; 87 L. T. 141—Jeune, P.

(c) Practice in Probate Actions.

(See New Rules Annual Practice, 1909.)

Attachment—Conduct—Money.—On proceeding for an order under section 26 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, for the examination in Court of a person believed to have knowledge of a testamentary paper, the tender to such person of conduct-money is a necessary preliminary to a motion to attach him in the event of non-compliance with the order. Harvey, In the goods of, 76 L. J. P. 61; [1907] P. 289; 23 T. L. R. 433. —Gorell Barnes, P.

Notice to Cross-examine only—Costs.—Order XXI. rule 18, as amended in July, 1898, which came in force October 24, 1898, gives the Court a discretion enabling it to condemn a defendant in a probate action in costs who has given notice to cross-examine only. Where defendants, who had given notice under the above rule, elicited nothing by their cross-examination, and it did not appear that the will ought ever to have been disputed, the Court condemned them in the costs of the action. Spicer v Spicer, 68 L. J. P. 19; [1899] P. 38; 79 L. T. 707; 47 W. R. 271—Jeune, P.

Several Defendants—Right of Two Sets of Counsel to be Heard.—Where several defendants are opposing a will and have filed separate defences, but the defences are substantially the same, the Court will not, at the trial of the action, hear more than one counsel on behalf of the defendants. Bagshaw v. Pimm, 80 L. T. 360—Gorell Barnes, J.

Evidence—Witness Examined as to Knowledge of Contents of Testamentary Document—Conduct—Money—Costs.—Where a witness is examined as to knowledge of a testamentary document under an order made by virtue of the powers conferred by section 26 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, such witness is not entitled to claim conduct-money before giving evidence. Order XXXVII. rule 9 of the Rules of the Supreme Court does not apply to such a case. Wyatt, In the goods of, 67 L. J. P. 7; [1898] P. 15; 78 L. T. 80; 46 W. R. 425—Jeune, P.

Where a witness, who had been examined as above, denied all knowledge of the will in question, and on the completion of examination applied for costs, THE COURT refused to make any order as to costs until more fully informed as to the facts of the case; but added that the witness might make an immediate application for costs if the action to prove the will was not proceeded with. Ib.

Denial by Attesting Witness Ten Years Afterwards of his Signature—Evidence.—Probate in common form on the oaths of the attesting witnesses was granted of a will made in Bermuda in 1883. In an action brought in consequence of suspicions suggested as to the validity of the will, one of the witnesses denied, in 1893, that he saw the testator sign and the genuineness of his own signature. The other witness declined to give evidence except for an amount of remuneration in excess of what the executors (the respondents) thought just. The barrister who prepared the will, and was an executor and trustee and received a legacy in addition to professional charges, gave evidence of due execution and testamentary capacity:—Held, that the evidence of the witness examined was incredible, and that the absence of the other witness was satisfactorily accounted for, and probate confirmed. Pilkington v. Gray, 68 L. J. P. C. 63; [1899] A.C. 401—P.C.

Secondary Evidence—Neither Attesting Witness to be Found—Affidavit of an Attesting Witness for Probate in Common Form Admitted at the Trial.—In a suit for probate in solemn form, where it appeared that after every effort to trace the attesting witnesses neither of them could be found, the Court admitted, as secondary evidence of execution, an affidavit of one of them, sworn to support an application for probate in common form. Hayes v. Willis, 75 L. J. P. 86—Gorell Barnes, P.

Notice Given by Plaintiff to Cross-examine only.—The protection of rule 18 of Order XXI. is confined to parties opposing probate in the first instance—namely, defendants—and semble also interveners delivering a defence, and does not extend to plaintiffs claiming to revoke probate already granted. The notice cannot be given by such a plaintiff with his reply. Tomalin v. Smart, 73 L. J. P. 37; [1904] P. 141; 90 L. T. 171; 20 T. L. R. 197—Jeune, P.

Notice to Cross-examine Witnesses only—Costs—Trustee.—Where a defendant in a probate action has given notice that he desires only to cross-examine the witnesses to a will, the Court will, in deciding the question of costs if it pronounces for the will, give weight in case of doubt to the fact that the defendant is a trustee and protecting the interests of the cestuis que trust. Perry v. Dixon, 80 L. T. 297—Jeune, P.

Costs.—Under the provisions of Order XXI. rule 18 (Rules of the Supreme Court), as amended July, 1898, any defendant in a probate action giving the notice required by that rule, "that he merely insists on the will being proved in solemn form of law, and only intends to cross-examine the witnesses produced," shall, even where he has required the case to be tried by a jury, and notwithstanding any former practice to the contrary, be exempt from any liability to pay the costs of the other side, "unless the Judge shall be of opinion that there was no reasonable ground for opposing the will." Davies v. Jones, 68 L. J. P. 69; [1899] P. 161; 80 L. T. 631—Jeune, P.

Costs—Onus of Proof—Principles as to Costs—Plea of Undue Influence.—Unless costs in a probate action tried before a jury are to follow the event, the facts must generally be such as to justify the application of one of two substantial principles. Either—first, the testator, or those interested in the residue, must have been responsible for the litigation, when the costs will be ordered to come out of the estate; or secondly, the circumstances must call for investigation, and the party opposing probate must have acted reasonably, when no order will be made as to costs. Neither of these principles justifies an unsuccessful plea of undue influence unless there were reasonable grounds for putting it forward. Wilson v. Basil (72 L. J. P. 89; [1903] P. 239) commented on. Spiers v. English, 76 L. J. P. 28; [1907] P. 122; 96 L. T. 582—Gorell Barnes, P.

— “Testamentary expenses”—Charge on Real Estate.—“Testamentary expenses” charged by will upon a testator’s real estate do not include costs of an unsuccessful plaintiff in an action brought to obtain a revocation of a grant of probate of the will, but do include costs of the executors in defending the action. Prince, In re; Godwin v. Prince, 67 L. J. Ch. 531; [1898] 2 Ch. 225; 78 L. T. 790; 47 W. R. 25—Stirling, J.

— Out of the Estate—Real Estate—Land Transfer Act.—Where in a probate action the costs are ordered to be paid “out of the estate,” such costs may in the course of administration be paid out of real estate where the personal estate is insufficient. Vickerstaff, In re; Vickerstaff v. Chadwick, 75 L. J. Ch. 419; [1906] 1 Ch. 762; 94 L. T. 463; 54 W. R. 414—Keke-wich, J.

— Costs of both plaintiff and defendant ordered to be charged on and paid out of the corpus of devised estate bequeathed to successive life tenants (one of them being the defendant in the action), and subject thereto to the residuary legatees of the testator, one of whom was plaintiff. Dean v. Bulmer, 74 L. J. P. 12; [1905] P. 1; 92 L. T. 426—Jeune, P.

— Failure of Pleas of Undue Influence and Fraud—Costs out of the Estate.—The rule of practice that a party opposing probate who pleads unsuccessfully undue influence and fraud is to be condemned in costs, is not without exception. Where circumstances of suspicion attend the execution of the will, and the onus of removing them and of proving due execution and capacity is cast upon the party propounding, according to the rule laid down in Orton v. Smith (42 L. J. P. 50; L. R. 3 P. & D. 23), a party pleading undue influence and fraud, although unsuccessful, is nevertheless entitled to party-and-party costs out of the estate, subject to the solicitor-and-client costs of the party succeeding, unless the circumstances of the case render it unreasonable to raise such issues. Wilson v. Basil or Bassett, 72 L. J. P. 89; [1903] P. 239; 89 L. T. 586; 52 W. R. 271—Walton, J.

— Defendant Disputing Will.—A plaintiff in a probate action, who was principally interested in a will, took instructions for its preparation from the testator personally, and transmitted them to a solicitor, who prepared the will upon those instructions and handed it to the plaintiff. The solicitor never saw the deceased. THE COURT held that, under the circumstances, the defendant, who was the adopted daughter of the testator and interested in a will previously made by him, was so far justified in disputing the last will that she ought not to be condemned in the costs of the action. Aylwin v. Aylwin, 71 L. J. P. 130; [1902] P. 203; 87 L. T. 142—Jeune, P.

Special Order Allowing Unsuccessful Defendant
VOL. II.

Costs out of Estate.—Where, in a probate suit tried before a Judge and jury, the Judge at the trial made a special order allowing the unsuccessful defendant, who had pleaded undue influence on the part of the plaintiff, his costs out of the estate,—Held, that, provided there are any grounds on which the Judge can base such special order, there is no jurisdiction to interfere with an order so made in exercise of his discretion. Probate suits are on a special footing in this respect. Cummins v. Murray, [1906] 2 Ir. R. 509—K.B. D.

Executors Propounding Will—Costs.—Where the executors of a deceased testatrix of advanced age propounded her will, but the jury found that at the time of the execution of the said will the testatrix was not of sound mind, memory, and understanding, and did not know and approve of the contents thereof, there being no suggestion of improper conduct on the part of the executors, but it being established that they had the opportunity of ascertaining the true state of mind of the deceased at the time of the execution of the said will, and that it could not be reasonably alleged that they were led into the litigation by the fact that the testatrix seemed to all outward appearance to be capable of managing her own affairs,—Held, first, that they were not entitled to costs out of the estate; and secondly, that they must be condemned in the costs of the defendant. Applications for costs by the heir-at-law and parties cited were, however, refused, on the ground that their interests were identical with those of the defendant, and that they ought not to have been separately represented, and therefore one set of costs only could be allowed. Boughton v. Knight (42 L. J. P. 25; L. R. 3 P. & D. 64) distinguished. Twist v. Tye, 71 L. J. P. 47; [1902] P. 92; 86 L. T. 259—Gorell Barnes, J.

— Testatrix not of Sound Disposing Mind.—Where executors have had an ample opportunity of examining into the state of mind of a testator or testatrix and of getting a clear knowledge of the whole state of affairs, and yet take upon themselves the responsibility of propounding a will, they do so at their own risk, and if they are defeated on the trial of the action the Court will not, except under special circumstances, interfere with the general rule that costs should follow the event. Page v. Williamson, 87 L. T. 146—Gorell Barnes, J.

Security for—Defendant Caveator—Permanent Residence Out of Jurisdiction—Temporary Residence Within Jurisdiction.—A defendant caveator who is ordinarily resident out of, but is temporarily resident within, the jurisdiction, cannot be called upon to give security for costs under the Irish Order XXIX. rule 4 (which corresponds to Order LXV. rule 6A); he is not a “plaintiff” within the meaning of that rule. Twomey, In the goods of, [1900] 2 Ir. R. 560—Andrews, J.

(d) Revocation of Probate.

Forged Will—Letters of Administration—Partnership Action for Account—Statute of Limitations.—The grant of probate of a forged will is made void ab initio by its subsequent revocation by the Court; and the established rule is that no action can be maintained in respect of a deceased person's estate except by a duly constituted administrator or executor. Chan Kit San v. Ho Fung Hang, 71 L. J. P.C. 49; [1902] A.C. 257; 86 L. T. 245; 51 W. R. 18—P.C.

Thus in a partnership action for account by the administrator of a deceased partner the Statute of Limitations begins to run not from the grant of probate of a will subsequently declared to be a forgery, but from the grant of administration made after and in consequence of the revocation of such will. Ib.

Action to Set Aside Judgment—Fraud—Motion to Dismiss—Res Judicata—Evidence.—In June, 1900, a decree was made in an action granting probate of a will in solemn form. In June, 1901, another action was brought by one of the defendants in the previous action to set aside the decree obtained in June, 1900, on the ground that the will of which probate had been granted was a forgery, and that the decree had been obtained by the fraud of a third person, who was not a party to the suit, but only the husband of one of the parties, and others acting with him. No suggestion of fraud or guilty knowledge was made against any of the parties to the first action. On a motion by the defendants to dismiss the second action on the ground that the subject matter of it was res judicata.—Held, that, as on the evidence before the Court there was no reasonable probability of the action succeeding, it ought to be dismissed as frivolous and vexatious. Birch v. Birch, 71 L. J. P. 58; [1902] P. 130; 86 L. T. 364; 50 W. R. 437—C.A.

An action to set aside a judgment on the ground of fraud ought not to be allowed to proceed unless the plaintiff can produce evidence shewing a reasonable probability of the alleged fraud being established; but (per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.) such evidence need not necessarily be of such a character that it would be evidence in the action itself. Ib.

The general rule that a judgment can only be set aside on the ground of fraud against those of the parties who obtained it by fraud, has no application to a probate action in which the will is good or bad against all the world. Ib.

8. LETTERS OF ADMINISTRATION.

(a) Administration Pendente Lite.

Citing Heir-at-Law.—Where the deceased has died possessed of real and personal estate, an administrator and receiver pendente lite will not be appointed without notice to the heir-at-law. Wiggins v. Hudson, 80 L. T. 296—Jeune, P.

Appointment of Receiver—Application by Creditors not Parties to Action—Security.—

Creditors commenced an action in the Chancery Division for administration of the estate of a deceased person. In the Probate Division an action was commenced by the executors of a later will of the same deceased person, to establish it against the executors of an earlier will. The creditors in the Chancery proceedings had obtained an order for the appointment of the plaintiffs in the probate proceedings as receivers of the estate. The Court granted administration pendente lite in the probate proceedings to the same persons at the instance of the creditors in the Chancery proceedings, though the latter were not parties to the probate proceedings. The Court also approved of the same sureties already accepted in the Chancery Division. Tichborne v. Tichborne (38 L. J. P. & M. 70) followed. Cleaver, In the goods of, 74 L. J. P. 164; [1905] P. 319; 94 L. T. 99—Gorell Barnes, B.

(b) Administration with Will Annexed.

Executor Dying without taking Probate—Grant Ad Colligendum to his Personal Representative—Real Estate—Citation of Heir-at-Law.—A married woman made a will whereby she left her real estate to her husband for life, with the remainder to her natural daughter. She left all her personal estate to her husband absolutely, and appointed him sole executor of her will. The natural daughter of the testatrix predeceased her, and the husband of the testatrix survived her only a few weeks, dying a widower and intestate, without having taken probate of his wife's will. Administration to his estate was granted to his sister, who now applied for a grant of administration, with the will annexed, to the estate of the testatrix. The realty was valued at 7,638*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.*, and the personalty at 45*l.* 4*s.* 11*d.* only. The heir-at-law could not be ascertained with certainty, and proceedings in Chancery were necessary to determine the question. He could not therefore be cited. Meantime a personal representative was required (among other things) for the purpose of letting certain farms. THE PRESIDENT, after remarking that if the will had dealt only with personalty the applicant would be entitled to a general grant, but that since the passing of the Land Transfer Act, 1897, she could not be so entitled where a will disposed of realty until the heir-at-law had been cited, which in the present case was not at the moment possible, gave the applicant a grant ad colligenda bona, with power to deal with the realty, until such time as the heir-at-law could be cited. Roberts, In the goods of, 67 L. J. P. 71; [1898] P. 149; 78 L. T. 390—Jeune, P.

Joint Grant to Nominees of Sole Executrix Incapable of Acting.—Where a sole executrix and universal legatee was incapable of taking probate owing to ill-health, the Court on the facts allowed a joint grant to her nominees. Davis, In the goods of, 75 L. J. P. 94; [1906] P. 330—Bargrave Deane, J.

Grant to Nominee of all Parties Interested in the Estate—On Death of such Nominee Grant "de bonis non" to his Partner.—The Court having, with the consent of all parties interested in the estate of a deceased testator, made a grant of administration with the will annexed to a stranger, as the nominee of such parties, on the ground (inter alia) that he had a special knowledge of the business of the deceased, subsequently, on the death of such administrator, made a grant de bonis non to his partner. Potter, In the goods of, 69 L. J. P. 53—Jeune, P.

Grant Passing over Executor—Residence Abroad.]—A testator appointed a sole executor. The executor, shortly before the testator's death, disappeared, and a warrant for his arrest had been issued, but he could not be found:—Held, that, though residence abroad could not be presumed, the executor might be passed over without citation, and administration with the will annexed might be granted. Wright, In the goods of, 79 L. T. 473—Jeune, P.

Will of Married Woman Domiciled Abroad—Appointment of Executor—Consent of Husband.]—Where a married woman died domiciled in Italy, leaving a will valid according to English law, whereby she appointed an executor, THE COURT—although the husband consented to and approved of such application—refused an application for a grant of probate to the executor named in the will, but made a grant to him of administration with the will annexed. Hallyburton, In the goods of (35 L. J. P. 122; L. R. 1 P. & D. 90), and Tréfond, In the goods of (68 L. J. P. 82; [1899] P. 247), discussed. Vannini, In the goods of, 71 L. J. P. 7; [1901] P. 330; 85 L. T. 639—Jeune, P.

Testatrix Deserted by her Husband—Grant to Daughter—Husband not Cited.]—The Court passed over the husband of a testatrix without citation, and granted administration with the will annexed to her daughter where it appeared that the husband of the testatrix had left her many years before her death, and had never since been heard of, the daughter swearing that she believed herself to be the sole next-of-kin. Byrne, In the goods of, 84 L. T. 570—Jeune, P.

Absolute Gift to Executrix Cut Down to Life Interest—Gift of Residue to Another Person—Residuary Legatee Preferred to Executor of Executrix.]—A testator by his will, made upon a printed form with holograph additions, bequeathed to his wife "all his messuages, lands, tenements and hereditaments and all his household furniture ready money goods and chattels and all other his real and personal estate and effects whatsoever and wheresoever to and for her own absolute use and benefit and after her death to come absolutely" to another person "to her and her heirs for ever," and proceeded to appoint his wife executrix:—Held, that, having regard to the terms of the whole will, the later words must prevail, and that the intention of the testator was to give his wife a life interest only, and that the later named person was, on the true construction of the will, residuary legatee, and as such entitled to a grant of administration with the will annexed as against the executor of the wife, who, although appointed executrix by the will, had died without taking probate. Lupton, In the goods of, 74 L. J. P. 162; [1905] P. 321—Gorell Barnes, P.

Specific Legacy—No other Legacies or Dispositions—No Executor Appointed—Next-of-Kin not Cited—Grant Limited to Specific Property.]—

Where a testatrix executed a will whereby she bequeathed certain property to an aunt, and the will disposed of no other property, appointed no executor, and contained no other bequests or directions, THE COURT made a grant of administration with the will annexed to the legatee, under section 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, limited to the property described in the will, without requiring the next-of-kin to be first cited. Watson, In the goods of (1 Sw. & Tr. 110), followed. Baldwin, In the goods of, 72 L. J. P. 23; [1903] P. 61; 88 L. T. 565—Gorell Barnes, J.

Foreign Grant—Grant Subject to Order of Foreign Court—Renunciation by Executor of Foreign Will.]—Where administration with the will annexed has been granted abroad by a foreign Court subject to such orders as may from time to time be made by that Court, the Court here need not before granting such administration to an attorney of the foreign administrator enquire whether orders have been made by the foreign Court modifying or cancelling the foreign grant. Where a testator domiciled abroad has disposed by his will of all his property without qualification as to its situation, and the executor of the will has renounced probate abroad, the Court here may grant letters of administration with the will annexed to an administrator appointed by the foreign Court without requiring express renunciation by the executor of probate in this country. Scarr, In the goods of, 80 L. T. 296—Jeune, P.

Gift to Charity—Residuary Legatee—Court of Probate Act, 1857, s. 73.]—A testator, a Roman Catholic canon, bequeathed a legacy to the then Roman Catholic bishop of his diocese—by name—for the benefit of the library of a certain educational institution, the legal ownership and custody of which was vested in the said bishop ex officio. He also appointed the said bishop his residuary legatee, and bequeathed the residue of his estate, subject to a certain legacy, to the said bishop—again by name—for the same objects as above. The testator survived the execution of his will about eleven years, during which time there had been three successors to the said bishop, but the ownership &c. of the institution was still vested in the bishop for the time being ex officio. THE COURT granted administration with the will annexed to the bishop for the time being, under section 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, but without prejudice to any rights of the next-of-kin. Lalor, In the goods of, 71 L. J. P. 17; 85 L. T. 643—Gorell Barnes, J.

Will and Codicil Annexed—Executor Absent from England—Grant to Nominees of Assignees of Residuary Legatee—Citation of Executor Dispensed with.]—The testator died March, 1890, having by his will and codicil appointed two executors and trustees, and a residuary legatee. The said will and codicil were duly proved in October, 1890. One executor died in June, 1891, and in December, 1891, the other left England, intimating that he did not intend to return or to act any further in the executorship, but he did not formally renounce. The testator's estate at the time of his death consisted almost entirely of reversionary interests, and in May, 1898, became entitled to a large sum in consequence of the death of his father. The residuary legatee, in 1895, assigned all his interest in the estate to a company dealing in reversions:—THE COURT made a grant of administration de bonis non with the will and codicil annexed to the nominee of the assignees, without requiring the absent executor to be cited. Campion, In the goods of, 69 L. J. P. 19; [1900] P. 13; 81 L. T. 790; 48 W. R. 288—Gorell Barnes, J.

Special Circumstances.—A testatrix died leaving personalty estimated at about 2,000*l*. By her will she appointed two executors, one of whom was a solicitor, and bequeathed the residue of her estate to her two sons. The solicitor-executor took some preliminary steps towards obtaining probate, and drew 25*l*. out of the estate for expenses. Shortly afterwards, being in financial difficulties, he left England with his family for America, leaving no address, and without having obtained probate of the will. The other executor renounced. THE COURT made a grant, with the will of the testatrix annexed, to one of her sons, who was also a residuary legatee, under section 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857. Massey, In the goods of, 68 L. J. P. 127; [1899] P. 270; 81 L. T. 493—Gorell Barnes, J.

Erasures.—A testator left a will containing three bequests to legatees whose Christian names were written on erasures:—THE COURT, being satisfied by expert evidence what were the names under the erasures, in making a grant of administration with the will annexed, ordered the original names to be substituted for those written on the erasures. Brazier, In the goods of, 68 L. J. P. 6; [1899] P. 36; 79 L. T. 472; 47 W. R. 272—Gorell Barnes, J.

Lunacy of Administratrix — Appointment of Foreign Administrateur Provisoire.—Where the wife of a domiciled foreigner obtained letters of administration with the will annexed to his assets in England and became insane abroad, THE COURT granted letters of administration to an administrateur provisoire appointed by a foreign Court for the use and benefit of the lunatic so long as the applicant remained administrateur provisoire. Goldschmidt, In the goods of, 78 L. T. 763—Jeune, P.

(c) To whom Granted.

Grant ad Colligendum — Next-of-Kin Abroad — Immediate Grant Necessary — Form of Grant.—Where a deceased intestate had no relations in England, and his only next-of-kin, if alive—as to which there was some uncertainty—were in Monte Video, and could not be communicated with under two months, the Court, on being satisfied that an immediate grant was necessary, made a grant ad colligendum to a creditor, the grant to follow the form in Schwerdtfeger, In the goods of (45 L. J. P. 46; 1 P. D. 424), and the administrator to give justifying security. Bolton, In the goods of, 68 L. J. P. 68; [1899] P. 186; 80 L. T. 631—Gorell Barnes, J.

Nominee of all Parties Interested in Estate—Special Circumstances — Lis Pendens — Desirability of Compromise — Special Knowledge by Administrator of Business of Deceased Person.—

Where an action was pending respecting the will and codicils of a deceased person, and terms of compromise had been agreed upon, which were embodied in a deed of arrangement, executed by all the parties interested in the estate, whereby it was agreed that the Court should be asked to make a grant of administration with the will and the two codicils annexed to B., an accountant who had already been appointed administrator and receiver pendente lite, and that all contentious proceedings should thereupon come to an end,—THE COURT made the grant as prayed to the nominee of the parties interested, under section 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, by reason of “special circumstances,” such special circumstances being—first, that it was desirable in the interests of all parties that further litigation should be avoided; and secondly, that the proposed administrator had a special knowledge of the estate which made him the fittest person to administer it; but it was ordered that the grant should be made subject to the consents of all parties interested, together with an affidavit of the fitness of the administrator being duly filed in the Registry. Farrell v. Brownbill (83 L. J. P. 185; 3 Sw. & Tr. 467) followed. Potter, In the goods of; Potter v. Potter, 68 L. J. P. 97; [1899] P. 265; 81 L. T. 234—Gorell Barnes, J.

Administrator of Widow who had not taken out Administration.—A widow died without having taken out administration to her husband's estate, of which she had taken possession, he having died intestate and without issue. The widow by her will disposed of all her property (including her husband's assets), but appointed no executor. His assets were of small amount, but there was a possibility that they might prove to be of greater value than 500*l*. THE COURT granted administration of the husband's personal estate to the administratrix of the widow under section 78 of the Probate Act, 1857. McDonagh, In the goods of, [1898] 2 Ir. R. 79—Andrews, J.

Person Authorised to Take out Administration — Distribution.—The widow (who lived abroad) of an intestate authorised W. to take out letters of administration of the intestate's estate in this country. W. got in all the estate, and after paying debts had a sum in hand:—Held, that W. was the proper person to distribute the estate among the next-of-kin. Rendell, In re; Wood v. Rendell, 49 W. R. 131—Cozens-Hardy, J.

Widow—Application to Pass Over—Sufficient Cause.—The Court will not exercise its discretion, given by 21 Hen. 8, c. 5, s. 3, to pass over the widow of the deceased and grant administration to the next-of-kin, unless a very strong case of unfitness is made out against her. Cory, In the goods of, 84 L. T. 270—Gorell Barnes, J.

Widow and Children — Joint Grant to.—A. H. T., who had been bankrupt in 1887 and subsequently obtained his discharge, died in 1896 again a bankrupt and intestate, leaving a widow and children. In 1897 a grant of administration was made to his trustee in bankruptcy, who was also official receiver of the local County Court, on renunciation by the widow and children of A. H. T. L. T., the first wife of A. H. T., died in 1887, during her husband's first bankruptcy, and a grant of administration had been made to his trustee. This grant was revoked in 1892, and a fresh grant made to A. H. T. as the lawful husband of L. T. The official receiver having paid off all debts due from the estate of A. H. T., and having a balance in hand to divide amongst his widow and children, THE COURT ordered that they be allowed to retract their previous renunciations, revoked the existing grants, and made a joint grant of administration to the widow and two of the children of the first marriage to the unadministered personal estate and effects of A. H. T., his representatives being entitled as a matter of course to represent the first wife's estate. Thacker, In the goods of, 69 L. J. P. 1; [1900] P. 15; 81 L. T. 790—Gorell Barnes, J.

Widow Dying Intestate—Intestate's Estate of Less Value than 500*l.*—A widow died intestate, without taking out letters of administration to her deceased husband's estate, which was of the net value of less than 500*l.* The husband having died without issue, the whole of his estate belonged absolutely and exclusively to his widow under section 1 of the Intestates' Estates Act, 1890:—Held, that letters of administration would be granted to the administratrix of the widow under section 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, without citing the next-of-kin. Green, In the goods of, 84 L. T. 61—Gorell Barnes, J.

Son of Deceased Intestate, Passing over Widow—Security.—Where it appeared that the widow of a deceased intestate had eloped, sixteen years before his death, with another man, and that her whereabouts was unknown, or whether she was alive or dead, THE COURT (the estate being a small one) made a grant to the son and only next-of-kin and heir-at-law of the deceased, passing over the widow, but ordered that justifying security should be given to the extent of the value of her share in the personality. Anderson, In the goods of (33 L. J. P. 149; 3 Sw. & Tr. 489), followed. Stevens, In the goods of, 67 L. J. P. 60; [1898] P. 126; 78 L. T. 389—Jeune, J.

Grandson—Disappearance of Grandfather—Affidavit as to Advertisements.—On a motion on behalf of a grandson for a grant of letters of administration to his grandmother's estate it appeared that the grandfather had left the country about 1843, and had not been heard of since, and if now alive would be over a hundred years of age. Advertisements had been inserted in various newspapers for the grandfather, but no information had been received in reply. The COURT made a grant subject to an affidavit that there had been no further replies to the advertisement. Bonden, In the goods of, 21 T. L. R. 13—Jeune, P.

Lawful Son and Next-of-Kin of Deceased not Heard of for Many Years—Citation of Missing Next-of-Kin Dispensed with—Administration Oath—Justifying Security.—Where a deceased person died in 1898 a widower and intestate, having had three children, two of whom had died in his lifetime and the third had left England in 1872 and had never since been heard of, and his only surviving next-of-kin was believed to be a grandson, THE COURT (following Reed, In the goods of, 29 L. T. 932) made a grant of administration to the grandson, under section 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857—without requiring the missing son to be cited by advertisement—upon his giving justifying security and swearing the usual administration oath in the form that he "believed himself to be" the sole next-of-kin of the deceased. Shoosmith, In the goods of (63 L. Married Women's Property Act.—Where, upon the death of a woman who had married before the commencement of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), it appeared that, before her marriage, she had acquired a mortgage debt, which her husband had not reduced into possession, and had since her marriage made a will purporting to dispose of all her real and personal property, THE COURT made a grant to her husband of administration to such of her property as she had no power to dispose of by will. Leman, In the goods of, 67 L. J. P. 100; [1898] P. 215; 78 L. T. 764—Jeune, P.

Separation Order—General Grant without Citing Husband—Justifying Sureties.—When a married woman has obtained an order under section 5 (a) of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, a general grant with justifying sureties may be made to her estate passing over her husband without citing him. Elizabeth Jones, In the goods of, 74 L. J. P. 27—Jeune, P. Grant taken in restricted form, 74 L. J. P. 164.

Divorce—Surviving Spouse Passed over without Citation—Justifying Security.—A husband or wife surviving the other spouse has, after the dissolution of the marriage, no such interest in the estate of the other spouse as to entitle him or her to a grant of administration, and will be passed over without citation. The same principle applies whether the party to be passed over has been petitioner or respondent in the proceedings for dissolution of marriage. In such a case there must, however, be justifying security. Wallis, In the goods of, 75 L. J. P. 8; [1905] P. 326; 94 L. T. 102; 54 W. R. 172—Bargrave Deane, J.

Grant to Superior of Convent as Residuary Legatee.—Where a testatrix appointed an executor, and, after giving a legacy, bequeathed the residue to the legatee to be disposed of at her discretion for the benefit of a specified convent, both the executor and the legatee having died in the lifetime of the testatrix, the Court granted administration with the will annexed to the superior of the convent, being the head of the council in which the property of the convent was vested. *Walsh v. All Relations of Intestate Dead except One Brother—Father Deserted Mother and not Heard of since 1866—Father ordered to be Cited before Administrator granted to Surviving Brother.—An intestate died a lunatic, leaving one brother him surviving. His mother and all the other brothers and sisters had predeceased him. His father had deserted his mother in 1866 and had not been heard of since. THE COURT ordered the father to be cited before granting administration to the surviving brother. Harper, In the goods of, 68 L. J. P. 48; [1899] P. 59, 80 L. T. 294—Gorell Barnes, J.

Heir-at-Law—No Personality—Citation of Next-of-Kin Dispensed with.]—Where the nephew and heir-at-law of an intestate applied for a grant of administration to his estate under the Land Transfer Act, 1897, Part I., s. 2, sub-s. 4, and there was no personal estate, THE COURT made the grant in general terms without giving notice to the next-of-kin, but subject to the filing of an affidavit showing that there was no issue by any former marriage of the intestate's father that would be entitled as heir-at-law in preference to the applicant, and with the further intimation that in cases where the title of the applicant is doubtful or the amount of the personality is large as compared with the realty, notice to the next-of-kin should be given. Barnett, In the goods of, 67 L. J. P. 85; [1898] P. 145; 78 L. T. 391—Gorell Barnes, J.

Guardian of Infant—Husband Passed Over.]—Where a married woman died intestate, possessed of real estate of the value of about 2,500l. and personality of the value of about 250l., and left surviving her a husband and two infant children by a former marriage, the elder of whom was entitled to the realty as heir-at-law, THE COURT, on proof that the husband was in possession of the realty, which he was mismanaging, and had taken no step to obtain letters of administration and declined to say whether he would do so or not, under the Land Transfer Act, 1897, s. 2, sub-s. 4, and the Court of Probate Act, 1857, s. 73, made a grant to the guardian of the infant for his use and benefit till he should attain the age of twenty-one years and passed over the husband. Arderm, In the goods of, 67 L. J. P. 70; [1898] P. 147; 78 L. T. 336—Gorell Barnes, J.

Residuary Legatee—No Appointment of Executor—No Specific Gift of Residue.]—There should be no absolute technical meaning given to such a word as "money" when it occurs in a will, but its meaning in every case must depend upon the context, if there is any which can explain it, and upon the surrounding circumstances, which the Court is bound to take into consideration. Therefore, where a testator by his will left 100l. "to my brother A B, and the rest of my money is to be equally divided between" (naming four legatees), but the will contained no direction to pay debts, or appointment of executors, or—except as above—any bequest of the residue, THE COURT held, that the above words constituted the four persons named residuary legatees of the whole of the testator's personal estate, and, with the consent of the other three, made a grant of administration with the will annexed to one of them. Cadogan, In re; Cadogan v. Palagi (53 L. J. Ch. 207; 25 Ch. D. 154), approved. Bramley, In the goods of, 71 L. J. P. 32; [1902] P. 106; 85 L. T. 645—Gorell Barnes, J.

Preferred to Executor of Executrix.]—A testator by his will, made upon a printed form with holograph additions, bequeathed to his wife "all his messuages lands tenements and hereditaments and all his household furniture ready money goods and chattels and all other his real and personal estate and effects whatsoever and wheresoever to and for her own absolute use and benefit and after her death to come absolutely" to another person "to her and her heirs for ever," and proceeded to appoint his wife executrix:—Held, that, having regard to the terms of the whole will, the later words must prevail, and that the intention of the testator was to give his wife a life interest only, and that the later-named person was, on the true construction of the will, residuary legatee, and as such entitled to a grant of administration with the will annexed as against the executor of the wife, who, although appointed executrix by the will, had died without taking probate. Lupton, In the goods of, 74 L. J. P. 162; [1905] P. 321; 94 L. T. 100—Gorell Barnes, P.

Lunatic—Grant to Nominee of Guardians—Creditor—Statute of Limitations.]—A creditor may be entitled to administration to the estate of a deceased person, even though his debt is barred by the Statute of Limitations, but he certainly cannot under any circumstances obtain such a grant without due notice to the next-of-kin. Therefore where a deceased person at the time of his death was an inmate of a county lunatic asylum, and indebted to the guardians for his maintenance, THE COURT refused to grant administration to the nominee of the guardians, without due notice to the next-of-kin of the deceased, although his only next-of-kin was a daughter who had herself been confined as a hopeless lunatic, in the same asylum, for fifteen years, and was likewise personally indebted to the guardians for maintenance. Druce, in the goods of, 68 L. J. P. 120; 81 L. T. 458—Gorell Barnes, J.

Alleged Illegitimacy of Intestate—No Official Evidence of Marriage of Intestate's Parents—Secondary Evidence Accepted.]—C. died intestate, aged seventy-three years or thereabouts. There was no official record in existence of C.'s birth, or of the marriage of C.'s parents. The Court accepted an extract from a certificate, in the Scotch form, of the marriage of C.'s brother, which took place in Scotland in 1868 (such extract containing a full description of both C.'s parents), as evidence of C.'s legitimacy, and granted administration to his cousin as one of his next-of-kin. Wigley v. Solicitor to Treasury, 71 L. J. P. 115; [1902] P. 233; 87 L. T. 745—Jeune, P.

Land Transfer Act—Heir-at-Law not Cited.]—Notwithstanding the provisions of section 2, sub-section 4 of the Land Transfer Act, 1897, and the fact that the heir-at-law of an intestate had not been cited, the Court granted administration under section 73 of the Probate Act, 1857, to one of the next-of-kin, the heir-at-law being abroad and his address being unknown. Blenkinsop, In the goods of, 49 W. R. 336—Gorell Barnes, J.

Next-of-Kin—Guardian of—Absence out of the Jurisdiction of Administrator.]—The guardian of the person and fortune of a minor next-of-kin is entitled to apply for a grant of administration during the absence out of the jurisdiction of the administrator of the deceased, who had left without administering the assets. Lee, In the goods of, [1898] 2 Ir. R. 81—Andrews, J.

— Persons Interested in Alleged Will Refusing to Prove or not Appearing to Citation.]

—Where an alleged will was in existence, but the parties interested therein declined to take any steps to establish the validity of the same, THE COURT, with the consent of all parties interested in an intestacy, made a grant of administration to the next-of-kin. Quick, In the goods of, 68 L. J. P. 64; [1899] P. 187; 80 L. T. 800—Gorell Barnes, J.

— Renunciation—Grant to Person having no Interest in Estate.]—Where the lawful sister and sole next-of-kin and only person entitled in distribution to the estate of a deceased intestate renounced her right to administration, THE COURT, with her consent, on its being shown it would be for the benefit of the property, made a grant to a person having no interest in the estate of the deceased. Johnson, In the goods of (2 Sw. & Tr. 595), followed. Trigg, In the goods of, 69 L. J. P. 47; [1901] P. 42; 82 L. T. 626—Gorell Barnes, J.

— Special Circumstances.]—The whole estate of a deceased intestate consisted of a share in leasehold tenements to which she was entitled under the will of her grandfather, who died in 1834. She herself died in 1873, leaving two daughters the only persons entitled in distribution to her estate. One of these daughters died in 1892 without having taken administration to her mother, leaving her husband her surviving. No grant of administration having been taken out to the estate of the mother by the other daughter, in 1901 it became important that a grant should be made in order to complete the title to the houses in question. The only persons entitled to the grant—namely, the surviving daughter and the husband of the deceased daughter—renounced in favour of a brother of the deceased who was trustee under the will of the grandfather and administrator de bonis non to his estate, and also entitled to one third share of the houses in question, and had managed them for some years:—Held, that there were not sufficient "special circumstances" to warrant making a grant to the brother under section 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857. Brotherton, In the goods of, 70 L. J. P. 33; [1901] P. 139; 84 L. T. 330—Gorell Barnes, J.

Missing Executor—Citing, by Advertisement.]

—A testator died, leaving two executors surviving him, one of whom obtained probate, leave being reserved to the other executor to come in and prove. The executor who had obtained probate died, leaving a will and executors thereof. The other executor had disappeared, and had not been heard of for fourteen years. The Court refused to grant administration with the will annexed to the daughter and sole next-of-kin of the deceased testator—although the executors of the deceased executor consented to the application—without citing the missing executor, but gave leave for such missing executor to be cited by advertisement. Reid, In the goods of, 65 L. J. P. 60; [1896] P. 129.—Gorell Barnes, J.

Creditor—Assignment of Charge.]—The deceased in 1871 charged a reversionary interest in personalty in favour of a creditor. He died intestate in 1878, leaving his father his next-of-kin. His father died in 1888 having appointed A. his executrix. A. died in 1896 having appointed L. her executrix. No letters of administration had been taken out to the estate of the deceased. The reversionary interest fell into possession in 1897. The charge had been assigned to the applicants, and the sum due on it exceeded the property charged. L. consented to the application:—Held, that a grant ought to be made to the applicants. Lowe, In the goods of, 78 L. T. 566—Gorell Barnes, J.

— Mortgage of Leasehold by Sub-demise—Outstanding Day held in Trust.]—A lessee of certain premises mortgaged them by sub-demise for the residue of the term less the last day which he covenanted to hold in trust for the mortgagee. The mortgagee entered into possession of the premises. The mortgagor died intestate and insolvent. The mortgagee assigned his interest in the premises. The assignee desired to surrender his interest, but difficulties arose from the existence of the outstanding day. The assignee applied for administration of the estate of the mortgagor, limited to the outstanding day:—Held, on proof of due citation of the next-of-kin, that the grant might be made as asked for. Kingwell, In the goods of, 81 L. T. 461—Gorell Barnes, J.

— Right of Retainer—Assets in the Jurisdiction—Evidence.]—A creditor will not be granted letters of administration to defeat the right of retainer of the next-of-kin, unless he can shew the existence of assets in the jurisdiction. A general allegation of information and belief as to the existence of assets is useless. Foy, In the goods of, 78 L. T. 49—Gorell Barnes, J. See EXECUTOR, col. 848.

Assignee of only Surviving Next-of-Kin.]

—Where the only surviving next-of-kin of a deceased intestate renounced all claim to a grant of administration and assigned the whole of her interest in his estate to the person he had intended to benefit by a will he had signed but never duly executed, THE COURT granted letters of administration to his estate to such assignee. Quilliam, In the goods of, 68 L. J. P. 17; 79 L. T. 472—Gorell Barnes, J.

Attorney of One of Two Next-of-Kin—Death of Attorney—Subsequent Application for Grant de bonis non to Attorney of the Other Next-of-Kin—Notice.]

—The death of an intestate, who was resident in Australia, was presumed in 1890. He left him surviving a son and daughter, his only next-of-kin, both also resident in Australia. A grant of administration was made to the attorney of the son. Subsequently such attorney died, leaving a portion of the estate unadministered. The son had assigned all his interest in his father's estate, and a power of attorney had been sent out to his assignees in Australia for signature by him, but had not been returned to this country. The daughter now applied to the Court for a grant de bonis non to her attorney in this country for her use and benefit. THE COURT, holding that the fact of the power of attorney having been sent out to Australia, as above stated, was a sufficient notice of the application to the person whose attorney had died, made the grant as prayed. Barton, In the goods of, 67 L. J. P. 10; [1898] P. 11; 77 L. T. 629; 78 L. T. 81—Jeune, P.

Appointee—Will not duly Executed according to Law of Domicil, but Good as Exercise of Power.]—A testatrix died domiciled in France, having been for many years separated from her husband. She left a will not duly executed according to French law, but which was, notwithstanding, a valid execution of a power under her marriage settlement. THE COURT made a general grant of administration with the will annexed to the executrix, as appointee under the settlement, subject to the consent of the husband being obtained; failing such consent, the grant to be limited to such property as deceased had power to appoint. Tréfond, In the goods of, 68 L. J. P. 82; [1899] P. 247; 81 L. T. 56—Jeune, P.

Solicitor of Duchy of Lancaster as Nominee of Queen Victoria—Death of Administrator without having Fully Administered—Grant de bonis non to Nominee of Her late Majesty's Executors.]—A grant was made to W., as solicitor for the Duchy of Lancaster, of administration to the estates of certain persons for the use and benefit of her Majesty Queen Victoria as Duchess of Lancaster. W. died without having fully administered the said estates, and no further grant in respect of them was made during the lifetime of her late Majesty. THE COURT made a grant de bonis non to the aforesaid estates and effects to D., the present solicitor to the Duchy, as nominee of the executors of her late Majesty, for their use and benefit. THE COURT ordered the administrator to give the usual administration bond, but dispensed with sureties. Best, In the goods of, 71 L. J. P. 9; [1901] P. 333; 85 L. T. 640—Jeune, P.

Crown—Land Transfer Act.]—Notwithstanding the provisions of the Land Transfer Act, 1897, s. 1, sub-s. 1, a grant to the nominee of the Crown as administrator to the estate of a person dying intestate and without known relatives, should go, as before the Act, to the personalty only, without making any mention of any real estate to which the deceased may have been entitled at the time of his or her death. Hartley, In the goods of, 68 L. J. P. 16; [1899] P. 40; 47 W. R. 237—Jeune, P.

Foreign Domicil—English and Foreign Testamentary Documents—Conflict of Laws as to Appointment of Executors—English Executors Passed Over.]—In deciding who should take a grant to the estate in England of a testator domiciled abroad and leaving English and foreign wills, the Court will follow the law of the domicil, and will make a grant to the person appointed by the law of the domicil, unless incompetent by English law. In doing so, the Court will pass over an English executor who is not recognised by the foreign Court. Meatyrd, In the goods of, 72 L. J. P. 25; [1903] P. 125; 89 L. T. 70—Jeune, P.

—Property in this Country—Grant to Attorney of Attorney of Heir-at-Law duly Appointed by Proper Tribunal of Domicil of Deceased.]—A. H. B. died domiciled in Egypt, and the Egyptian Courts appointed M. E. K. his heir-at-law. M. E. K. duly appointed M. A. E. R. his attorney, with "full powers to appoint another attorney or attorneys," and such appointment was duly certified by the Egyptian Courts. M. A. E. R. appointed A. C. L. his attorney to take a grant of administration to the English property of the deceased. THE COURT, under these circumstances, made a grant of administration to A. C. L. as attorney of the attorney of the heir-at-law, duly appointed by the proper Court of the domicil of the deceased. Abdul Hamid Bey, In the goods of, 67 L. J. P. 59; 78 L. T. 202—Jeune, P.

—No Executor or Universal Legatee—Next-of-Kin not Cited.]—A testatrix died in the Republic of Hayti domiciled there, leaving a will duly executed according to Haytian law. The will appointed no executor or universal legatee, but contained the following clause: "B., of Port au Prince, and W., of Liverpool, shall carry out my last wishes." The only next-of-kin who was primarily entitled to the grant was in Hayti. Persons entitled to half the estate were in England. W. had managed the English affairs of the testatrix for twenty years, and had, at the time of her death, in his possession a sum of 1,260l. belonging to her estate. THE COURT made a grant to W. of administration with the will annexed under section 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, without citing the next-of-kin. Moffatt, In the goods of, 69 L. J. P. 98; [1900] P. 152—Jeune, P.

Colonial Grant—Re-sealing.]—Where the executors of a will, under which a legacy of 250l. was payable to the "personal representatives" of the testator's brother, who died intestate domiciled in one of the Australian colonies leaving no estate in this country, insisted on the re-sealing here of a grant of letters of administration which the brother's widow had obtained in the colony, the Court allowed the grant to be re-sealed. Sanders, In the goods of, 69 L. J. P. 121; [1900] P. 292; 83 L. T. 716—Gorell Barnes, J.

Administrator out of Jurisdiction—Revocation of Grant—Administration de bonis non.]—An intestate died leaving eight children. His assets consisted of a farm hold under a judicial tenancy, and some other personal estate. Administration was granted to one of his sons who emigrated to Australia some years afterwards, without having administered the estate. The other children desired to have the farm sold and the assets distributed. The address of the administrator in Australia was not known. THE COURT, upon the application of the children, revoked the grant and made the usual order for administration de bonis non to one of them. Loveday, In the goods of (69 L. J. P. 48; [1900] P. 154), followed. Colclough, In the goods of, [1902] 2 Ir. R. 499—Andrews, J.

(d) Limited Grant.

Specific Fund Invested in Name of Trustee—Grant to Estate of Trustee to Beneficial Owner Limited to Fund in Question.]—Where a cestui que trust of a certain fund, after the death of her trustee and of another person who had been appointed executor under the will of the said trustee, became absolutely entitled to the corpus of the said fund, THE COURT, with the consent of all persons interested in the estate, made a grant to the cestui que trust to the estate of her trustee, limited to the fund in question. Pegg

v. Chamberlain (1 Sw. & Tr. 527) followed. Ratcliffe, In the goods of, 68 L. J. P. 47; [1899] P. 110; 80 L. T. 170—Gorell Barnes, J.

Will Annexed.]—A testator died insolvent, having some few years before executed a deed of assignment for the benefit of his creditors. His executors renounced, and no one interested under the will would apply for a grant of administration with the will annexed. A personal representative was required for the purpose of conveying certain leaseholds to the trustee of the deed of assignment. THE COURT made a grant of administration to the trustees or his nominee, limited to the property to be conveyed, but ordered that the grant should be made with the will annexed. Butler, In the goods of, 67 L. J. P. 15; [1898] P. 9; 46 W. R. 445—Jeune, P.

To Husband—Wife's Property not for her Separate Use.]—Under certain circumstances a grant of letters of administration limited to such property as the wife could not dispose of by will may still be made to a husband though the wife has made a will. In 1875 the deceased, a married woman domiciled in New Zealand, the law of which colony in respect of married women's property was at that time identical with English law before the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, made a will purporting to dispose of all her property, and after her death in 1875 the will was proved in New Zealand. She had been at the time of her marriage entitled to certain sums under English settlements. These were not limited to her separate use, and had never been reduced into possession during her lifetime:—Held, that letters of administration to these sums might be granted to the husband. Donovan, In the goods of, 78 L. T. 567—Gorell Barnes, J.

Trust Property.]—The Court granted letters of administration de bonis non to the goods of the surviving trustee of a deed, by which a rentcharge on real estate was put in settlement. The grant was limited to the appointment of a new trustee of the settlement and to vesting the rentcharge in the new trustee. Berry, In the goods of, [1907] 2 Ir. R. 209—Andrews, J.

(c) Administration de Bonis Non.

Property in Foreign Country—Certificates of Shares in England—Legal Estate only Vested in Deceased—Grant to Owner of Beneficial Interest.]—Where the legal estate in shares of a foreign railway company was vested in an intestate, who died domiciled in England, but had before his death sold the beneficial interest and delivered the documents necessary to complete such sale to a purchaser residing in this country, administration was granted to a person claiming through the purchaser to enable him to get in the legal estate by having himself registered in the books of the foreign railway company, and so to complete his title. Agnese, In the goods of, 69 L. J. P. 27; [1900] P. 60; 82 L. T. 204—Jeune, P.

Original Grant to Widow of Intestate who had since Disappeared—Subsequent Grant "de bonis non" to One of the Children, without Citing Widow.]—Where a grant of administration to the personal estate and effects of a deceased intestate was made to his widow, who, having partly administered the estate, disappeared, had not been heard of for some years, and was supposed to be dead, THE COURT—there being a sum of money payable in an action in the Chancery Division to the personal representative of the intestate—made a grant de bonis non to one of his children, without requiring the widow to be cited. Loveday, In the goods of, 69 L. J. P. 48; [1900] P. 154; 82 L. T. 692—Jeune, P.

(f) Administration Bond.

Signature of One Surety—Substitution of Name of Second Surety—Cancellation.]—One surety to an administration bond executed the same on being assured that the other person named in it as co-surety would execute it. The latter refused to do so. The name of another surety was inserted in the bond, and this person executed it. The first surety did not assent to the alteration:—Held, that the bond was void and must be cancelled. Cowardin, In the goods of, 86 L. T. 261—Gorell Barnes, J.

Premium Paid to Insurance Company—Allowance out of Estate.]—Where a person who is entitled as of right to a grant of administration, but is otherwise unable to give justifying security, procures a surety bond from an insurance company, and pays a premium thereon, it is within the discretion of the Court to allow the amount of such premium out of the general personal estate where the circumstances of the case shew that reliable security could not otherwise be obtained, and that the course adopted was reasonable and proper and for the interest of all parties entitled to the assets. Lucas, In re; Parr v. Blair, [1900] 1 Ir. R. 292—V.C.

Dispensing with Sureties.]—Where the executors of a deceased testatrix desired to apply for administration to the estates of her two sons who had predeceased her and died intestate, THE COURT, being satisfied—first, that the whole of the property of the two intestates would vest absolutely in the applicants, as executors of their mother; and secondly, that all liabilities of the said two deceased intestates had been fully discharged, —gave leave to the applicants to enter into the administration bond required by section 81 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, without sureties. Paton, In the goods of, 70 L. J. P. 49; [1901] P. 188; 84 L. T. 570—Jeune, P.

—Where the applicant for administration is the nominee of a public department of State, sureties may be dispensed with. Bryan, In the goods of, 74 L. J. P. 41; [1905] P. 88; 92 L. T. 426; 21 T. L. R. 107—Jeune, P.

The Court will dispense with sureties altogether on a grant of letters of administration, taking only the bond of the principal, upon sufficient ground being shewn. Unwin, In the goods of, 87 L. T. 749—Gorell Barnes, J.

The Court, in granting administration to the personal estate and effects of a deceased intestate, will not "direct or control or suggest anything with regard to the administration of the property, beyond granting administration in due course of law." Where, therefore, the Court was asked to order that, upon the widow of a deceased intestate taking a grant of administration to his estate, she should be at liberty to carry on the business formerly carried on by the deceased for the support of herself and the children of the marriage, and that she might be excused from giving sureties to the administration bond.—THE COURT refused the first part of the application, but, considering that it was a case in which the widow ought to have a free hand, ordered that under the special circumstances of the case she might give her own bond without sureties. Cory, In the goods of, 72 L. J. P. 24; [1903] P. 62; 88 L. T. 566—Jeune, P.

— Personal Bond only Allowed.—The administrator of an estate which consists of sums standing to the credit of an action in the Chancery Division may be allowed to give a personal bond for due administration without sureties for such sums as will be paid in that action to other beneficiaries directly, and only required to give a bond with sureties for the sum to which he is himself entitled. Leach, In the goods of, 80 L. T. 170—Gorell Barnes, J.

— Trustee in Bankruptcy.—Letters of administration may be granted to the trustee in bankruptcy of the next-of-kin without requiring sureties. Asbury, In the goods of, 80 L. T. 296—Jeune, P.

— Official Receiver in Bankruptcy.—Sureties will be dispensed with to an administration bond given by an official receiver in bankruptcy who has already given security in bankruptcy as an official of the Board of Trade. Causton, In the goods of, 75 L. J. P. 42; [1906] P. 124; 94 L. T. 613; 22 T. L. R. 247—Gorell Barnes, P.

(g) Practice.

Citation of Parties Interested—No Appearance.—When the parties who are interested under an alleged will have been cited to appear and propound it, and, after being personally served with the citation, have neither appeared nor propounded the alleged will, the Court will grant administration as to an intestate. Bootle, In the goods of, 84 L. T. 570—Jeune, P.

— Party Entitled in Priority Missing.—Where a person entitled in priority to administration of the personal estate and effects of a deceased intestate is missing, although not positively known to be dead, a grant may go under section 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, without citing him, if the evidence warrant the conclusion on the part of the Court that he is dead, and on the applicant swearing that he verily believes himself, or some other person who has renounced, to be next-of-kin. Chapman, In the goods of, 72 L. J. P. 62; [1903] P. 192; 89 L. T. 308—Jeune, P.

— Service on Lunatic.—A citation was extracted calling upon a person who was in a lunatic asylum to accept or refuse a grant of administration or shew cause why the person extracting the citation should not take a grant. The lunatic was served with the citation, but not in the presence of the doctor, under whose charge she was; subsequently the doctor was served, but not in the presence of the lunatic:—Held, that, although strictly the lunatic should, in accordance with probate practice, be served in the presence of the doctor, the service was sufficient. Price, In re; Watkins v. Bushell, 20 T. L. R. 540—Gorell Barnes, J.

— Intestacy of Husband—Established Adultery of Wife—Marriage not Dissolved—Grant to Next-of-Kin without Citing Wife.—The object of citation being to give a party, to be passed over in making a grant of administration, an opportunity of denying charges against him or her, is sufficiently satisfied by a previous finding in a suit for dissolution of marriage that the party to be passed over has been guilty of adultery, although no decree for dissolution be actually on foot at the time of application for the grant. Citation in such a case may be dispensed with. Frost, In the goods of, 74 L. J. P. 58; [1905] P. 140; 92 L. T. 667—Bargrave Deane, J.

— Husband—Deed of Separation.—A married woman executed a deed of separation, which provided that on her death her property should go as though her husband were already dead, and died while the deed was alleged to be still in operation, and while the husband was said to be largely indebted to the estate of the deceased for payments due under the deed:—Held, that letters of administration ought not to be granted to the deceased's next-of-kin without citing the husband, on the ground that he might dispute the deed. Megson, In the goods of, 80 L. T. 295—Jeune, J.

— Sole Executrix of Alleged Will Cited to Prove Same—Notice of Intention of Next-of-Kin to Move Court for Administration as in Intestacy—Affidavit for Obtaining Administration.—A deceased person by his will—apparently duly executed—left a certain person sole executrix and universal legatee thereof. The family having disputed the validity of the alleged will, a compromise was arrived at. Subsequently a citation was issued calling on the sole executrix and legatee to prove the will or shew cause why a grant of administration should not be made to the next-of-kin as on an intestacy. The executrix not having appeared to the citation, THE COURT made a grant of administration to the applicant on his undertaking on taking the grant to swear that he was the next-of-kin of the deceased. Crosby v. Noton (36 T. J. P. 55) followed. Dennis, In the goods of, 68 L. J. P. 67; [1899] P. 191—Jeune, P.

Foreign Grant Limited in Time—English Assets—Full Grant in England to Foreign Administrator.—The foreign Court of the domicile of the deceased intestate having appointed an administrator for a limited period, this Court in granting administration here for the collection of English assets, made a full grant to the foreign administrator under section 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857. Lery, In the goods of, 77 L. (h) Revocation of Letters.

Proceedings for — Staying Action — Previous Proceedings in Chancery — Acquiescence of Plaintiff — Laches.—In 1892 letters of administration to an estate were granted to the defendant in the present action as the lawful cousin and one of the next-of-kin of an intestate. On December 27, 1892, the present defendant commenced an action in the Chancery Division for the administration of the said estate. In May, 1894, the present plaintiff took out a summons in such action, claiming to be a first cousin of the intestate and entitled in distribution to a share in his estate. The matter came before the chief clerk, when it was proved that the present plaintiff was only a first cousin once removed, and the chief clerk decided that as such she was not entitled in distribution. The present plaintiff did not appeal against his decision. On April 21, 1896, an order was made in the Chancery action for the final distribution of the estate. On June 7, 1898, the plaintiff commenced the present action in the Probate Division. On a summons to dismiss the action, —Held, that the plaintiff had practically acquiesced in the Chancery proceedings, and had been guilty of such laches as to disentitle her to maintain an action against those who had received the estate, and that as the only object of the present action to revoke the letters of administration granted to the defendant, and to obtain a grant in her own favour, was to assist her to recover funds which had been distributed by order of the Chancery Division, the Court ought not to assist her to obtain a grant which would be useless to her, and that the action must be dismissed. Mohan v. Broughton, 68 L. J. P. 91; [1899] P. 211; 81 L. T. 57—Gorell Barnes, J.

— Previous Proceedings in Chancery Division — Acquiescence — Laches.—The Court will not revoke letters of administration at the instance of a person guilty of delay and acquiescence, and whose only object in seeking the revocation is to follow the estate into the hands of the persons to whom it has been distributed in an action in the Chancery Division. Mohan v. Broughton, 69 L. J. P. 20; [1900] P. 56; 82 L. T. 29; 48 W. R. 371—C.A.

There is no need to revoke the letters of administration in order to maintain an action in the Chancery Division for the purpose of following the estate into the hands of the persons to whom it has been distributed, including the administrator, if such an action is otherwise maintainable. Ib.

Letters of Administration Granted while Will Appointing Executor in Existence — Acts done before Administration — Validity.—Where letters of administration are granted while a will appointing an executor is in existence, and the will is subsequently proved and the letters of administration revoked, the grant of administration is void ab initio; and, generally speaking, dispositions of the assets by the supposed administrator are void also. Abram v. Cunningham (2 Lev. 182) followed. Graysbrook v. For (1 Plow. 275, 282) distinguished. Ellis v. Ellis, 74 L. J. Ch. 296; [1905] 1 Ch. 613; 92 L. T. 727; 53 W. R. 617—Warrington, J.

A mortgagor who had deposited the lease of a house to secure his mortgage-debt died, leaving a will by which he appointed an executor. The mortgagor's son paid off the debt with money which he borrowed for the purpose, deposited the lease with the lender of the money as security for the loan, and obtained letters of administration to his father's estate. The will was subsequently proved, and the letters of administration were revoked. The house having many years afterwards been sold by the sole beneficiary under the will, the lender's representatives brought an action against the purchaser for foreclosure:—Held, that, the letters of administration being wholly void, the son had no power to create a valid mortgage to the lender, and, in the circumstances of the case, that any claim of the plaintiffs by subrogation was barred by the Statute of Limitations and by the fact that the son was a debtor to the father's estate. Ib.

9. PRESUMPTION OF DEATH.

Disappearance.—Where an application is made to presume the death of an individual who has disappeared, the Court, on being satisfied that every reasonable means has been exhausted by advertisement and otherwise (without success) to ascertain his whereabouts, and on the evidence generally that there is every reason to believe that he is dead, will proceed to presume his death, without regard to the amount of time that may have elapsed since his disappearance, though the lapse of time is often an important element in the enquiry. Matthews, In the goods of, 67 L. J. P. 11; [1898] P. 17; 77 L. T. 630—Jeune, P.

In a case where the Court was satisfied as above, leave was given to presume the death of an individual who had disappeared just under three years. Ib.

— On November 13, 1899, the Court gave leave to presume the death of C. H. "in or since" the year 1863. The father of C. H. died July 1, 1866, intestate. If C. H. predeceased his father the latter would have the first right to administration. It being impossible to say whether C. H. predeceased his father or not,—THE COURT made a grant of administration of the estate of C. H., under section 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, to his brother W. J. H., although the said W. J. H. had made no attempt to obtain a grant of administration to the estate of his deceased father. Peck, In the goods of (29 L. J. P. 95; 2 Sw. & Tr. 506), followed. Harling, In the goods of, 69 L. J. P. 32; [1900] P. 59; 81 L. T. 791—Jeune, P.

— Length of Time since Disappearance.—Where a supposed deceased had not been heard of for about six years and ten months and there was no other evidence of death, and a grant of administration was required for use in certain Chancery proceedings, THE COURT gave the applicant leave to swear that the death had occurred on the date the alleged deceased was last heard of, but directed that the grant should, except in so far as it might be required in the Chancery Division, remain in the Registry until the expiration of seven years from that date. Winstone, In the goods of, 67 L. J. P. 76; [1898] P. 143; 78 L. T. 535—Gorell Barnes, J.

Commorientes.—Where a husband and wife were murdered in a massacre in China on July 9, 1900, THE COURT (following Wainwright, In the goods of (28 L. J. P. & M. 2; 1 Sw. & Tr. 257), and Ewart, In the goods of (1 Sw. & Tr. 258)), gave leave to presume the deaths on or since the above date, and also to swear that there was no reason to believe that either husband or wife survived each other. Beynon, In the goods of, 70 L. J. P. 81; [1901] P. 141; 84 L. T. 271; 65 J. P. 246—Gorell Barnes, J.

Brothers on Board Same Vessel—Total Loss—Leave to Swear Death—Declaration of Non-survivorship.—Two brothers sailed in the same vessel in 1896, but nothing had been heard of them, or any one else on board, from that time. THE COURT, in giving leave to swear that both the brothers died on or about May 14, 1896, added a declaration, and permitted the same to be included in the oath in each case, to the effect that there was no reason to suppose that either died before the other. Johnson, In the goods of, 78 L. T. 85—Jeune, P.

Applicant's Belief as to being Sole Next-of-Kin.—It is not the practice of the Court to presume death under any circumstances. It merely gives the applicant for letters of administration, or other applicant, leave to swear the death, and the applicant has to swear to the fact. Jackson, In the goods of, 87 L. T. 747—Gorell Barnes, J.

Affidavit of Applicant.—In motions for leave to presume the death of a person, the affidavit of the applicant filed in support of the motion must state his or her personal belief that such person died on or since the alleged date of death. Hurlston, In the goods of, 67 L. J. P. 69; [1898] P. 27—Gorell Barnes, J.

10. DONATIO MORTIS CAUSA.

Handing Over of Box Containing Share Certificates and Personal Ornaments—Key Retained.—A testatrix shortly prior to her decease had intrusted a parcel containing a box to the care of a friend, and had requested this friend to carry out her instructions. At a subsequent interview the testatrix drew the friend's attention to a small key with a label attached thereto, saying, "If I die that will be sent to you." On the day of the testatrix's death the key with the label was received by the friend, and the box was found to contain share certificates and valuables, with a paper giving directions as to the persons to whom the testatrix desired the contents of the box to be given:—Held, that, inasmuch as the testatrix had retained the key, she had not parted with her dominion over the property contained in the box, and consequently that the handing over of the box did not constitute a valid donatio mortis causa. Johnson, Certificates of Shares in Building Society—Post-Office Savings-Bank Book—Delivery.—Certificates of investment shares in a building society, which shares might at any time be withdrawn, are not the proper subject of a donatio mortis causa. Weston, In re; Bartholomew v. Menzies, 71 L. J. Ch. 343; [1902] 1 Ch. 680; 86 L. T. 551; 50 W. R. 294—Byrne, J.

A Post-Office Savings-Bank book may be a good subject of such a gift, and the delivery of the book will pass the right to the money on deposit. McGonnell v. Murray (Tr. R. 3 2d Eq. 460) discussed and distinguished. Ib.

On February 28, 1901, W., a butler in service in the country, but at that time ill in a London hospital, was visited by M., to whom for some years he had been engaged to be married, and he then told her that he had eight investment shares in the Hearts of Oak Building Society and 130l. in the Post-Office Savings Bank, and said that if anything should happen to him he wished his uncle to have 100l. and that she should have the rest. On March 7, M. visited him again, when he asked her to go to the country and get the building society certificates and the Post-Office Savings-Bank book, and gave her the key of the drawer in his bedroom where the certificates and bank book were, and told her she was to keep them. She went and obtained the certificates and bank book and took them to the hospital, but W. again told her she was to keep them. M., accompanied by a friend, called on W. on March 14, and he again repeated his wishes as to his property. He died on May 1:—Held, that there was a sufficient delivery, as it was not essential that there should be an actual delivery at the time of the gift, and that the bank book was a proper subject of a donatio mortis causa, but that the share certificates were not. Cain v. Moon (65 L. J. Q.B. 587; [1896] 2 Q.B. 283) followed. Ib.

Money on Deposit at Savings Bank—Local Loans Stock—Delivery of Bank Book and Investment Certificate.—Money on deposit at a Post-Office savings bank may be the subject of a valid donatio mortis causa, and the delivery of the bank book will pass the right to such money. But money invested for a depositor by the bank in Local Loans Stock is not a good subject of such a gift, and the delivery of the bank book and investment certificate will not pass such stock. Andrews, In re; Andrews v. Andrews, 71 L. J. Ch. 676; [1902] 2 Ch. 394; 87 L. T. 20; 50 W. R. 569—Kekewich, J.

Nuncupative Will—Document Disposing of Whole of Property—Trust to Settle Affairs and see to Burial—Delivery of Deposit Note and Share Certificate—Intention of Donor—Retention of Dominion over Property.—D., an old lady of considerable means, although frequently urged to make a will by the defendant L., who managed her affairs, always refused to do so. According to the written statement of L., he went to see D. on January 26, 1899, and found her very ill, and at her direction he wrote out the following document: "40 Horsfield Road, Bristol, Jan. 26, 1899. I, E. D., residing at the above address, do give the whole of my property, whatever it may consist of at the time of my decease, to L. . . . upon the distinct promise that he will settle up my affairs and see to my burial, and will also give the following sums to the charities and persons named." Then followed a list of names and amounts, and the document concluded with "the mark of E. D." and a cross which she made. He then, at her request, went into another room, of which she gave him the key, and got a banker's deposit note for 30,000*l.* and a certificate for shares in a brewery company which she had mentioned, and gave them to her. She handed them back to him, saying, "You take charge of them. If I get better, of course you will bring them back. If I don't, you will know what to do with the money." He saw her again on January 30, when she said that if she did not get better he would find in the same room in which he found the deposit note and share certificate some gold and 800*l.* in notes. On the following day, January 31, he went to see D., and finding she was dying he took possession of the gold and notes and brought them into the room where D. was. She died the same evening, and he retained possession of the property and made a full communication to the plaintiff:—Held, that the language used by D. in reference to the deposit note, although it might by itself have created a donatio mortis causa, must be interpreted in connection with what had previously taken place, and that, so interpreted, D.'s intention was to reserve during her life dominion over all her property, that the document signed was distinctly of a testamentary character, that there was no valid donatio mortis causa of the deposit note, and that a fortiori the gift failed as to the other property of the deceased. Treasury Solicitor v. Lewis, 69 L. J. Ch. 833; [1900] 2 Ch. 812; 83 L. T. 139; 48 W. R. 694—Stirling, J.

Donor's Cheque—Cheque Presented but not Paid in Donor's Lifetime—Donor's Account Overdrawn.]—A cheque drawn by the donor and given but not resulting in payment, either actual or constructive, in the donor's lifetime, cannot be the subject of a valid donatio mortis causa. Beaumont, In re; Beaumont v. Ewbank, 71 L. J. Ch. 478; [1902] 1 Ch. 889; 86 L. T. 410; 50 W. R. 389—Buckley, J.

Delivery of a Cheque Accompanied by a Written Request that a Third Party shall Pay Same to Donee after Decease of Donor.]—An invalid lady with the help of a friend sent three cheques, each for the sum of 100*l.*, made out to three different persons, to another friend of hers with a letter couched in the following terms: "Miss Davis wishes me to send you the three inclosed cheques for you to keep for her, and in case of her death, and then see the said persons have the money, &c." Miss D. died upon the following day:—Held, that there had been no valid donatio mortis causa, and that the executor was not at liberty to honour the cheques. Davis, In re; Griffith v. Davis, 86 L. T. 889—Farwell, J.

11. CONSTRUCTION.

(a) Generally.

Reading-in Words—Testator's Intention.]—In construing wills it is the duty of the Court to ascertain, if possible, what the testator really meant from the language he has used. The exact words are not to be followed in their literal meaning if it be plain that to do so would frustrate the real intention of the testator. If from a consideration of the whole will it is plain that to place a literal meaning upon one clause would have the result of defeating the clear intention, it is necessary even to do violence to the language used. The thing to be ascertained is, what is the testator's will? Patterson, In re; Dunlop v. Greer, [1899] 1 Ir. R. 324—M.R.

Rule of Uniformity.]—Whenever in a deed, will, or other document it is found that a word has some particular meaning when its meaning can be clearly made out, the presumption is that it means the same thing when its meaning is not so clear. Birks, In re; Kenyon v. Birks, 69 L. J. Ch. 124; [1900] 1 Ch. 417; 81 L. T. 741—C.A.

(b) Absolute Gift.

Property or Power—Life Estate to Wife—After her Death Executors to Sell Portion for Payment of Legacies—Balance to be Disposed of according to Wishes of Wife.]—A testator devised and bequeathed to his wife during her life all his cash, lands, &c., and directed that she was to receive all interests and profits out of his said property, to be paid to her during her life by his executors. After the death of his wife the executors were to sell portion of the property to pay certain pecuniary legacies. Any balance of the property remaining after the said bequests to be disposed of according to the wishes of his wife:—Held, that the wife took the property absolutely, subject to the legacies payable after her death. Reid v. Carleton, [1905] 1 Ir. R. 147—Barton, J.

Life Estate with General Power of Appointment—Repugnancy.]—A testator by will, after certain devises and bequests, gave the residue of his real and personal estate to his wife absolutely, and appointed her executrix during her life and his two sons executors after her death. By a codicil the testator revoked his will and gave all his property to his wife, so that "she may have full possession of it and entire power and control over it, to deal with it or act with regard to it as she may think proper." In the event, however, of her not surviving him, or dying without having devised or appointed the whole or any part of his property, then his will was to take effect as if the codicil had been made:—Held, that on the true construction of the codicil the wife took a life estate only in the property with a general power of appointment. Sanford, In re; Sanford v. Sanford, 70 L. J. Ch. 591; [1901] 1 Ch. 939; 84 L. T. 456—Joyce, J.

Superadded Words—Directions as to Investment for Certain Purposes—Motive of Gift—Trust.]—A testator, after certain legacies, directed that the balance of the purchase-money, realised by the sale of portion of his freehold property, to be equally divided among his four sons (of whom J. was one). He then provided as follows: "I direct my executors to invest the share of my said son J. in the purchase of a good, substantial tenement house in a good neighbourhood (having first had same examined by an architect), where my said son and family may enjoy apartments in same free of rent, and that he may have, after the payment of rent (which must be small) and rates, some income towards support of himself and family. The assignment or conveyance of same must be made to my executors, who alone are legally to possess same and the disposition thereof":—Held, that there was a gift of an absolute interest to J., and there was no trust created in favour of J.'s children. Dowling v. Dowling, [1902] 1 Ir. R. 79—M.R.

Subsequent Gift Over of any Balance Remaining after Legatee's Death.]—A testatrix bequeathed one-third of the residue of a sum of 6,000*l.* Consols to A. L., one-third to E. T. in trust for E. W., and one-third to E. T., in trust for M. W., and directed that any balance remaining in the hands of E. T. after the death of E. W. should go absolutely to E. T., and that any balance remaining in the hands of E. T. after the death of M. W. should be equally divided between the children of A. L. who should then be living:—Held, that the legacies to E. W. and M. W. were absolute gifts, and that the direction as to the balance was inoperative. Constable v. Bull (18 L. J. Ch. 302; 3 De G. & Sm. 411) discussed. Lloyd v. Tweedy, [1898] 1 Ir. R. 5—M.R.

Restrictions as to Mode of Enjoyment—Legacy to Daughter, and Gift over in Event of Daughter Dying Unmarried—Unmarried Daughter Survivor.]—A testator bequeathed to each of his daughters A, B, and C 1,000*l.* to be paid at their mother's death, provided they should have been previously married with the consent of his executors, and directed that if a daughter should not have been previously married, or, if married, had been married without such consent, she was only to receive the income of the 1,000*l.* during her life, or until marriage with the consent of his surviving executor, and that if she married without such consent, and died leaving issue, the 1,000*l.* was to be divided between her children equally, and in case any daughter should die without being married with such consent and without leaving issue, the principal left to the daughter so dying should go to her surviving brothers and sisters equally. B survived her brothers and sisters and died unmarried:—Held, that there was an absolute gift to each daughter in the first instance, coupled with restrictions on the enjoyment of it in certain events which did not happen; and that the event which happened—namely, the survivorship of B without having been married—not being subject to any restriction, B was absolutely entitled at her death to the legacy. Lassence v. Tierney (1 Mac. & G. 551), Hancock v. Watson (71 L. J. Ch. 149; [1902] A.C. 14), and Olphert v. Olphert ([1908] 1 Ir. R. 326) discussed. Fitz-Gibbon v. McNeill, [1908] 1 Ir. R. 1—M.R.

Subsequent Gift over on Death Childless and without a Will—Repugnancy.]—A testator, after giving an absolute gift, directed that in the case of the beneficiary dying childless and intestate, the property given should form part of his residuary estate:—Held, that, although the gift over on the contingency of childlessness, had it stood alone, might possibly have been valid, yet that, if the present case, the two contingencies could not be severed, and that the gift over was accordingly repugnant and void. Dixon, In re; Dixon v. Charlesworth, 72 L. J. Ch. 642; [1908] 2 Ch. 458; 88 L. T. 862; 51 W. R. 652—Swinfen Eady, J.

Gift Over.]—A gift by will of all the testator's real and personal estate to his wife for her absolute use and benefit, so that during her lifetime, for the purpose of her maintenance and support, she should have the fullest power to sell and dispose of his said estate absolutely, is an absolute gift, and will not by a gift over, after her death, "as to such parts of my real and personal estate as she shall not have disposed of as aforesaid, subject to the payment of my wife's funeral expenses," to trustees on trust to convert and pay the proceeds as therein mentioned, be cut down to a life estate with a power of disposition inter vivos. Pounder, In re; Williams v. Pounder (56 L. J. Ch. 113), distinguished. Jones, In re; Richards v. Jones, 67 L. J. Ch. 211; [1898] 1 Ch. 438; 78 L. T. 74; 46 W. R. 313—Byrne, J.

Contingent Gift Over.]—A testator gave and devised all his property to his wife for life, and after her death to his son John for life, and after John's death to John's eldest son, and failing such son then the same to be and become the property of my son the said James Cooper or of his eldest son lawfully begotten, and in case of the death of the said James Cooper without such male issue as aforesaid, then to the eldest son of my said daughter, Mary Cooper, wife of the said William M'Cormick. John Cooper never had a son, and died before the testator. James Cooper had a son, and both father and son survived the testator's widow, the son, however, dying before his father:—Held, that James Cooper was entitled absolutely, the gift to Mrs. M'Cormick's son only being intended to operate in the event of neither James Cooper, Junior, nor his son taking possession as proprietor. M'Cormick v. Simpson, 77 L. J. P.C. 12; [1907] A.C. 494; 97 L. T. 616—P.C.

Substituted Settled Legacy by Codicil—Incidents of Original Legacy Applicable—Forfeiture.]—A settled legacy substituted by a codicil for an absolute legacy given by the will is subject to all the conditions and incidents of the original legacy, even where the different quality of the original and substituted bequests renders the operation of a defeasance clause applicable to the original legacy more onerous in the case of the substituted legacy. Joseph, In re; Pain v. Joseph, 77 L. J. Ch. 309; [1908] 1 Ch. 599—Eve, J.

Bequest of Sum "sufficient to pay and discharge all estate duty"—Declaration of Trust—Charge on Settled Estates in Respect of Duty.]—A testator, by a codicil to his will, executed after the passing of the Finance Act, 1894, bequeathed to his eldest son, to whom certain settled estates would pass on the testator's death, "a sum of money sufficient to pay and discharge all the estate duty which may be payable by" him; and he directed such sum to be paid out of moneys in the hands of his bankers at his death, but if the sum at the bankers should not be sufficient, he declared that no other part of his estate should be liable to make good the deficiency:—Held, that the legacy was a gift to the eldest son for his own benefit absolutely, and was not impressed with a trust to pay the estate duty out of it; and consequently that the legatee had not lost his right to recoup himself for the duty by a charge on the settled estates under section 9, subsection 6 of the Act. Meaborough (Earl) v. Saville, 88 L. T. 131—H.L. (E.)

Gift to Children upon Surviving their Parents

—Vesting—Presumption in Favour of.—A testator left a share of his property to trustees, upon trust for his son G. for life or until he should become bankrupt, and after his death or bankruptcy to E., the wife of G., for life, and directed that in case there should be any child or children of G. living at the death of G. and E., or at the other period thereafter contemplated, then, from and immediately after the death of the survivor of G. and E., or from and after the death of E. and the bankruptcy of G., the said share should be held in trust for all and every, or such one or more exclusively, of the others or other of the children or child of G. by his then or any future wife, with such provisions for their respective maintenance, education, and advancement, at such ages, days, and times, and if more than one in such shares as G. should by deed or will appoint, and in default of such appointment in trust for all and every such the children and child of G. who being a son or sons should attain the age of twenty-one years, or being a daughter or daughters should attain that age or day of marriage, and if more than one in equal shares, and in case there should be only one such child then the whole for such one or only child; provided that after the death of the survivor of G. and E., or the death of E. and the bankruptcy of G., and until the whole of the trust funds should become vested in such child or children, his trustees should apply a competent part of the income of the trust funds for the benefit of the children or child for the time being entitled thereto in expectancy towards his or her maintenance and education; and in default of such child or children of G., upon the trusts in his will declared concerning the premises thereby given in trust for his daughter I. and the other persons therein mentioned. G. had one son, J., who attained age, married, and predeceased G., leaving children. E. predeceased G., who died without having become bankrupt:—Held, that the rule in Emperor v. Rolfe (1 Ves. son. 208) was applicable, and that J. took an absolute interest in the property on attaining age, although he did not survive G. Duffield v. M'Master, [1906] 1 Ir. R. 333—C.A.

Remoteness—Gift to Grandchildren "Absolutely" upon Attaining Twenty-five—Gift over—Power of Maintenance—Vesting.—Testator gave a sum of 12,000*l.* upon trust for a daughter for life, and after her death upon trust for all her children "when they shall attain the age of twenty-five years but not before," and in case there should not be "any such child" the fund was to fall into residue. Until the said fund was invested as directed, interest was to be paid to his daughter or her children, "on their respective portions." The testator also gave one moiety of his residuary real and personal estate upon trust for his son N. for life, and after his death upon trust "for his child or children absolutely upon their attaining the age of twenty-five years, and in the event of the death of either or all the children of my said son before attaining the age of twenty-five years, then upon trust to pay the share of the child or children so dying" to testator's son H. absolutely. The will contained a power for the trustees to apply all or any part of the income of the expectant share of a grandchild of the testator, after the death of the preceding owner for life of such share, for the maintenance and education of the grandchild:—Held, that the grandchildren of the testator took vested interests, and the gifts were not void for remoteness. Turney, In re; Turney v. Turney, 69 L. J. Ch. 1; [1899] 2 Ch. 739; 81 L. T. 548; 48 W. R. 96—C.A.

Fox v. Fox (L. R. 19 Eq. 286) approved—per LINDLEY, M.R., and SIR F. H. JEUNE. Seemle, the suggestion in Wintle, In re; Tucker v. Wintle (65 L. J. Ch. 863; [1896] 2 Ch. 711) that the decision in Fox v. Fox was not good law, is not warranted. Id. See REMOTENESS, col. 2882, and PERPETUITIES, col. 1811.

Vesting—Condition as to Marriage.—A testatrix by her will left certain pictures "as heirlooms to my grandson, Edward Panter-Downes, to go to him when he is married and has a house of his own; till then I wish my daughter, Mrs. J. F. Bally, to take charge of those she now has; and those which my daughter-in-law, Mrs. Herbert Panter, has now I wish her to keep for him also": Held, that the gift was not conditional on the grandson marrying, but was an absolute gift accompanied by a direction as to the time for handing over the pictures. Panter, In re; Panter-Downes v. Bally, 22 T. L. R. 431—Swinfen Eady, J. And see CONDITION.

Gift "so long as she remains unmarried."—A direction in a will to set aside a sum of 200*l.* and thereout pay to the testator's widow a sum of 3*l.* monthly "so long as she remains unmarried or until the said sum of 200*l.* becomes exhausted, the said payment of 3*l.* monthly to cease on my said wife marrying again," is an absolute gift of the 200*l.* Rishton v. Cobb (9 L. J. Ch. 110; 5 Myl. & Cr. 145) followed. Howard, In re; Taylor v. Howard, 70 L. J. Ch. 317; [1901] 1 Ch. 412; 84 L. T. 296; 49 W. R. 480—Farwell, J.

Heirlooms—Title of Dignity—Chattels Bequeathed to Descend as Heirlooms so far as Rules of Law and Equity will Permit.—Testatrix by her will gave certain jewellery to her son R. O. Viscount Hill "until he shall die and after his death to each and every of the persons who shall in turn succeed to the title and dignity of Viscount Hill . . . severally and successively as they shall in turn succeed to such title and dignity as aforesaid my intention being that the said . . . jewellery shall descend as heirlooms so far as the rules of law and equity will permit." Testatrix died in 1891.

Her son survived her, and entered into possession of the jewellery. He died in 1895, and was succeeded in the title by his son R. R. C. Viscount Hill, the present plaintiff. The plaintiff had brothers who were alive at the date of the will of the testatrix, and also at the death of her son R. C. Viscount Hill:—Held, that the plaintiff was absolutely entitled to the jewellery. Tollemache v. Coventry (2 Cl. & F. 611; 8 Bligh N.S. 547) followed. Hill (Viscountess), In re; Hill (Viscount) v. Hill, 71 L. J. Ch. 417; [1902] 1 Ch. 807; 86 L. T. 336; 50 W. R. 434—C.A.

(c) Accumulations.

Keeping on Foot Policy as Security against Depreciation in Value of Leaseholds.—A direction in a will to apply a portion of the rents of the testator's leaseholds in keeping on foot a policy of insurance to secure the replacement at the expiration of the term for which the lease was held of the capital which would be lost by not selling the leaseholds is not an accumulation within the meaning of the Accumulations Act, 1800, and is therefore valid notwithstanding that at the testator's death the unexpired residue of the term may exceed twenty-one years. Gardiner, In re; Gardiner v. Smith, 70 L. J. Ch. 407; [1901] 1 Ch. 697—Buckley, J.

Portions for Children.—A testator conveyed his whole estate to trustees, directing them, inter alia, to pay certain annuities to his widow and daughters, and "to accumulate the balance of the revenue," and on the death of his widow to realise his whole means and estate and "dispose of the proceeds thereof as well as the accumulations of the same, if any, as follows, viz." (after providing certain sums for his sons and daughters), "to hold and invest the residue and remainder of my said means and estate and accumulations of revenue, if any, for behoof of" his sons and daughters equally in life-rent for their life-rent use and their respective children in fee. In the last place, in the event of all his children dying before the period of division without issue, he directed his trustees to divide his estate between his own next-of-kin and his wife's next-of-kin. In a special Case presented by the testator's widow and children after the lapse of twenty-one years from the testator's death, as to the application of the Thellusson Act, — Held (Lord Young diss.), first, that the directions to accumulate could not be regarded as "a provision for raising portions for any child or children of the grantor" in the sense of the Act, and that the Act applied; and secondly, that the accumulations struck at did not fall to the residuary legatees, but became intestate succession, inasmuch as the residuary legatees could not be ascertained till the date of division. Moon's Trustees v. Moon, 2 F. 201—Ct. of Sess.

Conversion.—When by the operation of the Thellusson Act the accruing revenue of a mixed estate falls to be divided as intestate succession, the funds are to be distinguished as heritable or movable according to their source as existing at the date of the death of the testator without regard to any conversion authorised or directed by him for the purposes of his settlement, and that annuities left by the testator fall to be deducted from the income of the heritage. Ib.

Trust for—Limit of Twenty-one Years Exceeded—Devolution of Surplus Rents and Income—“Trust estate.”—Testator gave his estate and effects to trustees in trust to pay the income to his brother for life, and after his death in trust to pay out of the income an annuity of 200*l.* to his niece for her life, and directed the surplus income of his trust estate to accumulate till the death of his niece, and subject and without prejudice to the trusts and provisions aforesaid directed his trust estate to be held upon trust for the children of his niece, and in default of children, after the death of the survivor of his brother and niece and the failure of her issue, upon trust as to one third part for his cousins and as to two third parts for a charity. The testator died in 1877, and the brother, who was his heir-at-law, and sole next-of-kin, died in 1878. The niece, who was married, was fifty-four years of age, and had had no child. The accumulations were made after the brother's death up to 1898, when further accumulation was forbidden by the Accumulations Act, 1800 (Thellusson Act). The charity claimed to have the residue of the estate immediately distributed after providing for the annuity:—Held, that the surplus income during the remainder of the niece's life went as undisposed of to the representatives of the brother, and that the estate was not distributable till the niece's death. Held also, on the construction of the will, that the words "trust estate" included the corpus of the past accumulations. Weatherall v. Thornburgh (47 L. J. Ch. 658; 8 Ch. D. 261), followed. Wharton v. Masterman (64 L. J. Ch. 869; [1895] A.C. 186) distinguished. Travis, In re; Frost v. Grestoree, 69 L. J. Ch. 663; [1900] 2 Ch. 541; 83 L. T. 241; 49 W. R. 38—C.A.

Partial Accumulation of Income of Property—Direction at End of Ten Years to Invest Accumulations in Purchase of Real Estate—“Land.”—The word "land" in the Accumulations Act, 1892, s. 1, when read in conjunction with the Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 3, includes incorporeal as well as corporeal hereditaments. Consequently a direction in a will to accumulate the rents and annual income of a mining property for ten years and at the expiration of that time to invest the accumulations in the purchase of "real estate" is a direction to accumulate "for the purchase of land only" within the Act of 1892, and, there being no minor in existence who, if of full age, would be entitled to receive the rents and income so directed to be accumulated, is void. Supposed dictum of CHERRY, J., in Danson, In re; Bell v. Danson (13 R. 633), discussed and disapproved. Clutterbuck, In re; Fellowes v. Fellowes, 70 L. J. Ch. 614; [1901] 2 Ch. 285; 84 L. T. 757; 49 W. R. 583—Byrne, J.

Conversion—Accumulation for Twenty-one Years—Discretion of Trustees—Trusts of Unconverted Property after Twenty-one Years—Income or Capital.—A testator devised and bequeathed the residue of his property upon trust for conversion; but the trustees were empowered to postpone conversion for a period not exceeding twenty-one years. Until conversion and re-investment the income of unsold property was to be applied in paying debts and yearly charges, and the surplus accumulated in augmentation of capital. At the end of the twenty-one years a portion of the estate which had, in accordance with a power in the will, been let on mining lease for forty years was still unconverted:—Held, that the rents and royalties accrued since the expiration of the twenty-one years formed part of the capital of the residuary estate, and ought to be distributed accordingly, and that until sale or conversion the tenants for life of settled shares were entitled as from such date to receive out of the accrued and accruing rents and royalties such an annual sum as, in the opinion of the Court, would be a fair equivalent for the annual income which would have been received if the property had been sold at the end of the twenty-one years. Wentworth v. Wentworth, 69 L. J. P.C. 13; [1900] A.C. 163; 81 L. T. 682—P.C.

Discretionary Trust for Benefit of Person for Life — "Accumulation" of Surplus Rents — Devolution — Income or Capital of Residuary Estate.—Where a testator, who died in 1865, gave certain freehold houses to his trustees upon trust to receive the rents, and after making certain payments thereout to apply the residue at their discretion for the benefit of his daughter for her life, and after her decease to stand seised of the premises with any surplus or accumulation of rents that might not be applied for the benefit of his daughter in trust for her children with limitations over in default of children, and he also gave his residuary real and personal estate to his trustees upon trust for, amongst other persons, his daughter for life, and after her decease upon trust for other persons, it was held that by means of the Accumulations Act, 1800, the surplus rents after the expiration of twenty-one years from the testator's death formed part of the capital of the testator's residuary estate, and must be invested, and that the income only of such investment was payable to the tenants for life. Pope, In re; Sharp v. Marshall, 70 L. J. Ch. 26; [1901] 1 Ch. 64; 49 W. R. 122—Farwell, J.

To direct the accruing income of a fund to be invested and the income of the investment to be paid to a tenant for life is not to direct an accumulation. Ib.

Crawley v. Crawley (4 L. J. Ch. 265; 7 Sim. 427) and O'Neill v. Lucas (2 Keen, 313) followed. Phillips, In re; Phillips v. Trevy (49 L. J. Ch. 198), commented on and not followed. Ib.

(d) Ademption.

Question of Construction.—The question whether a testamentary gift or appointment is adeemed by the subsequent disposal of the subject of the gift during the lifetime of the testator is in every case a question of the construction of the will. Dowsett, In re; Dowsett v. Meakin, 70 L. J. Ch. 149; [1901] 1 Ch. 398; 49 W. R. 268—Farwell, J.

Special Power of Appointment—Testamentary Exercise of Power—Subsequent Compulsory Sale of Subject.—If the gift or appointment be given simply by a description of the subject as it exists at the date of execution of the will, it will be adeemed if the subject be subsequently disposed of during the lifetime of the testator. If, on the contrary, it be given by a description which not only includes the subject of the gift as it then exists, but still includes it in whatever other form it may happen to exist at the date of the testator's death, it is not then adeemed by any subsequent disposal of it, provided that at the testator's death the original subject of the gift is represented by actual property which can be identified. Ib.

In applying this principle to the testamentary execution of a power of appointment, there is no distinction between general and special powers. Ib.

— — — Settled Estate — Premiums on Leases by Tenant for Life—Appointment of Real Estate.—For the purpose of determining whether a testamentary appointment under a power is adeemed by a change in the character of the subject-matter of the appointment between the date of the will exercising the power of appointment and the death of the appointor, there is no distinction between a will exercising a general power and a will exercising a special power. Dowsett, In re; Dowsett v. Meakin (70 L. J. Ch. 149; [1901] 1 Ch. 398), approved. Moses, In re; Beddington v. Beddington, 71 L. J. Ch. 101; [1902] 1 Ch. 100; 85 L. T. 596—C.A.

Per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., and ROMER, L.J.—The principles on which Gale v. Gale (21 Beav. 349) and Blake v. Blake (49 L. J. Ch. 393; 15 Ch. D. 481) were decided apply in the case of the exercise of a special power. Ib.

Sub-section 5 of section 22 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, which provides, in effect, that capital money arising under the Act is to be held and go in the same way as the land from which it arose would have been held and gone if not disposed of, does not in any way enlarge or alter the effect of a testamentary appointment as regards the question of ademption. Ib.

B. was under the will of M. equitable tenant for life of certain real estate, with a power of appointment by will amongst his children, and in default of appointment the property was to go to all his children in certain shares. B. by his will in 1892, in exercise of the power, appointed the whole of the property to which his power extended to his two sons, part to one and part to the other. After the date of the will leases of parts of the real estate were granted by B. as a tenant for life under the Settled Land Act, 1882, at large premiums. The premiums were paid to the trustees of M.'s will, and invested by them. B. died in 1900 without having altered his will:—Held, on the true construction of the will of B., having regard to the will of M., that the premiums did not pass under the appointment to the two sons, but went as in default of appointment. Ib.

Residuary Bequest among Children—Subsequent Gift to Two Sons—Rebuttal of Presumption against Double Portions—Codicil Subsequent to Gift.]—Where a testator between the date of his will and the date of his death advances to a child a large sum of money such as 5,000*l.*, the prima facie presumption, if nothing more were known, would be that it was an advance within the rule against double portions, and an ademption pro tanto of the amount left to the child by the will; but the presumption is liable to be rebutted, and all the circumstances and the manner of the gift must be taken into consideration in dealing with the case. Scott, In re; Langton v. Scott, 72 L. J. Ch. 20; [1903] 1 Ch. 1; 87 L. T. 574; 51 W. R. 182—C.A.

A father made a gift of 5,000*l.* to a son, A., after the date of his will. The father had two sons and six daughters, and at the date of his will he had made gifts of 5,000*l.* to each of his daughters, and had made no such gift to the sons. By his will he gave his residuary estate upon trust for his sons and daughters in certain proportions, and he directed that the sums of 5,000*l.* given to the daughters were not to be brought into account in ascertaining their shares; and he had, in conversation with two of his daughters, after the gift of the 5,000*l.* to A., referred to it as a gift, and as if he intended it to be on the same footing as the sums given to the daughters. He had also, after the gift to A., made a codicil, making some alterations in his will as regards the money left in his business, but making no alteration in the gift of his residue, and in all respects other than those mentioned confirming his will:—Held, that, taking all the circumstances into consideration, there was sufficient to shew that the 5,000*l.* was not intended to be an advance to A. on account of his share under the will, and it ought not to be brought into hotchpot in ascertaining his share of the residuary estate. Ib.

The father was carrying on business in partnership with another son, J. J.'s share of the capital consisted only of accumulations of part of his share of profits. Under the articles J. was to keep a certain amount of capital in the business. For some years the profits of the business had decreased, and J. had, to meet his current expenditure, drawn out of the business more than he was entitled to draw. J. applied to his father for assistance, pointing out that unless he obtained help he would have to part with his house and give up his position in society. The father then transferred 5,000*l.* from his account in the firm books to the account of J. and also gave J. 1,500*l.* to reduce the mortgage debt on his house. This took place after the advance to A., and after the date of the codicil:—Held, that the sums given to J. were, in effect, payments of his debts and to relieve him from temporary embarrassment, and were not advances within the rule against double portions, and ought not to be brought into hotchpot. Ib.

The view indicated by the COURT OF APPEAL in Lacon, In re; Lacon v. Lacon (60 L. J. Ch. 408, 411; [1891] 2 Ch. 482, 497), followed. So far as there is a difference between the view expressed by SIR G. JESSEL in Taylor v. Taylor (44 L. J. Ch. 718, 719; L. R. 20 Eq. 155, 157) and that expressed by WOOD, V.C., in Boyd v. Boyd (36 L. J. Ch. 877, 878; L. R. 4 Eq. 805, 808), and by PEARSON, J., in Blockley, In re; Blockley v. Blockley (54 L. J. Ch. 722, 723; 29 Ch. D. 250, 252), the view taken by SIR G. JESSEL is to be preferred. Ib.

Child Taking Parent's Share.]—Where a testator directs that if a child of his should die in his lifetime leaving a child who should survive him, then such child should take the share in his estate which his or her parent would have taken if such parent had survived the testator, a grandchild of the testator taking in substitution for a parent is in no different position as regards bringing into hotchpot sums advanced to his or her parent than the parent himself would have been had he survived the testator. Ib.

"Use and benefit" of Legatee—Subsequent Settlement—Testator not in Loco Parentis—Particular Purpose.]—The purpose of a legacy expressed to be given "for the use and benefit" of a person to whom the testator is not in loco parentis is not such a particular purpose as will be satisfied by a subsequent settlement by the testator of a similar sum by way of provision for such person and so cause ademption of the legacy. Smythies, In re; Weyman v. Smythies, 72 L. J. Ch. 216; [1903] 1 Ch. 259; 87 L. T. 742; 51 W. R. 284—Swinfen Eady, J.

Specific Legacy—Policy of Insurance.]—By his will the testator directed his trustees in the fourth place to keep up a policy of insurance for 4,000*l.* which he had taken in his own name on the life of his wife, and on her death to divide the proceeds equally among all his children then alive and the issue of predeceasing. The testator was predeceased by his wife. Shortly before her death he had become incapax, and a curator bonis was appointed. He continued incapax down to his death. The proceeds of the policy were received by the curator, who after making certain payments on behalf of the ward invested the balance of 3,900*l.* on a deposit receipt in his own name, and the sum remained so invested at the date of the testator's death. In a question between the testator's daughters who claimed their share under the fourth direction of the will, and his sons, who were the residuary legatees,—Held, that the testator by the fourth direction in his will had provided only for the case of his wife surviving him, and had made no provision for the case which had occurred of his wife predeceasing him, and that in any view the legacy was a specific legacy of the contents of the policy, and could not receive effect, as these had been merged in the testator's general estate before his death. Davidson's Trustees v. Davidson, 4 F. 107—Ct. of Sess.

— A testatrix by her will, made in February, 1897, gave a moiety of a trust fund of 8,000*l.* on deposit at V. & Co., to which she was entitled, subject to a prior life interest to her nephews and nieces. She bequeathed her residue, including money at her banker's and on deposit with V. & Co., to S. M. M. In March, 1897, the prior life interest determined; and on December 14, 1897, 4,000*l.* was transferred by the trustee to the testatrix's deposit account with V. & Co.:—Held, that the plain rule in cases of ademption was to enquire whether the specific thing given remained or not at the death of the testator. Here the 4,000*l.* (the moiety of the trust fund of 8,000*l.*) was intact, and was not adeemed either in whole or in part. Vickers, In re; Vickers v. Mellor, 81 L. T. 719—Kekewich, J.

Legacy by Parent to Child—Residue to Child and Stranger—Advances to Child—Portion.—The rule that a portion given to a child by its father or one in loco parentis to it, adeems in whole or in part a previous pecuniary legacy or residuary bequest, and must be brought into account before the child can take a benefit under the will, applies against the child only in favour of other children, and not in favour of a stranger. Meinertzhagen v. Walters (41 L. J. Ch. 801; L. R. 7 Ch. 670) followed. Heather, In re; Pumfrey v. Fryer, 75 L. J. Ch. 568; [1906] 2 Ch. 230; 95 L. T. 352; 54 W. R. 625—Swinfen Eady, J.

Legacy to Child—Gift by Testator—Double Portion—Satisfaction—“Advance.”—The rule that a gift by a parent to a child, to be in satisfaction of a legacy to the same child, must be ejusdem generis with the legacy, is still in force. It has not been overruled by Lawes, In re; Lawes v. Lawes (20 Ch. D. 81). Observations of NORTH, J., in Vickers, In re; Vickers v. Vickers (57 L. J. Ch. 738; 37 Ch. D. 525), considered and disapproved of. Jaques, In re; Hodgson v. Bratsby, 72 L. J. Ch. 197; [1903] 1 Ch. 267; 88 L. T. 210; 51 W. R. 229—C.A.

A testator by codicil provided that his daughter or the persons claiming the real estate specifically devised, and the share of residuary real and personal estate bequeathed in her favour, should not participate in the benefit of such devise and bequest without bringing into hotchpot “any advances or moneys lent by” the testator to the daughter or her husband since their marriage:—Held, that the word “advances” did not cover a farm and farming stock purchased by the testator and given to his daughter, and that she was not bound to bring the moneys applied in such purchases into account. Id.

(e) Advancement.

Heir-at-Law—Assignment—Distribution of Assets—Hotchpot.—D. was possessed of a farm held under lease per autre vie. By deed executed on the marriage of his son J., in consideration of the marriage and of 600*l.* paid to him by the father of the intended wife, D. assigned the farm and certain stock and chattels to J. D. died intestate, leaving J., his eldest son and heir-at-law, surviving:—Held, that the farm was exempt from being brought into hotchpot in the distribution of assets, on the ground that the assignment of it was an advancement of “land” to the heir-at-law, but that the stock and chattels transferred to him by the deed must be brought into hotchpot as being simply an advancement of personal estate. Lyons, In re; Lyons v. Lyons, [1905] 1 L. R. 156—M.R. And see Hocking, In re; Michell v. Loe, [1898] 2 Ch. 567, and Whiteford, In re;

Inglis v. Whiteford, 72 L. J. Ch. 540; [1903] 1 Ch. 889; 51 W. R. 491; also SATISFACTION, col. 2892.

(f) Ambiguity and Uncertainty.

Ambiguity Explained by Reference to Codicil.—Where there is an ambiguity in a will, it may be explained by reference to a recital in a codicil, provided that the latter is not obviously erroneous. Darley v. Martin (22 L. J. C.P. 249; 13 C.B. 683) and Grover v. Raper (5 W. R. 134) followed. Venn, In re; Linden v. Ingram, 73 L. J. Ch. 507; [1904] 2 Ch. 52; 90 L. T. 502; 52 W. R. 603—Joyce, J.

Previous Testamentary Instrument—Evidence.—Though no verbal or written statement of the intention of a testator is admissible, yet a previous testamentary instrument may be given in evidence to explain an ambiguous or insensible expression in a will. Flood v. Flood, [1902] 1 Ir. R. 538—M.R.

Extrinsic Evidence—Admissibility—Situation of Testator at Time of Making Will—Legacies—Fund for Payment—Specific Legacy—Administration.—Testator by his will appointed an executor and directed that all his just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses should be paid as soon as conveniently might be after his decease. He then made certain specific bequests and a specific devise of real estate, and gave an annuity and several legacies, amounting to nearly 12,000*l.*, and continued: “All the residue and remainder of 9,187*l.* lent on mortgage to L. . . and of the sum of 4,000*l.* lent on mortgage to K. . . after payment of my just debts and funeral expenses and the expenses of proving this my will I give and bequeath unto” three persons named. The will contained no general residuary bequest. Extrinsic evidence was adduced showing that at the date of his will the testator had no other properties than those mentioned in the will, except about 145*l.* at his bank, but that between the date of his will and his death he became possessed of some 8,600*l.*, which went to increase his personal estate. On the question out of what fund the annuity and legacies ought to be paid,—Held, by LORD ALVERSTONE, M.R., and COLLINS, L.J. (dissentiente RIGBY, L.J.), that the will was so far ambiguous as to entitle the Court to receive extrinsic evidence so as to place itself in the position of the testator when he made his will, and that, having regard to that evidence, the annuity and legacies, as well as the debts and funeral expenses and the expenses of proving the will, were intended to be paid out of the two mortgage debts. Held, by RIGBY, L.J., that the gift was a clear and unambiguous gift of the mortgage debts subject only to the payment of the debts and funeral expenses and the expenses of proving the will. The principles on which extrinsic evidence is admissible on the construction of a will discussed. Held also, that, on the footing of the construction, the annuity and legacies were specific bequests, and were payable exclusively out of the two mortgage debts, and not out of the undisposed-of personal estate. Grainger, In re; Dawson v. Higgins, 69 L. J. Ch. 789; [1900] 2 Ch. 756; 83 L. T. 209; 48 W. R. 673; 49 W. R. 197—C.A.

Name and Description of Beneficiary—Ambiguity—Extrinsic Evidence to Explain.]—A testator gave property on trust for "his grandsons Robert William Henderson and John Barnett Henderson, or the survivor of them, in case they or he shall attain twenty-one years." One of the testator's grandsons was named Robert William Henderson, son of Oliver Henderson. The testator left two other grandsons (the sons of a deceased son) named William Robert Henderson and John Barnett Henderson:—Held, that extrinsic evidence was admissible to shew that William Robert Henderson was the person really intended in the will. Henderson v. Henderson, [1905] 1 Ir. R. 353—Kennedy, J.

Latent Ambiguity—Evidence of Previous Wills.]—Where there is no one who answers to the description of a legatee given by a testator in his will, former wills made by him are admissible in evidence to shew his knowledge and state of mind at the time, so as to help the Court to find out the person whom he intended to benefit. Waller, In re; White v. Scoles, 68 L. J. Ch. 526; 80 L. T. 701; 47 W. R. 563—C.A.

Testator gave legacies to "such of the daughters of my late friend Ignatius Scoles deceased as shall be living and unmarried at my decease." Ignatius Scoles was living at the date of the will, and had never been married. He was the son of J. J. Scoles, who was dead at the date of the will, and who had several daughters, five of whom were living and unmarried at the date of the testator's death. It appeared that the testator was acquainted with the Scoles family, and knew the five daughters of J. J. Scoles intimately, and might have known J. J. Scoles; also that he knew that Ignatius was a Jesuit priest, and could not marry. By a former will he had left legacies to the daughters of J. J. Scoles by name, describing them as the daughters of "the late Mr. Scoles . . . who formerly resided" at the house where J. J. Scoles had lived:—Held, that the five daughters of J. J. Scoles were entitled to the legacies. Ib.

Copyholds—Custom of Manor—Title—Possession—Married Woman—Disability—Husband Suing in Right of Wife—Will—Construction—"Estate."]—Upon the death of an intestate in 1869, the copyholds of which he died possessed passed by the custom of the manor to his widow, and not to his eldest son. The intestate's widow died in 1870, having by her will given all the share and proportion of her late husband's estate to which she was entitled on his decease to be equally divided between her two daughters, one of whom was the plaintiff M. H.; and the testatrix stated that this provision was made in lieu of the various copyhold and freehold lands of her late husband, which descended to her son on the intestacy of her husband. At that time P. H. B., the eldest son of the intestate, was a minor, and was believed by every one to be entitled to the copyholds. In 1870 the husband of M. H. and a co-plaintiff entered into possession of the copyholds, and collected the rents until P. H. B. came of age in 1878, when he accounted to him and gave up possession, having in the meantime procured an enfranchisement in his favour. In 1888 it was first discovered that the widow was the customary heir of this property, which had been in the meantime enfranchised. P. H. B. remained in possession until his death in 1890, having by his will given all his real estate to the defendants upon trust for the two children of the plaintiffs. In September, 1901, M. H. and her husband in her right brought an action claiming declarations to establish the right of M. H. to a moiety of this property as devisee under the widow's will:—Held, that both plaintiffs were barred by the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, inasmuch as P. H. B. had been in receipt of the rents and profits of the property since 1870, more than thirty years before action brought; and semble, that as the widow had no intention of passing this real estate, which she thought had descended to her son, the gift in her will of all her share and proportion of her late husband's estate was ambiguous and not sufficient to pass this property, having regard to the context. Hounsell v. Dunning, 71 L. J. Ch. 259; [1902] 1 Ch. 512; 86 L. T. 382—Joyce, J.

Uncertainty—Object of Bequest not Named.]—A testatrix left a will in these terms: "I . . . for the love I have for my husband, J. M., bequeath and leave everything which belongs to me or may belong to me at some future time." Certain specific bequests to named individuals followed:—Held (dissentiente Lord Young), that this will did not contain a bequest in favour of the husband, J. M. Murdoch v. Brass, 6 F. 841—Ct. of Sess.

Erroneous Recital in Codicil—Parol Evidence.]—A testatrix by will made in 1897, among other legacies to charitable institutions, bequeathed to the British Home for Incurables, Streatham, S.W., mentioning accurately the name of its secretary and address of its office, 250l. By codicil made in 1902, she, after reciting twice incorrectly that she had given by will 500l. to the British Home for Incurables, Streatham, S.W., and, amongst others, to St. M.'s Orphanage, Bayswater, 100l., revoked all the legacies, "and instead thereof" bequeathed 500l. each to the Royal Home for Incurables, Streatham, S.W., and to St. M.'s Orphanage. Two societies made claim to the legacy of 500l. The executors paid it to one of them, the defendants, the Royal Hospital for Incurables, which was founded in 1854. In an action by the other, the plaintiffs, an institution founded in 1861, by the name of the British Home for Incurables, and in 1899 incorporated by charter by its present name, against the defendant institution and the executors, — Held, that on a proper construction of the codicil, the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the 500l. and interest, and that, in arriving at a decision of the question which institution was entitled to it, evidence was admissible of the nature and amount of the testatrix's subscriptions to the plaintiff and defendant institutions, and the titles she employed to designate them respectively, but not of her charitable intentions with regard to them. British Home and Hospital for Incurables v. Royal Hospital for Incurables, 89 L. T. 495—Kekewich, J.

Direction to Executrix to Dispose of Estate according to Wishes Verbally Expressed—Parol Evidence not Admissible.]—A testator, after appointing his wife sole executrix and giving her a life interest in his property, continued as follows: "I desire and empower her by her will or in her lifetime to dispose of my estate in accordance with my wishes verbally expressed by me to her"—Held, that parol evidence was not admissible to explain the testator's wishes, and that the clause purporting to create a power of disposition in the widow was void for uncertainty. Fleetwood, In re; Sidgreaves v. Brewer (49 L. J. Ch. 514; 15 Ch. D. 394), distinguished. Helley, In re; Helley v. Helley, 71 L. J. Ch. 769; [1902] 2 Ch. 866; 87 L. T. 265; 51 W. R. 202—Joyce, J.

Gift of Portions—Amount to be Fixed by Trustees.—A testator directed that the remainder of his farm, houses, and chattels should be divided equally between his two sons, subject among other payments to the payment of a portion to each of his five daughters, to be determined by his wife and executors, according to the value of their portions of the farm and the services the girls might have rendered to the family; and in case of a daughter's share being a marriage share, according to the match she might make, all of which amount of money and times and ways of payment were to be determined by his wife and executors:—Held, that the gift of portions to the daughters was not void for uncertainty. Conn, In re; Conn v. Burns, [1898] 1 Ir. R. 337—V.O.

Bequest to be Applied "in charity or works of public utility"—Bequest "for the benefit or hospitality" of a Company.—A testator bequeathed to the company of C. and the company of A. the sum of 5,000*l.* each, to be invested in such securities as the master and court of assistants of such companies might select, the revenue to be expended at the option of the master and court of such companies, as to two-thirds in "charity or works of public utility," and as to the remaining one-third for "the benefit or hospitality of the respective companies"—Held, that "or" was used disjunctively, and that the whole of the two-thirds might be applied for purposes which were not charitable, and therefore that the gift failed as to two-thirds. But, held, the gift of one-third was a gift of income for the absolute benefit of the companies, and that they were absolutely entitled to one-third. Langham v. Peterson, 87 L. T. 744; 67 J. P. 75—Swinfen Eady, J. And see CHARITY.

(g) Annuity.

Gift of Money to Executors to be Laid Out in Purchasing Annuity for A.—Interest.—A sum of money bequeathed to executors to be laid out by them in the purchase of an annuity carries interest only from a date twelve months after the death of the testator. A testator bequeathed to his executors the sum of 1,000*l.*, free of duty, to be laid out by them in the purchase of an annuity for his daughter M. The will contained no clause for maintenance, nor was there any further provision made for M.:—Held, that interest only commenced to run twelve months after the testator's death. Friend, In re; Friend v. Young, 78 L. T. 222—Stirling, J.

To Wife for Maintenance of Infant—Cesser.]—

A testator directed his trustees to pay an annuity to his wife during widowhood, and to pay to her a further annuity till his daughter should attain twenty-one to be applied by his wife for the maintenance and education of his daughter. The widow died while the daughter was an infant:—Held, that the further annuity had not ceased. Yates, In re; Yates v. Wyatt, 70 L. J. Ch. 725; [1901] 2 Ch. 438; 85 L. T. 393; 49 W. R. 646—Byrne, J.

Payable out of Income—Alternative Annuity not Expressed to be so Payable—Gift Over—"Subject to the trusts aforesaid"—Charge on Corpus or Continuing Charge on Income.—A testator, after devising certain real estate to his wife for life and after certain specific and pecuniary bequests, gave all his residuary real and personal estate to trustees upon trust for sale and conversion and to hold the net proceeds of sale upon trust in the first place to pay the interest on any mortgage on the estate given to his wife for life, "And in the next place in case I shall leave any child living at my decease then upon trust to pay to my said wife during her life and so long as any child of mine shall be living such a sum out of the income of my said residuary trust funds as with the income which my said wife shall from time to time receive under or by virtue of the settlement made on our marriage shall make up the total annual sum of 8,000*l.* But in case I shall leave no child surviving me or leaving such every such child shall die in the lifetime of my said wife then Upon trust to pay to her during her life such further sum as with the income to be derived from the said settlement shall make up the total annual sum of 10,000*l.* And I direct that the said annual sums of 8,000*l.* or 10,000*l.* as the case may be shall be deemed to commence and be payable as from the date of my decease And subject to the trusts aforesaid In trust to pay and divide my said residuary trust funds" among his children; and in default of children and subject to the trusts aforesaid he gave his residuary trust funds to his nephew. The testator died without having had any issue. His widow was still living. The income of the residuary estate was insufficient to pay the annual sum required:—Held (FLETCHER MOULTON, L.J., dissenting), that there were not two independent alternative gifts, but one provision for the widow in the shape of an annuity varying in amount according as one of two antithetical events should occur; that the words "out of the income of my said residuary trust funds" governed both clauses of the entire trust; that the words "subject to the trusts aforesaid" meant subject to the payment out of income of such sum as would make up 10,000*l.* a year; and that consequently such annual sum was not a charge on the corpus of the residuary estate or a continuing charge on the income thereof after the death of the widow. Boden, In re; Boden v. Boden, 76 L. J. Ch. 100; [1907] 1 Ch. 132; 95 L. T. 741—C.A.

•Tenant for Life and Remainderman—Public-house—Compensation Fund—Statutory Charge.—Deduction from Rent—Incidence of Charge.]—Where a licensed house is comprised in a trust under a will, the sum deducted from the rent as percentage of a charge imposed on the tenant under section 3 of the Licensing Act, 1904, is an annual outgoing, and the person entitled to the income of the estate has no right to have a sum equal to the deduction raised out of capital and paid to him, in the absence of any direction to that effect in the will. Smith, In re; Smith v. Dodsworth, 75 L. J. Ch. 442; [1906] 1 Ch. 799; 94 L. T. 643; 54 W. R. 449; 70 J. P. 169; 22 T. L. R. 412—Swinfen Eady, J.

Accumulations.]—A testator gave to his wife, as personal provision for her and the children until majority or provision by marriage, an annuity of 12,000 dollars. The residue was given to the children living at testator's death, and on the death of any of them to their children, who were to be considered as one root and take the share of their parent. The trustees were to administer the property until the death of all the children, when a division was to be made. Each of the children from the time of majority or marriage was to receive out of the revenue 6,000 dollars a year:—Held, in a suit by the eldest son—first, that the income and arrears of income due to each child could only be taken from the current and accumulated revenue of his share, so long as such revenue was sufficient; secondly, that each of the children, whether of age or a minor, was entitled, without regard to the unequal benefits derived from their mother's annuity, to an equal share from the death of the father of the net revenue of the estate; thirdly, that the substitution in favour of children's children was confined to the capital share of residue bequeathed, the accumulations arising from revenue during minorities belonging absolutely to the legacies, the testator's children. Beaudry v. Barbeau, 69 L. J. P. C. 131; [1900] A. C. 669; 83 L. T. 236—P. C.

Arrears—Interest.]—Arrears of an annuity given by a will do not as a rule carry interest. Hiscoe, In re; Hiscoe v. Waite, 71 L. J. Ch. 347—Kekewich, J.

Administration Action—Certificate.]—Statement at p. 845 of Daniell's Chancery Practice (7th ed.), vol. i., that "the certificate shews the period from which arrears of annuities are due, if they are due from any other period than the testator's death," dissented from. Ib.

Rentcharge—Issuing out of Leaseholds—Chattel Real—Vendor's Lien—Intestacy—Next-of-Kin.]—A rentcharge issuing out of leaseholds is a chattel real. A rentcharge of this kind contracted to be purchased by a testator who died intestate in respect thereof is within the provisions of the Real Estate Charges Acts, 1854, 1867, and 1877 (which are to be read together), and passes to his next-of-kin as persons claiming through him, subject, as between themselves and the other persons claiming through the deceased, to a primary liability to payment of the vendor's lien for unpaid purchase-money, notwithstanding the absence of any reference to next-of-kin in the negating part of section 1 of the Act of 1877.

(h) Apportionment.

"Express stipulation."—A declaration in a will that every share "hereby bequeathed shall carry the dividends accruing thereon at my death" is an "express stipulation," within section 7 of the Apportionment Act, 1870, that no apportionment shall take place; and trustees to whom shares are given will take the dividends accruing thereon as income, not as capital. Every company formed and registered under the Companies Act, 1862, is a "public company" within section 5 of the Apportionment Act, 1870. Lysaght, In re; Lysaght v. Lysaght, 67 L. J. Ch. 65; [1893] 1 Ch. 115; 77 L. T. 637—C. A.

"Whole of income derived" from certain Shares.]—A declaration by a testator that "the whole of the income derived" from certain shares in a limited company shall, after his death, be paid to A during her life is an "express stipulation" within section 7 of the Apportionment Act, 1870, that no apportionment shall take place. Meredith, In re; Stone v. Meredith, 67 L. J. Ch. 409; 78 L. T. 492—North, J.

(i) Charge of Debts and Legacies.

Devise of Real Estate to Trustees—Right to Sell.]—A testator, after appointing an executrix and directing his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses to be paid, and, subject thereto, making certain pecuniary bequests, gave all the rest, residue, and remainder of his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to pay to or permit and suffer his wife to receive the rents and profits of his real estate and the income of his personal estate (which last he directed to be converted) during her life, and after her decease to pay to or permit and suffer his niece to receive the same during her life for her separate use, and after the death of the survivor the testator directed the trustees to pay legacies to two persons if then living, and after payment thereof to stand possessed of his real estate and residue of his personal estate in trust for the children of his niece when they should attain twenty-one years, with a gift over in default of such children: Held, that the testator had charged his real estate with the payment of his debts and legacies, both with those payable immediately on his own death (Creville v. Browne, 7 H. L. C. 689, followed), and also with the reversionary legacies payable on the death of the tenants for life; but that, inasmuch as the first tenant for life, being entitled to the rents and profits of the real estate not for her separate use, took, according to Doe d. Leicester v. Biggs (2 Taunt. 109), the legal estate during her life, the testator had not devised the same so charged to the trustees for the whole of his estate and interest therein, and that, consequently, the trustees had not power to sell the real estate under section 14 of the Law of Property Amendment Act, 1859 (Lord St. Leonards' Act). Adams and Perry's Contract, In re, 68 L. J. Ch. 259; [1899] 1 Ch. 554; 80 L. T. 149; 47 W. R. 326—Stirling, J.

Horton v. Horton (7 Term Rep. 652) recognised in Van Grutten v. Foxwell (66 L. J. Q.B. 745; [1897] A.C. 558), distinguished, on the ground that, in the present case, the trustees having no active duties to perform during the life of the first tenant for life, there was no reason why they should be held to take the legal estate during that period. Doe d. Noble v. Bolton (11 Ad. & E. 188; 3 P. & D. 135) followed. Ib.

If Personal Estate Insufficient—Specific Devise—Mortgage.]—A testator directed that legacies should in the first instance be charged upon "chattel property, money and effects," and if they should be insufficient, upon his "real and personal estates," and then made two specific devises of real estate, one of which only was expressed to be "subject as aforesaid." These devises exhausted the whole real estate, and the personalty was insufficient. The lands devised not expressed to be "subject as aforesaid" were mortgaged to the appellants:—Held, that the legacies were charged upon these lands. Bank of Ireland v. McCarthy, 67 L. J. P.O. 13; [1898] A.C. 181; 77 L. T. 777—H.L. (Ir.)

(j) Charity.

Devise of Realty—Trust—Discretionary Power—Charitable or other Purpose.]—A testatrix, entitled to real estate, by her will provided as follows: "I give and bequeath my dwelling-house, office-house, yard and garden to the Rev. T. L., parish priest, for a Roman Catholic school, or for whatever other purpose he pleases." The testatrix died within three months of the date of the execution of the will:—Held, that there was no trust created for a charitable purpose, and that the Rev. T. L. was entitled beneficially to the gift. Harbison, In re; Morris v. Larkin, [1902] 1 Ir. R. 103—M.R.

Uncertainty of Object—Erroneous Recital in Codicil.]—A testatrix, by will made in 1897, among other legacies to charitable institutions, bequeathed to the British Home for Incurables, Streatham, S.W., mentioning accurately the name of its secretary and address of its office, 250l. By codicil made in 1902, after reciting twice incorrectly that she had given by will 500l. to the British Home for Incurables, Streatham, S.W., and amongst others, to St. M.'s Orphanage, Bayswater, 100l., she revoked all the legacies, "and instead thereof" bequeathed 500l. each to the Royal Home for Incurables, Streatham, S.W., and to St. M.'s Orphanage. The legacy of 500l. was claimed by the Royal Hospital for Incurables and by the plaintiff institution, founded in 1861 by the name of the British Home for Incurables, and in 1899 incorporated by Royal Charter by its present name:—Held, that, having regard to entries in a book kept by the testatrix containing particulars of her charitable contributions, she distinguished the two institutions as the "Royal" and the "British," and therefore, on the true construction of the codicil, the Royal Hospital for Incurables was entitled to the legacy. British Home for Incurables v. Royal Hospital for Incurables, 90 L. T. 601—C.A. And see AMBIGUITY, supra, col. 2819, and CHARITY.

(k) Children.

"Children belonging to me"—Grant of Probate to Illegitimate Child.]—There is a distinction between gifts whether by deed or will by the father of illegitimate children and those by their mother, and the reasons of public policy which are against the former do not extend to the latter. Frogley, In the goods of, 74 L. J. P. 72; [1905] P. 137; 92 L. T. 429; 54 W. R. 48; 21 T. L. R. 341—Bargrave Deane, J.

The expression children "belonging to me" in the will of a spinster construed to extend to an illegitimate child in fact living at her death. Lowe, In re; Danily v. Platt (51 L. J. Ch. 415), commented on. Ib.

Children or their "natural representatives" if Dead—Widow of Child Excluded.]—A testator gave all his property after certain life interests upon trust for all and every his children, whether sons or daughters, who should then be living or their "natural representatives" if dead according to the statute rule of distribution. He left seven children, one of whom (a son) died before the property became divisible, leaving a widow (his second wife) and children by his first wife:—Held, that as the widow's position was a contractual one, and that of the children, owing to nature, one by affinity of blood, the testator intended such persons as by nature represented the children, and excluded contractual relations. The widow was therefore held not entitled to share with the children. Bromley, In re; Wilson v. Bromley, 83 L. T. 315—Farwell, J.

Gift to Testator's Children—Provision for Grandchildren in Case any Child "shall" Die—Child Dead at Date of Will Leaving Children.]—A testator by his will gave relatively small legacies to four children of his deceased son A., whom in his will he described as "my deceased son." He also made specific bequests in favour of certain of his own children, and gave the residue of his estate, which was of large value, "in trust for all or any of my children who shall be living at my death and being a son or sons attain the age of 21 years or being a daughter or daughters attain that age or marry under that age and if more than one in equal shares; provided that in case any one or more of my children shall predecease me leaving any child or children living at my death then such child or children of any deceased child shall take the share which his her or their parent would have taken if such parent were living and over the age of 21 at my decease." The testator left eight children him surviving. A., who was dead at the date of the will, left five children, all of whom survived the testator:—Held (dissentiente ROMER, L.J.), that on the true construction of the will the children of the predeceased son A. were entitled to share in the residue. The principle of the decision in Loring v. Thomas (30 L. J. Ch. 789; 1 Dr. & S. 495) applied. Gorringe, In re; Gorringe v. Gorringe, 75 L. J. Ch. 687; [1906] 2 Ch. 341; 95 L. T. 574—C.A. Reversing, 54 W. R. 267—Joyce, J.

Gift of Income of Residue to Children for Life in Equal Shares Subject to Annuity to Widow—Advances to Some Children—Adjustment between Advanced and Unadvanced Children—Hotchpot.]—A testator, by his will and codicil, dated May 5, 1880, and July 12, 1882, respectively, after giving certain legacies, devised and bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees upon trust to pay out of the income thereof the annual sum of 2,000*l.* to his widow during her life, and, subject thereto, to divide the residuary estate into as many shares as there should be children living at his death, and to pay the annual income of such shares to his children; and then upon trusts therein expressed. The testator provided that, as to certain advances already made to some of his children, and as to any future advances to his children exceeding at any one time the sum of 1,000*l.*, these advances should be treated as capital of the original shares, and be brought into hotchpot and accounted for accordingly. The testator died on July 3, 1887, and left surviving him six children, of whom three had received advances and three had not. The widow died in March, 1900:—Held, that for the purpose of ascertaining the proportions of the settled shares of the six children, the value of the net residuary estate of the testator at the day of his death ought to be ascertained, and there should be added thereto the several advances, and that the actual income received from the testator's death ought to be divided in the respective proportions so ascertained, and that the share of each child in such income ought to be debited with one sixth part of testator's widow's annuity; and therefore any calculation of interest on the amount advanced to any child was unnecessary. Hargreaves, In re; Hargreaves v. Hargreaves, 88 L. T. 100—C.A.

Gift "to the children of A and B"—Knowledge of Testator—Mode of Division.]—A gift of personality "to the children of A and B," unless to the knowledge of the testator B be dead leaving children alive, is a gift of one moiety to the children of A and the other moiety to B. Walbran, In re; Milner v. Walbran, 75 L. J. Ch. 105; [1906] 1 Ch. 64; 93 L. T. 745; 54 W. R. 167—Joyce, J.

Eldest or Only Son for Time Being Entitled to Possession or Receipt of Rents and Profits of Estate—Exclusion of—Estate Disentailed—Testator not in Loco Parentis.]—In construing limitations in an instrument excluding from certain benefits an eldest son for the time being entitled to the possession or to the receipt of the rents and profits of certain estates, a different rule is to be applied where the author of the instrument is a parent or person in loco parentis making provision for a family from that to be applied where the author does not stand in that relation to the objects of his bounty. Shuttleworth v. Murray, 70 L. J. Ch. 453; [1901] 1 Ch. 819; 84 L. T. 605; 49 W. R. 388—C.A.

Testator, who died in 1875, by his will made in 1855, devised his real estates to the use of his nephew for life, with remainder to all and every the son and sons of the nephew born in the lifetime of the testator, or in due time afterwards ("other than and except an eldest or only son for the time being entitled to the possession or to the receipt of the rents and profits of certain estates" situate at C., "after the decease" of the nephew, "as tenant for life or any greater estate or interest whatsoever"), severally and successively in remainder one after another for their respective lives. In 1869, the eldest son of the nephew, who was tenant in tail of the C. estates in remainder expectant on the death of his father, and was then twenty-one, joined with his father in disentailing the estates. The estates were sold, and the proceeds held on certain trusts, under which the eldest son took some benefit. He subsequently became bankrupt, and his interest in the proceeds was sold. The nephew was dead:—Held, that the eldest son was not within the exception, and he was entitled to the first life interest after the death of the nephew in the estates devised by the testator's will. Collingwood v. Stanhope (38 L. J. Ch. 421; L. R. 4 H.L. 43) distinguished. Ib.

"Next eldest brother."]—By his will B. left all his property to his wife for life, and after her death he devised to each of his six sons a specific portion of his landed property, and to the other (his third) son he left one shilling. He charged some of these lands so devised with portions for his daughters, and directed that if any of his sons should "die before he attained the age of thirty, the portion of him so dying should go to his next eldest brother, and so on, respectively"; and if any of them should die without issue lawfully begotten after attaining the age of thirty, then his share should go to his "next eldest brother, and so on, respectively":—Held, that by "next eldest brother" was meant the next younger, and not the next elder. Crofts v. Beamish, [1905] 2 Ir. R. 349—C.A.

Discretionary Trusts—Support of Husband and Wife and Children or any of Them or Accumulation—Validity—Remoteness.]—A testator devised and bequeathed unto trustees certain property, with power to sell the same, and he directed his trustees to apply the net income of the property or of the investments for the time being representing the proceeds of sale thereof or any part thereof in such proportions and generally in such manner as to his trustees in their absolute discretion should seem best for the support of his son W. C. B. and his wife and children or any of them, or to accumulate the same or any part thereof at their like discretion for the benefit of the children of his son who should become entitled to the capital of the trust premises under the trust therein contained, and, subject to such discretionary trust, he directed his trustees to pay the net annual income to his son W. C. B. during his life, and after his decease to his widow (if any) during her life and so long as she should remain his widow, and after the death of the survivor of them or the re-marriage of his widow the testator declared that his trustees should stand possessed of the property and of the investments by which the proceeds of sale thereof might for the time being be represented, as well the capital as the income, upon trust for the child or children of his son W. C. B. who being sons attained the age of twenty-one years, or being daughters attained that age or married under it, if more than one, in equal shares as tenants in common:—Held, that on the construction of the will the discretionary trust was limited to the life of W. C. B., but that if it was not so limited it was void as infringing the rule against perpetuities. Blew, In re; Blew v. Gunner, 75 L. J. Ch. 373; [1906] 1 Ch. 624; 95 L. T. 382; 54 W. Trust for Children, including named Illegitimate Son—Legitimation for all other Purposes of Will.]—A testator devised Blackacre to his trustees upon trust for the benefit of his nephew G. F. S. and his wife and issue, "including S. S. R. hereinafter named," and subject thereto to sell the same and hold the proceeds on trust for all the children of G. F. S., "including amongst such children S. S. R. the illegitimate son of my said nephew," with a gift over. By the next following devise of his will the testator gave Whiteacre to his trustees upon trust to pay the income thereof to his niece M. S. for her life, and subject thereto to sell the same and hold the proceeds on trust for his named nephews and nieces, including G. F. S., and "for the issue living at the decease of M. S. of such of my said other nephews and nieces as shall die in the lifetime of M. S. leaving issue as tenants in common," S. S. R. not being expressly mentioned in this later devise. G. F. S. predeceased M. S. leaving issue only the illegitimate son S. S. R.:—Held, that there was sufficient recognition of S. S. R. in the will to justify the inclusion of him in the class of issue of G. F. S. so as to share in the devise of Whiteacre. Smilter, In re; Bedford v. Hughes, 72 L. J. Ch. 102; [1903] 1 Ch. 198; 87 L. T. 644; 51 W. R. 231—Kekewich, J.

Expression of Number — Evidence — Admissibility.]—The testator gave a share in his residue to "the three children respectively of Caroline Lewis born prior to her marriage with her present husband." There were four such children (all illegitimate) of Caroline Lewis, born in 1873, 1876, 1878, and 1880. The testator was the father of the three later-born children, and acknowledged the paternity:—Held, that the burden of proof was on the child born in 1873 to shew that the testator intended to benefit him. Held also that evidence that the testator knew of the existence of the child born in 1873 was admissible, but that his instructions for his will and declarations of intention to benefit the parties, and former wills, were inadmissible. Mayo, In re; Chester v. Keirl, 70 L. J. Ch. 261; [1901] 1 Ch. 404; 84 L. T. 117—Farwell, J.

Devisee "Born" within Testator's Lifetime—Devisee en Ventre sa Mère at Time of Testator's Death.]—There is no rule of law that the word "born" includes a child en ventre sa mère under all circumstances. Where, accordingly, a will devised an estate tail to a child unborn at the date of the will, with a proviso that this estate tail was to be cut down to a life estate in case the devisee should be "born" within the testator's lifetime,—Held, that the devisee was not "born" within the testator's lifetime, although he was en ventre sa mère at the date of the testator's death. Villar v. Gilbey, 74 L. J. Ch. 529; [1905] 2 Ch. 301; 93 L. T. 51; 53 W. R. 658; 21 T. L. R. 561—Swinfen Eady, J.

"Nephews and nieces" — Dispositions by Illegitimate Testator—Indications of Meaning.]—A testator, who was one of eight natural children born of the same father and mother, and by them brought up as one family, recognising one another as brothers and sisters and recognised by the father as his children, made testamentary dispositions in favour of six of the eight by name, with the addition "my brother" or "my sister," and in favour of three of their children with the addition "my nephew" or "my niece." One of the reputed sisters, who had married and died long before the date of the will, was not mentioned therein, nor were her children:—Held, that the latter were entitled, equally with the children of the named brothers and sisters, to share in a residuary gift in the will to "all my nephews and nieces," the testator having by the language above-mentioned sufficiently indicated what he meant by the expression. Corsellis, In re; Freeborn v. Napper, 75 L. J. Ch. 607; [1906] 2 Ch. 316; 95 L. T. 583; 54 W. R. 536—Swinfen Eady, J.

Illegitimate Son Described as "Son"—Residuary Gift to Grandchildren — Children of Illegitimate Son.]—A testatrix having described her illegitimate son George as "my son George," gave her residue to "all my grandchildren." George left three children, and three legitimate children of the testatrix also left issue:—Held, that the children of George were entitled to share in the residuary gift in favour of grandchildren. Kiddle, In re; Gont v. Kiddle, 92 L. T. 724; 53 W. R. 616—Kekewich, J.

Illegitimate Children—Intention of Mistaken Testatrix.]—Effect given to the express intention of a testatrix to benefit a specified class of children, even where she was in error in believing that as a fact they had been legitimated by the Roman-Dutch law which legitimates children born out of wedlock when the parents are subsequently married by lawful ceremony. Plant In re; Griffith v. Hill, 47 W. R. 183—Kekewich, J.

— Gift to Children by Name — Gift to Next-of-Kin of Children—Intestacy.]—A testator gave legacies to his seven children, naming them, and directed his trustees to hold his residuary estate in trust in equal shares for such of his seven children as should be then living and have attained or attain the age of twenty-one years; daughters' shares to be retained upon trust to pay the income to her for life, and after her death upon trust for her children, as therein mentioned, and if there should be no such child, then in trust for the persons who at the death of such daughter would have become entitled to such share under the statutes for the distribution of the personal estates of intestates in case she had died possessed thereof without having been married. An illegitimate married daughter of the testator survived him, and died without ever having had a child:—Held, that her interest in the residue did not devolve upon the persons who would have been her next-of-kin at the time of her death had she been legitimate, but to her legal personal representative as if the same had been absolutely bequeathed to her. Standley's Estate, In re (L. R. 5 Eq. 303), followed. Deakin, In re; Starkey v. Eyres (63 L. J. Ch. 779; [1894] 3 Ch. 565), not followed. Wood, In re; Wood v. Wood, 70 L. J. Ch. 856; [1901] 2 Ch. 578; 85 L. T. 447; 50 W. —Trust for Unmarried Woman—“Her children living at my death”—After-born Illegitimate Child.—Where a testator provides for “the children living at my death” of a woman who is unmarried, her illegitimate children can take, if the relevant and admissible facts are such as to render such an intention attributable to the testator. There is no uncertainty in designating future illegitimate children by reference to the mother, and so long as the provision is limited to children in esse at the time when the will takes effect it is more in accordance with public policy that it should be effective than that they should become a burden on public funds. Occleston v. Fullalove (43 L. J. Ch. 267; L. R. 9 Ch. 147) and Hastie's Trust, In re (56 L. J. Ch. 792; 35 Ch. D. 728), followed. Loveland, In re; Loveland v. Loveland, 75 L. J. —Uncertainty—Public Policy.—In class gifts a will speaks from death, and therefore a bequest to a woman's future illegitimate children born in the testator's lifetime, and not defined by reference to actual paternity, is not uncertain or contrary to public policy—secus, a gift by deed. Occleston v. Fullalove (L. R. 9 Ch. 147) and Hastie's Trusts, In re (35 Ch. D. 728), followed. Ib. And see CLASS, infra.

Trust for Persons Entitled under Statutes of Distribution—Illegitimate Next-of-Kin.—Testator gave legacies to his seven children, naming them, and gave his residuary estate in trust for his wife for life, and after her death upon trust for such of his seven children thereinbefore named as should be then living and should attain the age of twenty-one years, and directed each daughter's share to be retained upon trust for the daughter for life, and after her death upon trust for her children who being sons should attain the age of twenty-one years, or being daughters should attain that age or marry, and if there should be no such child, then in trust for the persons who at the death of such daughter would have become entitled to such share under the Statutes of Distribution in case she had died possessed thereof without having been married. The three eldest children—two daughters and a son—were illegitimate. One of such illegitimate daughters survived the wife and attained twenty-one, and died without ever having had a child:—Held, that her share devolved on the persons who would have been her statutory next-of-kin at her death if the testator's children had been all legitimate.

(1) Class.

Gift, whether to Class or Personæ Designatæ.]

—A testator, among other legacies, gave the sum of 200*l.* to each of his three sisters, whom he named, and devised his farm, with all household furniture, &c., in the dwelling-house, and live stock, &c., subject to their mother's life interest therein, to his “said three sisters,” or such of them as should survive him, in equal shares as tenants in common. The testator bequeathed the residue of his property to a charitable institution. By a codicil he revoked the legacy of 200*l.* given to one of his sisters, and also the bequest in remainder to her of a share in the farm, &c., and in other respects confirmed his will. The testator's mother and three sisters survived him:—Held, that the bequest of the farm, &c., under the terms of the will passed to the sisters, not as members of a class, but as personæ designatæ, and that consequently the revoked share fell into the residue. Orford v. Orford, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 121—V.C.

Gift “to A and the children of B,” equally.]—

A gift to “A and the children of B,” A and B's children being in the same degree of relationship to the testator, is a gift to a class, and on the death of A in the testator's lifetime A's share does not lapse, but goes to B's children. Kingsbury v. Walter, 70 L. J. Ch. 546; [1901] A.C. 187; 84 L. T. 697—H.L. (E.)

Gift to A and B and the Children of C—Gift

Divisible into Thirds—No Class Gift.—By his will dated June 7, 1870, a testator bequeathed his residuary personal estate to trustees upon trust for sale and conversion, and upon certain trusts for the benefit of his daughter for life, and for her issue (all of which trusts failed), and the will then continued as follows: “And in case there shall be no child of my said daughter who being male shall attain the age of twenty-one years, or being female shall attain that age or marry, then I direct and declare that my said trustees or trustee shall stand possessed of the said residuary trust fund in trust for the said George Barker, his sister, Mary Barker, and the children now living of the said Richard Hollings who being male shall live to attain the age of twenty-one years, or being female shall live to attain that age or marry, and if more than one in equal shares, the share or shares of any of them being female to be for her or their sole and separate use.” The testator died on June 26, 1870. There were four children of Richard Hollings living at the date of the death of the testator, all of whom attained the age of twenty-one years. Held (dissentiente STIRLING, L.J.), that the intention of the testator was that the investments representing the residuary trust fund should be divided into equal thirds (one of such thirds being again divisible into fourths) between George Barker, Mary Barker, and the children of Richard Hollings; that those persons did not constitute a class, they not being united or connected by any common tie; and that the gift was therefore not a class gift. Reasoning of LORD WESTBURY in Davis v. Bennett (4 De G.

F. & J. 327) applied. Blackler v. Webb (2 P. Wms. 383) considered. Capes v. Dalton, 86 L. T. 129—C.A.

Gift to A and the Children of B to Share Equally.]—Testator gave property upon trust for A and the child or children of B who should attain the age of twenty-one years equally to be divided between them as tenants in common. —Held, by LINDLEY, M.R., and SIR F. H. JEUNE, that, whether or no this was to be called a gift to a class, the intention of the testator was that the property should go to the persons whom he named or such of them as should be living, and on the death of A in the lifetime of the testator A's share would not lapse, but would go to the children of B. Held, by ROMER, L.J., that the gift was a gift to a class, and as A did not survive so as to share, the rest of the class would take the whole property. Moss, In re; Kingsbury v. Walter, 68 L. J. Ch. 593; [1899] 2 Ch. 314; 81 L. T. 139; 47 W. R. 642—C.A.

Per ROMER, L.J.—A gift by will to a class and A equally, so that the testator contemplates A taking the same share that each member of the class will take, is prima facie a gift to a class. Id.

Gift to A and B and the Children of C—Gift to a Class.]—A testator by his will bequeathed his residuary personal estate to trustees upon trusts for the benefit of his daughter for life, and for her issue, and, in the event of the failure of issue, “in trust for G. B., his sister M. B., and the children now living of R. H., who being male shall live to attain the age of twenty-one years, or being female shall live to attain that age or marry, and if more than one in equal shares.” The daughter died unmarried. At the date of the death of the testator there were four children of R. H. living, who all attained the age of twenty-one years:—Held, that the gift was a gift to a class, and that the fund was divisible in equal sixths between G. B., M.B., and the four children of R. H. Kekewich v. Barker, 88 L. T. 130—H.L. (E.)

Gift to Class who shall Attain Twenty-one—Gift Over on Testatrix's Death without Leaving any Children—Vested or Contingent—Child Surviving Testatrix and Dying under Twenty-one—Intestacy.]—Testatrix gave real and personal property in trust for all her children who being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters attain twenty-one or marry, in equal shares; and in the event of her death “without leaving any children surviving” her, then over. She left one child only, who died in early infancy:—Held, that the gift to the child was contingent and not vested at birth. Held also, that “without leaving any children surviving” ought not to be read as meaning “without leaving any such children surviving,” and therefore that the gift over failed and there was an intestacy. Kidman v. Kidman (40 L. J. Ch. 359) approved on the first point, but dissented from on the second. Edwards, In re; Jones v. Jones, 75 L. J. Ch. 321; [1906] 1 Ch. 570; 94 L. T. 593; 54 W. R. 446—C.A.

Period of Ascertaining Class—Gift of Income to Children during their Lives—Gift of Capital in Remainder—Perpetuity.]—A gift by will of income to the children of A simpliciter during their lives is confined to children living at the testator's death, if there are any then in existence, to the exclusion of afterborn children. A gift in remainder of the capital to the children of such children is not therefore void for remoteness. Wenmoth's Estate, In re (57 L. J. Ch. 649; 37 Ch. D. 266), distinguished. Powell, In re; Crosland v. Holliday, 67 L. J. Ch. 148; [1898] 1 Ch. 227; 77 L. T. 649; 46 W. R. 231—Kekewich, J.

— Gift to Tenant for Life—Other Gifts on His Death—Gift on Failure of those Gifts to Persons Entitled at Tenant for Life's Death as Testator's Statutory Next-of-Kin—Class of Next-of-Kin.]—By his will testator, who died in 1884, gave his residuary trust funds to trustees in trust to pay the income to his nephew during his life, and after his death on certain trusts in favour of the children and issue of his nephew who should attain the age of twenty-one or marry; and the testator declared that if no children or issue of his nephew should attain a vested interest the trust funds should be in trust for such person or persons as on the death of his nephew would be entitled as testator's next-of-kin under the Statutes for the Distribution of Intestates' Estates. The nephew died in 1906 without issue:—Held, that the class of next-of-kin must be ascertained at the testator's and not at the nephew's death. Wilson, In re; Wilson v. Batchelor, 77 L. J. Ch. 13; [1907] 2 Ch. 572; 97 L. T. 656—C.A. Affirming, 96 L. T. 392—Parker, J.

— Gift to Children at Twenty-one—Advancement Clause—Power to Advance out of Vested Share.]—Where there is a gift to children at twenty-one the general rule is that the class is fixed when the eldest child attains twenty-one, and no child born after can take. But if maintenance or advancement is continued beyond the time when the eldest child attains twenty-one—if, for instance, advancement is directed out of vested shares—all children will be let in. Iredell v. Iredell (25 Beav. 485) followed. Courtenay, In re; Pearce v. Foxwell, 74 L. J. Ch. 654—Kekewich, J.

Devise to Class on Attaining Twenty-one—Right to Income—Divesting.]—Where real estate is vested in trustees in fee upon trust for a tenant for life, and after her death for her children who attain twenty-one, and the tenant for life has died leaving children all infants, the persons entitled to the income will be the same as if the contingent remainders had been legal instead of equitable—that is to say, the first child who attains twenty-one will thenceforth take the whole income subject to the divesting of proportionate parts thereof as the other children attain twenty-one. Averill, In re; Salsbury v. Buckle, 67 L. J. Ch. 233; [1898] 1 Ch. 523; 78 L. T. 320; 46 W. R. 460—Romer, J.

• Condition of Surviving Tenant for Life—“Class gift”—Lapse.]—A testatrix by her will gave her residuary estate to be divided equally between the brothers and sisters of the tenant for life living at the latter's decease and three named persons “in equal shares,” and by a codicil recited that in her will she had directed such estate to be “divided between the persons therein named." Of the three named legatees one predeceased the testatrix, another the tenant for life, and the third, together with one brother of the tenant for life, survived the latter:—Held, that the ambiguity in the will could be explained by reference to the codicil, and that the estate was divisible not into moieties, but in equal shares among all the persons mentioned; that the representatives of the legatee who predeceased the tenant for life took a share, as there was no condition of surviving the tenant for life, but that there was a lapse of the share intended for the legatee who predeceased the testator, as, following Kingsbury v. Walter (70 L. J. Ch. 546; [1901] A.C. 187), the gift was not one to a class. Venn, In re; Lindon v. Ingram, 73 L. J. Ch. 507; [1904] 2 Ch. 52; 90 L. T. 502; 52 W. R. 603—Joyce, J.

Gift to Tenant for Life with Remainder to a Class, their Children to take by Substitution—Occurrence of Events not Contemplated by Testator.—A gift by will to a class to take effect after a life estate, with a substitutional gift to the children of deceased members of the class, expressed in words of futurity, does not let in the children of a member of the class in a case where, he having survived the tenant for life, both die after the date of the will during testator's life. Kinnear, In re; Kinnear v. Barnett, 90 L. T. 537—Kekewich, J.

Direction "to hold"—Period of Distribution.—A testator directed his trustees "to hold" a fund in trust for all the children of A who being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain that age or marry. During A's lifetime, certain of his children who had attained majority claimed payment of their shares:—Held, that as the class of beneficiaries could not be ascertained till after the death of A, no child was entitled to payment of a share before that event. Andrews v. Partington (3 Brown Ch. Cas. 401) commented on. Hope Johnstone v. Sinclair's Trustees, 7 F. 25—Ct. of Sess.

Gift "upon the death of my son C. and my daughters E. and S." of Property in Thirds unto Children of C., E., and S. respectively—Undisposed-of Income.—A testator, after making certain provisions for his widow and children during their respective lives out of the income of his estate, continued his will as follows: "In case of the death of my son C. leaving children, then one-third . . . of such annual income to such children as hereinafter mentioned . . . and upon the death of my son C. and my said daughters E. and S. A." he gave one-third part of his property to the children of C. in equal shares, and as to the two remaining one-third parts respectively to the children of E. and S. A. respectively in equal shares, "Provided nevertheless that in case of the death of any of my said children without leaving lawful issue the share . . . so given . . . to his or her issue shall go and be divided by and between the issue of the survivor or survivors of my said children in the same manner and proportions and under the same trusts as hereinbefore given and bequeathed per stirpes." E. died in 1879 leaving issue. The widow died in 1887. C. died in 1893 without issue:—Held, first, that "upon the death of my said son C. and my said daughters E. and S. A." must be construed to mean upon the death of the survivor of them; and secondly, that the corpus was distributable as to one-third among the children of E. and as to two-thirds among the children of S. A., and distinguishing Bowman, In re; Whytehead v. Boulton (41 Ch. D. 525), that the word "survivor" must be read in its natural sense. Rubbins, In re; Gill v. Worrall, 79 L. T. 313—C.A.

Gift of Residue to Class—Settlement of One Share—Death before Period of Distribution—Intestacy.—A testatrix gave the residue of her estate in trust for all or such of her brothers and sisters who should be living at the decease of the survivor of two of her sisters in equal shares, with a substitutionary gift to the then living children of parents who should be then dead. She then settled the share of a sister, Charlotte, in trust to pay her the income for life, and after her decease the capital to be held in trust for her children as she should appoint, and in default of appointment to vest in her children who should attain twenty-one, or being daughters marry, with a gift over in default of children to the persons entitled to the other shares. At the period of distribution all the brothers and sisters of the testatrix were dead. Charlotte alone had had issue, and they had attained twenty-one, but had all died before the period of distribution:—Held, that the gift of the settled share had not failed in consequence of Charlotte's death before the period of distribution, and therefore that the representatives of Charlotte's children were entitled to the testatrix's residuary estate. Roberts, In re; Tarleton v. Bruton (53 L. J. Ch. 1023; 30 Ch. D. 234); Pinhorn, In re; Moreton v. Hughes (63 L. J. Ch. 607; [1894] 2 Ch. 276), and Powell, In re; Campbell v. Campbell (69 L. J. Ch. 788; [1900] 2 Ch. 525), considered. Whitmore, In re; Walters v. Harrison, 71 L. J. Ch. 673; [1902] 2 Ch. 66; 87 L. T. 210—C.A.

Class Gift to Children—Illegitimate Children Alive at Date of Will—Reputation—Surrounding Circumstances—Extrinsic Evidence.—Under a class gift to the children of the testatrix's nephew A, and of her nieces B and C, where A's children, although believed by the testatrix to be legitimate, are in fact illegitimate, but evidence of surrounding circumstances is given showing a strong probability of the testatrix's intention to include such children in the gift, then such of the illegitimate children as have, at the date of the will, acquired the reputation of being A's children are entitled to take along with the legitimate children of B. and C. Holt v. Sindrey (38 L. J. Ch. 126; L. R. 7 Eq. 170) and Hill v. Crook (42 L. J. Ch. 702; L. R. 6 H.L. 265) followed. Du Bochet, In re; Mansell v. Allen, 70 L. J. Ch. 647; [1901] 2 Ch. 441; 84 L. T. 710; 49 W. R. 588—Joyce, J.

Illegitimate Child Born after Date of Will—Reputed Child—Exclusion.—An illegitimate child of A born after the date of the will, and about the fact of whose paternity there is no question or dispute, is not entitled to share under the gift, notwithstanding the fact that such child also has acquired the reputation of being A's child long before the death of the testatrix, and has always, equally with each of A's other illegitimate children who do take, been believed by the testatrix and her family generally to be the child of A born in lawful wedlock. Bolton, In re; Brown v. Bolton (55 L. J. Ch. 398; 31 Ch. D. 542), adopted and applied. Occleston v. Fullalove (43 L. J. Ch. 297; L. R. 9 Ch. 147) and Goodwin's Trust, In re (43 L. J. Ch. 258; L. (m) Codicil.

Construction — "Instead of" — Revocation — Whether Total or Partial only — Substitutionary Bequest.]—A trust declared by codicil of residuary personal estate, and expressed to be "instead of" an absolute bequest thereof by will to a legatee, who was the first tenant for life under the trust, construed, not as revoking the bequest altogether, but only as modifying the nature of the legatee's enjoyment to the extent shewn by the codicil, so that, upon failure of the trust, the original absolute bequest took effect. Wilcock, In re; Kay v. Dewhurst, 67 L. J. Ch. 154; [1898] 1 Ch. 95; 77 L. T. 679; 46 W. R. 153—Romer, J.

(n) Condition.

Gift on—Option to Purchase—Interest Transmissible to Executor of Person to whom Option Given.]—A testator devised his house and farm to his wife for life. His will then provided: "I desire that my brother A. shall get the entire of said house and lands, together with the plough and winnowing machine at 8*l.* sterling per statute acre. . . . If my brother A. will not take the land at 8*l.* an acre, together with the buildings, &c., they are then to be sold by public auction." A. predeceased the testator's widow, having bequeathed to his son J. "all my interest and goodwill in my deceased brother's farm, together with the plough and winnowing machine." On the death of the widow, Held, that there was a gift of property to A. on the condition of paying a price for it, and that this option was exercisable by his executor after his death. Belshaw v. Rollins, [1904] 1 Ir. R. 284—M.R.

Marriage with Consent—Restraint of Marriage.]—Where a testator bequeaths an annuity in any event, followed by an additional annuity conditional on the annuitant marrying with consent, the condition is operative and not in terrorem merely. *Gillet v. Estate in Special Tail.]—A testator, after leaving certain annuities to his wife and daughter, which he charged on his landed property, left his lands (held in fee-simple) to his son R. J. M., with the exception of what his wife was to get; "but the said R. J. M. shall never have power to sell or mortgage any of these lands, nor no person to inherit any of them, unless a lawful issue of a male child got by marriage with a respectable Protestant female, of proper conducted parents".—Held, that R. J. M. took an estate in special tail. Ma Gee v. Martin, [1902] Ir. R. 367—C.A.

Gift of Life Interest to K. subject to Forfeiture if she "shall in any way associate, correspond, or visit with any of my present wife's nephews or nieces."—Uncertainty.—A testator by his will gave his residuary estate to trustees upon trust to pay the income to K. for life, and after her death to divide the corpus among her children. By a codicil he declared that if she "shall in any way associate, correspond, or visit with any of my present wife's nephews or nieces," &c., then the life interest was to be forfeited and a gift over was to take effect. On an originating summons taken out to ascertain the effect of the codicil upon the original gift, Held, that the condition was void for uncertainty. Jeffreys v. Jeffreys, 84 L. T. 417—Farwell, J.

Condition Precedent—Perpetuity—Statutes of Mortmain.]—A testator, who died in March, 1894, by his will dated in July, 1893, after devising his residuary real estate to trustees upon trust for sale, and to hold the proceeds upon the trusts declared of his residuary personal estate, gave the sum of 10,000*l.* to his trustees upon trust to transfer the same to trustees to be appointed by them, or the trustees for the time being of his will (such appointed trustees to be not less than three or more than six in number), to be held by them upon trust, "as soon as any land shall at any time be given or obtained for the purpose, to employ the same in erecting almshouses" in a certain parish for the deserving poor of that parish, without regard to religious denomination, and in making weekly or other periodical allowances to the inmates of such almshouses; and he empowered the trustees so appointed, in conjunction with the trustees of his will, to make rules for the regulation and maintenance of such almshouses. And, after giving other charitable and general legacies, the testator gave all his residuary personal estate to his trustees upon trust for sale and conversion, and to pay debts and legacies, and to hold the residue of the moneys upon trust, to pay or transfer the same to trustees to be nominated and appointed by the trustees of his will upon trust, "as soon as any land shall at any time be given or obtained for the purpose, to employ the same in erecting and maintaining" a certain orphanage or institution; and the will contained directions for the management and regulation of such institution:—Held, that the language of the will did not constitute a condition precedent to the gifts, but was introduced for the purpose of mere machinery so as to avoid the provisions of the Statutes of Mortmain; and that the principle to be applied to the present case was that explained in Chamberlayne v. Brockett (28 L. T. 248; L. R. 8 Ch. 206). Held, therefore, that, without prejudice to any question, if land could not be obtained, there must be a declaration that the sum of 10,000*l.* and the residue were well given to charities; and that special trustees thereof must be appointed as directed by the will, and liberty given to apply. Gyde, In re; Ward v. Little, 79 L. T. 261—C.A.

Liability of Tenant for Life for Dilapidations Existing Prior to Testator's Death.]—Testator by his will declared that his trustees might permit his widow to reside in his leasehold house as long as she might desire, "she paying the rent and all rates and taxes, outgoings, and repairs in connection therewith, and my trustees shall not be concerned to see to the upkeep of, or be responsible for, the said premises in any way during such time as my wife shall reside in the said premises":—Held, that the widow was not liable to pay for dilapidations existing prior to the testator's death. Smith, In re; Bull v. Smith, 84 L. T. 835—Byrne, J.

(c) Contingency.

Contingent Gift—Maintenance—Discretionary Power—Vesting.—A testator bequeathed certain property to his nephew upon his attaining twenty-five, and directed his trustees to accumulate the profits and invest them in trust for his said nephew on his attaining twenty-five. He also empowered his trustees, in their absolute discretion, to apply any part of the said profits, or the income thereof, for the advancement, maintenance, and education of his said nephew while under such age. The nephew died before attaining twenty-five:—Held, that the gifts of both capital and income were contingent, and therefore failed. Russell v. Russell, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 168—V.C.

Child of Testator—Appropriation—Interest—Maintenance—Life Tenant—Accumulations of Surplus Income.—Testator bequeathed a legacy of 50,000*l.* to each of his daughters who should attain twenty-one or marry, with a direction that his trustees should retain the same in trust to pay the income to the daughter for life, and after her death upon trusts in favour of her children. The will contained an express maintenance clause in respect of certain legacies given to the testator's sons on attaining the age of twenty-five years, but no express maintenance clause in respect of the daughter's legacies; but it expressly provided that the testator's infant children should be made wards of Court, and thereafter all powers, whether statutory or otherwise, as to education, maintenance, and advancement should only be exercised by the trustees under the direction of the Court. The will also empowered the trustees to appropriate any part of his personal estate to answer each legacy, which the trustees did shortly after the testator's death. The Court made an order allowing an annual sum out of the income of her legacy for the maintenance of one of the daughters during her minority, and the trustees had accumulated the surplus income. The daughter having attained the age of twenty-one years,—Held, that the surplus income and the accumulations did not vest in the daughter absolutely, but must be treated as an accretion to the capital of the legacy. Bowlby, In re; Bowlby v. Bowlby, 73 L. J. Ch. 810; [1904] 2 Ch. 685; 91 L. T. 573; 53 W. R. 270—C.A.

Per ROMER, L.J., and COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—The rule that interest is payable from the testator's death on a legacy to an infant child of the testator contingently on attaining twenty-one, where no other fund is provided for maintenance, only means that it carries interest for the purpose of the maintenance of the infant, and the infant does not acquire an immediate vested right to the interest on the legacy or to the income of a fund appropriated to answer it. Ib.

Per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—So far as their language is concerned, the Judges who established the rule in such cases construed the will of the father as giving the interest to the child independently of the happening of the contingency; but, the practice of the Court having been to take a different view, that practice ought now to be followed. Ib.

Per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., and COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—Having regard to the decision of the Court of Appeal in Dickson, In re; Hill v. Grant (54 L. J. Ch. 510; 29 Ch. D. 331), section 43 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, unless expressly incorporated by the will, does not apply in the case of a contingent gift, if on attaining twenty-one the infant will not become entitled to the past income absolutely, but only to a life interest therein. Ib.

Per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—The will contained no express direction that the provisions of section 43 should apply. Per COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—The direction as to the exercise by the trustees of all powers, statutory or otherwise, as to maintenance amounted to an express direction that the provisions of section 43 should apply to the income of the appropriated legacy. Ib.

The words "property from which the same arises," in sub-section 2 of section 43 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, mean the property the income arising from which has been accumulated. Scott, In re; Scott v. Scott (71 L. J. Ch. 475; [1902] 1 Ch. 918), overruled, and the suggestion of NORTH, J., in Wells, In re; Wells v. Wells (59 L. J. Ch. 113; 43 Ch. D. 281), disapproved of. Ib.

Legacy in Trust for A for Life, and afterwards, if he shall have Two Children who Attain Twenty-one, as to a Moiety for his Executors or Administrators—Whether A Absolutely Entitled.—Where a testator bequeathed a legacy to trustees upon trust to pay the income to A for life, and after his decease, if A should have three or more children who should attain twenty-one, for his executors or administrators; and if he should have two such children, as to a moiety for his executors or administrators, and as to the other moiety for the sister of A and her children, it was held that, A, having had two children, he was absolutely entitled, on their attaining twenty-one years, to a moiety of the fund. Bogle, In re; Bogle v. Yorstoun, 78 L. T. 457—Stirling, J.

Power of Advancement—Expectant Interests—Possibility of Issue of Woman—Presumption in Favour of.—If property is given to a person in the event of another having children, the Court will treat the first person as having an interest in the property during the life of the other, even although such other is a woman past the natural age for child-bearing. Hocking, In re; Michell v. Doe, 67 L. J. Ch. 662; [1898] 2 Ch. 567; 79 L. T. 164; 47 W. R. 114—C.A.

Under a will the children of L. were entitled to shares in certain trust funds in the event of H. having children, and in the event of H. having no children the funds were undisposed of. The will gave the trustee power to make advances to the children of L. on account of their "then expectant presumptive or then vested" shares. H. was a widow of fifty-four years of age and had never had a child:—Held, that the power of advancement was exercisable during the life of H. Ib.

Supplying Words from Context.]—A testator left his personal property for life to A, with a power of appointment in case of her death unmarried or without issue. There was no gift over in default of appointment; but the power of appointment was given "subject as hereinafter set forth," and in a later clause the testator provided "that in the event of my said daughter, under the circumstances before detailed, in case of non-marriage or no issue living at the time of her decease," all his property was to go to certain persons named:—Held, that it was clear that some word or words was or were omitted in the latter clause which provided for the event of the daughter doing or not doing something, but did not say what, and that the Court should supply the words "failing to exercise the said power of appointment" in order to effectuate the testator's intention, which had been imperfectly expressed, but was to be gathered from the context and the whole will. Munro v. Henderson, [1907] Ir. R. 440—Barton, J. Affirmed, [1908] 1 Ir. R. 260—C.A.

(p) Conversion.

Trust for—Administration—Tenant for Life and Remainderman—Power to Retain Securities—Unauthorised but Non-wasting Securities—Income Pending Conversion.]—Where there is an express trust for conversion and power to retain securities of every kind, authorised and unauthorised, and there is no gift either express or implied of the income pending conversion, the tenant for life is entitled to the income of authorised securities, but not to the income of unauthorised securities. As regards the latter he is only entitled to interest at 3 per cent. on their value at the testator's death. The rule applies to non-wasting as well as to wasting securities. Chaytor, In re; Chaytor v. Horn, 74 L. J. Ch. 106; [1905] 1 Ch. 233; 92 L. T. 290; 53 W. R. 251—Warrington, J.

(q) Cy-près.

Doctrine—Perpetual Succession of Life Estates—Estate Tail—Distribution per Stirpes.]—Testator, who died in 1835, devised his real estate to his children, A, B, and C, without words of limitation and declared that they and the survivors of them should stand seised thereof in trust to retain the income thereof for their own use in equal shares during their lives, providing, however, that if any of his three children should die unmarried, or being married without leaving any child or children, his or her share should accrue to the survivors of his three children, to be equally divided between them, if more than one, and that the last survivor of his three children should stand possessed of his freehold estate for his or her absolute use and benefit. The will then proceeded, "but in case such son or daughter so dying shall leave issue at his or her decease, whether before or after the age of 21 years, the share of such child so dying to go and be divided equally amongst his or her child or children whether sons or daughters for life share and share alike if more than one, and if but one then the whole share to such only child for life and to be paid and applied towards their maintenance and support during their minority and so to be continued and distributed in a descending line per stirpes from issue to issue for life so long as any issue shall be living descended from my said children, the children of the parent dying taking parents' share equally between them in all cases of decease." The will contained no gift over in default of issue. B died in 1856 a bachelor and intestate. A died in 1874, leaving one child D her surviving. C died in 1890 without issue:—Held, that the cy-près doctrine did not apply to the clause providing for the case of a son or daughter dying and leaving issue so as to give either A or D an estate tail in the moiety of the real property not passing to C, but that this moiety on the death of D belonged to the testator's heir. Seaward v. Willock (5 East, 198) applied; Mortimer v. West (2 Sim. 274), Forsbrook v. Forsbrook (L. R. 3 Ch. 93), and Parfitt v. Hember (L. R. 4 Eq. 443) distinguished. Richardson, In re; Parry v. Holmes, 73 L. J. Ch. 153; [1904] 1 Ch. 332; 91 L. T. 169; 52 W. R. 119—Buckley, J.

Real Property—Limitation of Estates for Life to Unborn Persons—Remoteness.]—Testator, who died in 1871, devised real estate to the use of G. for life, with remainder to the use of his first and other sons successively for life, and after the death of each such son to the use of the sons of that son successively according to seniority in tail male, with remainder to the use of all and every the daughters of each of the sons of G. as tenants in common in tail with cross-remainders in tail between such daughters if more than one, with remainder, after the determination of all the aforesaid uses, to the use of all and every the daughters of G. as tenants in common in tail, with cross-remainders in tail between them if more than one; and there was an ultimate remainder to the use of G., his heirs and assigns. G. died in 1903 without ever having had any issue. It was contended that though the limitations after the life estate of G. were bad as being too remote, the ultimate limitation to G., his heirs and assigns, might be supported under the doctrine of cy-près by substituting for the limitations in the will limitations to the use of G.'s sons successively in tail male, with remainder, if on the determination of these estates tail male there should be a failure of the issue of the sons of G. other than daughters or issue of daughters, to the use of G.'s sons successively in tail general, with remainder to the daughters of G. as tenants in common in tail general with cross-remainders between them, with remainder to

G. in fee-simple:—Held, that the Court could not insert such a contingent limitation as suggested, as that would be a large extension of the doctrine of cy-près, and would be, in effect, making a new will for the testator. The ultimate remainder therefore failed, and the estate on the death of G. without issue devolved on the heir-at-law of the testator. Seaward v. Willock (5 East, 198) and Monypenny v. Dering (17 L. J. Ex. 81; 16 M. & W. 418; 22 L. J. Ch. 313; 2 De G. M. & G. 145) followed. Nicholl v. Nicholl (2 W. Bl. 1159) observed upon. Mortimer, In re; Gray v. Gray, 74 L. J. (s) Description.

"Eldest son"—Failure of Limitations—Gift Over—Intestacy.—The term "eldest son" in a will is properly applied to the elder of two sons, and if there be a person answering the description at the date of the will, such person, though he dies afterwards in the testator's lifetime, is an object of the testator's bounty, section 24 of the Wills Act, 1837, not having, with reference to the objects of bounty, the same effect as it has "with reference to the real and personal estate comprised in it." Amyot v. Dwarries, 73 L. J. P.C. 40; [1904] A.C. 268; 90 L. T. 102; 53 W. R. 16; 20 T. L. R. 268—P.C.

A testator devised real estate, after limitations which failed, to his sister's "eldest son," there being only two sons at that date, both of whom predeceased the testator without issue. A third son was born after the date of the will, but in the testator's lifetime, and survived the testator. There was no residuary devise in the will:—Held, that the estate did not go to the persons entitled under the third son, but vested in the appellant, the surviving trustee, as under an intestacy. Ib.

"Eldest or only son" Excluded from Gift.—The exception contained in the gift of an estate to the sons of A. successively for life of "an eldest or only son for the time being entitled to the possession or the receipt of the rents and profits of the C. estate as tenant for life, or for any greater estate," excludes from the gift a son who was originally entitled in tail but has joined in disentailing the estate and resettling it upon trust for sale with a trust of the purchase-moneys under which he takes a benefit, though the C. estate has been sold before he comes into possession. Shuttleworth v. Murray, 69 L. J. Ch. 423; [1900] 1 Ch. 795; 82 L. T. 668—Cozens-Hardy, J.

"My own nephews and nieces"—Previous Inaccurate Description.—There is no general rule that where a legatee has once been referred to by an inaccurate description in a will, the same description in all other parts of the will must be treated as including that person and all others in the same degree of relationship. The true rule is to determine by the language and context of each will, and any evidence properly admissible, the meaning of the expressions contained in it, and the persons who are entitled to share in the benefits thereby conferred. Cogens, In re; Miles v. Wilson, 72 L. J. Ch. 39; [1903] 1 Ch. 138; 87 L. T. 581; 51 W. R. 220—Swinfen Eady, J.

A gift to "my own nephews and nieces" restricted to the children of a brother of the half-blood and sisters of the whole-blood notwithstanding a reference, in earlier parts of the will, to a nephew of the husband of the testatrix as "my nephew" and to a daughter of a nephew and a daughter of an illegitimate son of a sister of the testatrix as "my nieces." Ib.

"Nieces and nephews"—Misdescription—Uncertainty.—A testatrix by her will bequeathed certain stocks and shares to her "nieces and nephews," coupled with the following directions: "None of them to be sold, but the father's and mother's name to be put in instead of mine, and they to receive the interest for them until they are twenty-one years old." After giving other legacies the will concluded as follows: "If my husband should require money, he can get some of the interest of what is left to the children, the remainder to go for their keep." At the date of the will all the children of the testatrix's brothers and sisters were of age, and none of them had both father and mother living. Several grandchildren, with their father and mother, lived with the testatrix, and evidence was offered that she used to refer to them as "the little children," and expressed an intention to benefit them:—Held, that there were sufficient materials in the will, with the help of admissible explanatory evidence, to shew that the testatrix, in making a bequest to her "nieces and nephews," did not refer to the children of her brothers and sisters, but that there were not sufficient materials of a legal and admissible kind to enable the Court to determine definitely the objects of the bequest, and that consequently it was void for uncertainty. McHugh v. McHugh, [1908] 1 Ir. R. 155—Barton, J.

"Great-nephews and great-nieces born previously to the date of" Will Infant en Ventre sa Mère at that Date.—A testator by his will dated October 17, 1904, gave a number of pecuniary legacies and 500*l.* to each of his great-nephews and great-nieces "born previously to the date of this my will, to whom no other pecuniary bequest is given by this my will or any codicil thereto." He made two codicils, dated respectively October 18, 1904, and February 17, 1905, and died on April 19, 1905. One of his great-nieces was not born until March 14, 1905, and she was therefore en ventre sa mère at the date of the will and codicils:—Held, that the rule of construction, that a child en ventre sa mère at a particular time, who is subsequently born alive, is to be considered as "born" at that time, where such construction is for the benefit of the child, applied; that no contrary intention was indicated in the will; that there was no ground for the suggestion that the rule only applied to a class of children to be ascertained at some future date as distinguished from a class of children born at the date of the will, and that consequently the infant was entitled to a legacy of 500*l.* Salaman; In re; De Pass v. Sonnenthal, 77 L. J. Ch. 60; [1908] 1 Ch. 4—C.A.

The rule, as stated by the COURT OF APPEAL in Villar v. Gilbey (75 L. J. Ch. 308; [1906] 1 Ch. 583), is not in any way qualified by the HOUSE OF LORDS (76 L. J. Ch. 339; [1907] A.C. 139), in any case in which the rule would operate for the benefit of the child. Trower v. Butts (1 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 115; 1 Sim. & S. 181), as explained and adopted in Blasson v. Blasson (34 L. J. Ch. 18; 2 De G. J. & S. 665), and in Villar v. Gilbey, [1907] A.C. 139, in the HOUSE OF LORDS, applied. Id.

"Domestic servant."—A testator bequeathed a legacy to each domestic servant in his service at his death who should have been in his service for ten years or upwards. The plaintiff was for over ten years in the testator's service as laundress, and received 60*l.* a year paid quarterly. She worked in a laundry in a yard adjoining the testator's house, but supplied her own food and slept in a house of her own some distance away.—Held, that she was not a "domestic servant" within the meaning of the bequest. Ogle v. Morgan (1 De G. M. & G. 359) followed. Ogilby, In re; Cochrane v. Ogilby, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 525—M.R.

"Unmarried."—By her will a testatrix gave her residuary estate to trustees upon trust to apply such part as they thought fit for the personal maintenance and benefit of her brother, and so much as remained in their hands after his death was to be held in trust for his children or child; but if he should die "unmarried and without leaving any children," then it was to be divided between two persons. The brother died, leaving a widow, but never having had any children.—Held, that in order to give full effect to every word in the clause, "unmarried" must be read according to its secondary meaning, as "without leaving a wife," and that, the gift over being inoperative, there was an intestacy as to the residuary estate. Chant, In re; Chant v. Lemon, 69 L. J. Ch. 601; [1900] 2 Ch. 345; 83 L. T. 341; 48 W. R. 646—Cozens-Hardy, J.

Gift to "Wife"—Second Wife.—A testator gave the residue of his real and personal estate upon trust for sale and to invest one thirteenth part thereof and pay the resulting income to his son for his life, and after his decease "unto the wife of my said son" for her life, and after her decease to the lawful children of his son who should be living at his (the son's) decease. The will contained a proviso that the thirteenth share so given should be enjoyed by the son only till he should alien or incur the same, or become bankrupt or insolvent, and upon such event "the income of the thirteenth part or share hereinbefore directed to be invested for my said son and his family" should be applied by the trustees at their discretion for the support of "my said son, his wife, and children" in such manner as they should think fit. At the dates of the will and of the testator's death the son had a wife living, who subsequently died, and the son, having married again, died, leaving his second wife him surviving:—Held, that the widow was entitled to the income of the thirteenth share during her life. Lynne's Trust, In re (38 L. J. Ch. 471; L. R. 8 Eq. 65), followed. Burrows' Trusts, In re (10 L. T. 184), not followed. Drew, In re; Drew v. Drew, 68 L. J. Ch. 157; [1899] 1 Ch. 336; 79 L. T. 656; 47 W. R. 265—Stirling, J.

Gift to "Wife" of Son—Wife of Son Living at Date of Will and Death of Testatrix—Subsequent Second Marriage of Son.—Where in a will there is a gift to the wife of a person, and there is a wife of that person known to the testator and living at the date of the will and of the death of the testator, the gift prima facie refers to that existing wife, and not to any subsequent wife that the person may have, unless there is sufficient context to show that the testator was referring to a subsequent wife. Burrows' Trusts, In re (10 L. T. 184), approved, and Lynne's Trust, In re (38 L. J. Ch. 471; L. R. 8 Eq. 65), disapproved by ROMER, L.J., and COZENS-HARDY, L.J. Coley, In re; Hollinshead v. Coley, 72 L. J. Ch. 502; [1903] 2 Ch. 102; 88 L. T. 517; 51 W. R. 563—C.A.

Testatrix by her will made in 1869 gave her residuary estate upon trust to pay the income thereof to her son W. during his life, and after his death to "his wife for her life if she shall continue his widow," and after her decease or second marriage, whichever should first happen, she gave her residuary estate equally among such of the children of her son as should attain twenty-one or die under that age leaving issue him or her surviving, and, in default of such issue of her son, equally among such of her nephews and nieces as therein mentioned. And she provided that "after the decease or second marriage of any legatee entitled for life or during widowhood whichever shall first happen," her trustees might apply the interest of the presumptive shares of grandchildren or nephews or nieces of hers towards their maintenance. Testatrix died in 1870. W. was her only child. He had in 1861 married his first wife. She was well known to the testatrix, and survived her, dying in February, 1899. W. in October, 1899, married again, and he died in 1902. He had no issue by either marriage:—Held, that the second wife was not entitled to a life interest in the testatrix's residuary estate. Id.

Misdescription — Compound Designation — "Wife"—No Legal Marriage.—A testator, who died in 1893, bequeathed 5,000*l.* upon trust to pay the income to his "son Francis during his life and from and after his death to pay such income to his wife Letitia during her life if she shall survive him and after the death of the survivor of my said son Francis and Letitia his wife" upon the trusts therein contained. The son was in New Zealand for many years prior to his death in 1899, and in 1888 had written to his family that he had married Letitia Lilian C.; but it had appeared since the death of the testator, to whom the lady was not known personally, that there had been no legal marriage:—Held, that the gift did not fail by reason of the lady, whose identity was established with the persona designata "Letitia," not having been legally married to the son of the testator. Anderson v. Berkley, 71 L. J. Ch. 444; [1902] 1 Ch. 936; 86 L. T. 443; 50 W. R. 684—Joyce, J.

Life Interest to Husband—After his Death to his Wife “during widowhood”—Divorce.—A testatrix by her will dated September 20, 1898, devised and bequeathed all her real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to sell and as to one equal third part upon trust to invest and pay the income thereof to her son M. K. during his life, and after his death to pay the income of the share to “his wife A. K. during her widowhood,” with remainders over. The testatrix died on January 15, 1901, and on May 6, 1907, A. K. obtained an absolute decree of divorce against her husband M. K. on the ground of his adultery and desertion. M. K. died on October 8, 1907. Neither M. K. nor A. K. married again after the decree for dissolution. On a summons being taken out by the trustees to determine whether A. K. was entitled to be paid the income of the trust estate, and, if so, for what period, Held, that A. K. was not entitled to be paid the income, as the gift was to commence and finish with widowhood, and, as the lady divorced her husband, she never became a widow, and the period of enjoyment specified had therefore never commenced. Boddington, In re; Boddington v. Clairat (53 L. J. Ch. 475; 25 Ch. D. 685), followed. Kettlewell, In re; Jones v. Kettlewell, 98 L. T. 23—Parker, J.

Gift to “Widow”—Gift during Widowhood—Wife not Legally Married to Testator—Bigamy—Secondary Meaning of “Widow”—Condition or Limitation.—A testator having gone through the ceremony of marriage with a married woman, made his will whereby he gave the income of his residuary estate to “my said wife,” whom he had previously mentioned by name, “during her life if she shall so long continue my widow for her own use and benefit and from or after her decease or second marriage” upon trust for children and grandchildren, with an ultimate trust for his cousin. The testator was never married, and at the time when he went through the ceremony of marriage he knew that his alleged wife had a husband living:—Held, upon the true construction of the will, and having regard to the circumstances, that the married woman who went through the ceremony of marriage with the testator was entitled as his “widow” to the income of his residuary estate, unless and until she contracted a marriage subsequent to the testator's death. Wagstaff, In re; Wagstaff v. Jalland, 76 L. J. Ch. 369; [1907] 2 Ch. 35; 96 L. T. 605; 23 T. L. R. 426—Kekewich, J. Affirmed in C.A., 24 T. L. R. 136.

Misdescription of Godson.—A testator devised his property in trust to pay, inter alia, a legacy of 500*l.* to his “godson, the Hon. H. A. J. P., son of Lord G.” His godson was in reality the Hon. R. M. P., another son of Lord G.:—Held, that the legacy passed to the godson, the Hon. R. M. P. Blake's Trusts, In re, [1904] 1 Ir. R. 98—V.C.

Gift to Person by Wrong Name.—Two residuary legatees were described as “Edith Beale, daughter of E. J. Beale,” and “Violet Beale, daughter of E. J. Beale.” E. J. Beale had two and only two daughters, one of whom was named Violet Edith Beale, the other had different first names:—Held, that both daughters were residuary legatees. Radcliffe, In re; Young v. Beale, 51 W. R. 409—Buckley, J.

—A testatrix by her will gave a legacy to Percy H., son of C. A. H. C. A. H. had no son Percy; but he had a son Herbert, who was generally called “Bertie.” Two persons, not sons of C. A. H., but who stood to the testatrix in the same degree of relationship as the sons of the said C. A. H., bore the name of Percy, but they did not claim the legacy:—Held, that Herbert, son of C. A. H., was entitled to the legacy, the solicitor taking testatrix's instructions having probably mistaken the word “Bertie” for the word “Percy.” Hooper, In re; Hooper v. Warner, 88 L. T. 160; 51 W. R. 153—Byrne, J.

Misdescription—Specific Legacy—General Legacy.—A testatrix lent 21,000*l.* to A. F. & Co., a firm of which A. S. F. and W. F. were partners. The firm of A. F. & Co. ceased to exist in 1899, when a limited company was formed which took over its business. The testatrix was allotted debenture stock and shares in the new company in respect of her debt. By her will, in 1903, the testatrix made the following bequest: “To A. S. F. and W. F. I forgive the sum of 20,000*l.* now owing to me jointly by them, or any member of the firm”:—Held, that A. S. F. and W. F. were entitled to be paid 20,000*l.* out of the general assets of the testator. Lindgren v. Lindgren (9 Beav. 358) and Selwood v. Midmay (3 Ves. 306) followed. Findlater v. Lowe, [1904] 1 Ir. R. 519—M.R.

Gift of “Carriages”—Motor Car.—A testator died in 1907 leaving a will dated 1890. By the will he directed his trustees to make over his landed estate to his wife, and, with certain exceptions, his whole “furniture and plenishing, including books, plate, pictures, jewellery, ornaments, and bed and table linen, and also my horses and carriages, live stock, plants, and garden and stable implements.” At the date of his will the testator had carriages and horses, but subsequently he sold those and bought two motor cars, which he possessed at the time of his death:—Held, that the bequest of carriages included the motor cars. Denholm's Trustees v. Denholm, [1908] S.C. 43—Ot. of Sess.

Specific Devise—General Description—Particular Enumeration—Leading Description—False Demonstratio.—A testatrix specifically devised “the real estate to which I under the codicil to the will of my father . . . became entitled . . . namely . . . O. House . . . in the county of Essex and lands and hereditaments in the same county” to M. H., and she gave her residue to W. F. C. In addition to the properties mentioned in her will, the testatrix was entitled under her father's codicil to a freehold in the Temple:—Held, that the specification by name and locality formed the leading description, and that the freehold house not mentioned did not therefore pass under the specific devise, but fell into residue. West v. Layday (11 H.L.C. 375) considered. Brocket, In re; Davies v. Miller, 77 L. J. Ch. 245; [1908] 1 Ch. 185; 97 L. T. 780—Joyce, J.

Mistake—Description of Subject-matter—Evidence—Former Wills.—By his will made in 1902 the testator bequeathed to his daughter "all my consolidated ordinary stock in the Midland Railway Company," and in the same will he bequeathed "all my preferred and deferred ordinary stock in the Midland Railway (but not my consolidated ordinary stock in such company) to my trustees upon trust" as therein mentioned. The testator, at the date of his will and at the time of his death, held $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. perpetual preference stock and preferred and deferred converted ordinary stock of the company. He had before 1897 held 4 per cent. preference stock and ordinary stock in the company. By the Midland Railway Act, 1897, the preference stock was converted into $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. preference stock, and the ordinary stock into preferred and deferred converted ordinary stocks. Evidence of former wills made by the testator was admitted to explain the mistake in the description of the subject-matter of the gift:—Held, that the testator intended by the first gift to pass the ordinary stock, and by the second gift the preference stock. Smith, In re; Smith v. Johnson, 20 T. L. R. 287—Byrne, J.

(t) Devises.

General Words of Devise—"All other my real estate in the county of L."—Advwsons in Gross.—Advwsons in gross held to pass under general words of devise—namely, "All other my real estate in the county of L."—notwithstanding that such words were not words of apt description. Hodgson, In re; Taylor v. Hodgson, 67 L. J. Ch. 591; [1898] 2 Ch. 545; 79 L. T. 345; 47 W. R. 44—Romer, J.

"My personal estates, etc., etc."—Devise of Real Estate.—A testator, after giving and bequeathing his real estates and all his personal estate and effects to his wife for her life, after her death gave to certain relatives "an equal share of my personal estates, etc., etc."—Held, that the gift after the death of the wife included the real estate of the testator. Andrew's Estate, In re; Creasey v. Graves, 50 W. R. 471—Buckley, J.

"Devise" of "personal estate and effects"—Real Estate.—A testator gave, devised, and bequeathed, subject to the payment of his debts, his "personal estate and effects whatsoever and wheresoever, and of what nature or kind soever, which I may be possessed of, interested in, or entitled unto at the time of my decease, whether in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy," to his wife, "her heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns":—Held, that the real estate passed under these words. Wass, In re; Clark, In re, 95 L. T. 758—Neville, J.

Devise to a Son, "if he marries a fit and worthy gentlewoman and has issue male to such issue male and their male descendants"—Estate in Special Tail Male.—Held, that a devise to a testator's son, "if he marries a fit and worthy gentlewoman and has issue male to such issue male and their male descendants," the son having married such a gentlewoman, created in the son an estate in special tail male. Pelham-Clinton v. Newcastle (Duke), 72 L. J. Ch. 424; [1903] A.C. 111; 88 L. T. 273; 51 W. R. 608—H.L. (E.)

Devise of "All my estate and interest in the lands of H."—Election.—A testatrix devised all her estate and interest in the lands of H. to A., and appointed B. residuary legatee. She had no power to dispose of the lands to H., which were settled by her husband's will on herself for life with remainder to B. in fee:—Held, that the testatrix only intended to dispose of her estate and interest, if any, and not to dispose of property which was not her own, and that therefore no case of election arose. Whitley v. Whitley (31 Beav. 173) distinguished. Galvin v. Devereux, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 185—M.R.

Devise of Estate Tail—Provision for Reduction to Life Estate if Devisee "Born" within Testator's Lifetime—Devisee en Ventre sa Mère at Time of Testator's Death—Strict Settlement.—Prima facie, for the purpose of the devolution of property in connection with intestacies or wills, no distinction ought to be drawn between a child born at a particular time and a child at that time en ventre sa mère and subsequently born alive; and in the case of a will no such distinction ought to be made unless the context requires it. The grounds of the decision of Lord Westbury in Blason v. Blason (34 L. J. Ch. 18, 19; 2 De G. J. & S. 665, 670) are not sound, and the decision cannot be supported except on the ground that the particular words of the will there shewed an intention to take the case out of the general principle above stated. Villar v. Gulbey, 45 L. J. Ch. 308; [1906] 1 Ch. 583; 94 L. T. 424; 54 W. R. 473; 22 T. L. R. 347—C.A.

Testator by his will devised to the third son of his brother, then unborn, an estate tail in certain real estate, and declared his intention to be that any third son of his brother "born" in his lifetime should not take a larger interest in the estates than for life only, with remainder to his issue in tail. The third son of the testator's brother was born about three weeks after the testator's death:—Held, that for the purpose of the construction of the will he must be treated as if born in the testator's lifetime, and the estate taken by him was an estate for life only. Ib.

Equitable Estate in Tail Male—Realty—Gift of Rents to S. M.—Proviso against Incumbrance and Revocation of the Gift in such Event from S. M. and his Heirs Male—Remainder over in Tail Male to W. M. in default of Male Issue of S. M.—A testator devised his estates to trustees to pay the rents half-yearly to S. M., but in case he incumbered the lands at any time the testator revoked the gift of the rents from S. M. and his heirs male. In the event of S. M. so forfeiting the same, and dying without male issue him surviving, there was a remainder over to W. M. in tail male:—Held, that the frame of the will afforded a sufficient indication of the testator's intention to confer on S. M. an equitable estate in tail male. Crumpe v. Crumpe, [1899] 1 Ir. R. 359—C.A.

Rule in Shelley's Case.—Real estate was limited by will "to my son Charles if he marries a fit and worthy gentlewoman and has issue male to such issue male and their male descendants in failure of which" over:—Held, that, whether the rule in Shelley's Case (1 Co. Rep. 93b) applied or not, Charles took an estate in special tail male. Pelham-Clinton v. Newcastle (Duke), 69 L. J. Ch. 875; 49 W. R. 12—Buckley, J. And see vol. 2830.

Devise to "Right heirs" of Testator—Co-parceners—Joint Tenants—Purchasers.]—Since the Inheritance Act, 1833, a devise to the testator's "right heirs" will pass the property to the heir as purchaser, and if the testator leaves two daughters who are his co-heiresses they will take by purchase as joint tenants, and not as co-parceners, it being impossible to create estates in co-parcenary by purchase. Owen v. Gibbons, 71 L. J. Ch. 338; [1902] 1 Ch. 636; 86 L. T. 571—C.A.

Devise of "freehold lands and hereditaments at," &c.—Residuary Devise—Customary Freeholds.]—A devise of "freeholds" will include land which, though not strictly freehold, is usually known as "freehold" or "customary freehold," unless there is reason to suppose that the testator is using the term "freeholds" in its strict and technical sense. And this is true even though the will contain a residuary gift of real estate. Steel, In re; Wappett v. Robinson, 72 L. J. Ch. 42; [1903] 1 Ch. 185; 87 L. T. 548; 51 W. R. 252—Swinfen Eady, J.

Devise of "real estate" — Fee-simple — Leasehold Interest—"Contrary intention."]—A testator who was possessed of the fee-simple in certain freehold property subject to a term of years, and was also possessed of a sub-leasehold interest in the said term of years less by two days than the original term, "gave and devised all his real estate whether in possession, reversion, or remainder," to a certain devisee. He also "gave and bequeathed all his leasehold estate" (except a certain house thereinbefore specifically bequeathed) to his executors. At the date of his will, the fee-simple in remainder and the sub-leasehold interest in the property in question had been enjoyed and dealt with by the testator and his predecessor in title for more than twenty years as a single freehold estate in possession:—Held, that although the sub-leasehold interest did not pass under the devise of "real estate" by virtue of section 26 of the Wills Act, 1837, yet that, having regard to the whole of the surrounding circumstances, it passed under the devise on the true construction of the will. Guntton and Rosenberg's Contract, In re, 70 L. J. Ch. 751; [1901] 2 Ch. 591; 85 L. T. 66; 50 W. R. 38—Cozens-Hardy, J.

Possibility of Reverter—Right of Entry.]—The possibility of reverter on a fee-simple conditional is a right of entry devisable under section 3 of the Wills Act, 1837. Whether such a possibility of reverter is an estate, quære. Pemberton v. Barnes, 68 L. J. Ch. 192; [1899] 1 Ch. 544; 80 L. T. 181; 47 W. R. 444—North, J.

Devise of Land in Strict Settlement—Gift of Personality on Similar Trusts—Ultimate Gift to "right heirs and assigns"—Persona Designata.]—A testator devised his real estate in trust for his eldest son for life, with remainders over in tail, remainder to his right heirs, and bequeathed his personality on similar trusts, with an ultimate remainder to his "right heirs and assigns":—Held, that the personality under the ultimate gift passed to the heir-at-law of the testator as persona designata, and not to his next-of-kin. Skinner v. Cumbleton, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 36—V.C.

Devise of Real Estate—Building Contract—

Non-completion at Death of Testator—Conversion.]—A testator, who had contracted with a builder to erect certain buildings on his freehold lands, died before the buildings were finished, having by his will devised the land to A for life. The contract was never completed:—Held, that A was entitled (in an action to administer the testator's estate) to have an enquiry directed whether any, and what, compensation was payable by the testator's personal estate in respect of the uncompleted contract. Cooper v. Jarman (36 L. J. Ch. 85; 14 R. 3 Eq. 98) followed. Day, In re; Day v. Sprake, 67 L. J. Ch. 619; 79 L. T. 437; 47 W. R. 238—North, J.

Estate Tail—Devise of, to Child—Provision for Reduction to Life Estate if Devisee "born" in Testator's Lifetime—Child en Ventre sa Mère at Testator's Death.]—There is no rule of construction that a gift to a child "born" within a specified period will extend to a child still en ventre sa mère at that period. That construction will only be adopted when it is for the benefit of the child then unborn, as laid down by Lord Westbury in Blason v. Blason (34 L. J. Ch. 18; 2 De G. J. & S. 665). Villar v. Gildbey, 76 L. J. Ch. 339; [1907] A.C. 139; 96 L. T. 511; 23 T. L. R. 392—H.L. (E.)

Devise to One and His Heirs, with Contingent Remainder to a Collateral Heir.]—A testator devised two cottages to a daughter for life, with remainder as to one cottage to her youngest daughter Elizabeth Graham and her heirs, and with remainder as to the other cottage to her son William Graham and his heirs, with a gift over, "if either the said Elizabeth or William should die without an heir, their share is to go to the survivor's heir or heirs":—Held, that Elizabeth and William took estates tail, with a contingent remainder in fee to the person who should be the heir of the survivor at the death of the tenant for life. Wagh, In re; Wagh v. Cripps, 72 L. J. Ch. 586; [1903] 1 Ch. 744; 88 L. T. 54; 51 W. R. 461—Farwell, J.

Absolute Gift—Executory Devise Over on a Contingency which does not Happen.] A testatrix bequeathed all her estate, except two specified sums, to her sister B., and added the words, "I would wish my money to be divided in equal shares after my sister B.'s death between my sister G. and my niece H., should they survive her." G. and H. predeceased B.:—Held (Holmes, L.J., dissentiente), that B. took an absolute interest, which, though liable to be divested if G. and H. survived her, became indefeasible on her surviving them. Monek v. Croker, [1900] 1 Ir. R. 56—C.A.

Rule in Shelley's Case—Equitable Fee-simple.]—Freehold land was devised to trustees in fee-simple upon trust out of the rents and profits to pay certain annuities, and then to pay the residue of the rents and profits to W. D. for his life, and from and immediately after the respective deceases of the annuitants and W. D. upon trust to convey the land together with any accumulations of rent unto the right heirs of W. D. The land was acquired compulsorily by a railway company, and the purchase-money paid into Court. The surviving annuitant had previously released the property from her annuity. On a petition by W. D. for payment out to him,—Held, first, that the rule in Shelley's Case (1 Co. Rep. 93b) applied to the devise, and that under the will W. D. took an equitable estate in fee-simple in the land subject to the annuities; and secondly, that, in the circumstances, W. D. was absolutely and presently entitled to the fund in Court. Yomans' Will, In re; Great Central Railway, ex parte, 70 L. J. Ch. 430; [1901] 1 Ch. 720; 84 L. T. 201; 49 W. R. 509—Joyce, J.

— Gift to Person for Life and "his sons and their sons in succession"—Estate Tail.—Any expression which imports the whole of the inheritable blood has the same effect in bringing the rule in Shelley's Case into operation as the word "heirs." Accordingly, a gift to a person for life "and then to his sons and their sons in succession and in default thereof" over confers an estate tail. Buckton, In re; Buckton v. Buckton, 76 L. J. Ch. 584; [1907] 2 Ch. 406; 97 L. T. 332—Kekewich, J.

— Legal Estate Taken by Trustees.—A testator devised an estate to trustees, in case he should leave only one child (an event which happened), "to permit and suffer" such child to receive the rents and profits for her natural life, and declared that immediately after his death the trustee should stand seised and possessed of the hereditaments unto and to the use of the heirs of the body of such child, and the hereditaments were to be legally conveyed and assured unto such heirs of his child in equal shares as they should severally and respectively attain the age of twenty-one years or be married, and to their several and respective heirs and assigns for ever, the rents and profits in the meantime to be paid and applied by the trustees for the maintenance and education of such heirs of the child in such manner as the trustees should direct.—Held, that, notwithstanding the use of the words "to permit and suffer," the legal estate remained throughout in the trustees; that the rule in Shelley's Case applied; and that the will created an estate tail in the testator's daughter. Decision in Montgomery v. Montgomery (3 Jo. & Lat. 60) criticised by LORD MACNAGHTEN. Van Grutten v. Foxwell, 66 L. J. Q.B. 745; [1897] A.C. 658; 77 L. T. 170; 46 W. R. 426—H.L. (E.)

— Fee Expectant on Estate Tail.—A testator being seised in fee of certain real estate devised it to trustees upon certain trusts under which it was held that his only child took an equitable estate tail, and he further directed that on the death of his child the estate should be "legally conveyed and assured unto such heirs of my child or children in equal shares as they shall severally and respectively attain the age of twenty-one years or be married, and to their several and respective heirs and assigns for ever." The testator's child married and died leaving one child, who attained the age of twenty-one years and died unmarried and intestate.—Held, that the remainder in fee-simple expectant on the termination of the estate tail was disposed of by the will of the testator, and that the grandchild took an estate in fee-simple by purchase and not by descent, which passed to his heir-at-law. Foxwell v.

— Devise of Mortgaged Land—Fund for Payment of Debts—"Contrary or other intention"—Real Estate Charges Act.—A testator devised certain real estate specifically, and also devised and bequeathed his E. L. estate, and the residue of his real and personal estate, to trustees upon trust for sale. And he directed that his trustees should, out of the moneys to arise from such sale, pay his funeral and testamentary expenses and debts, "except charges and mortgage debts if any on property specifically devised." At the time of the testator's death there existed a mortgage on the E. L. estate.—Held, that the above direction to pay funeral and testamentary expenses and debts was sufficient evidence of "contrary or other intention" within the meaning of the Real Estate Charges Acts, 1854 and 1867, to avoid the operation of section 1 of the Real Estate Charges Act, 1854, and to throw the discharge of the mortgage on the E. L. estate on the mixed fund. Valpy, In re; Valpy v. Valpy, 75 L. J. Ch. 301; [1906] 1 Ch. 531; 94 L. T. 472; 54 W. R. 401—Swinfen Eady, J.

— Free from Mortgages—Pecuniary Legacy—Priority—Marshalling Assets.—Specific devisees of real estate, by the terms of the will freed and discharged from the payment of mortgages thereon, are not entitled to have the benefit of the payment off of the mortgages out of the residuary personal estate unless and until the ordinary pecuniary legatees have been satisfied in full. Lutkins v. Leigh (Ca. t. Talb. 53) followed. Smith, In re; Smith v. Smith, 63 L. J. Ch. 333; [1899] 1 Ch. 365; 80 L. T. 113; 47 W. R. 223—Romer, J.

— Devise of Real Estate—No Real Estate—Intention of Testatrix Entitled to Proceeds of Sale of Realty Subject to Trust—Extrinsic Evidence.—A testatrix, who never had any real estate in the strict sense of the term, was entitled, under trusts created by the will of her father, during the life of his wife, who was still alive, to one moiety of the annual produce of the proceeds of sale of real estate, and to a moiety of the capital of such proceeds absolutely after the death of the wife. The father's will provided that until sale of his devised real estate the same should for all purposes be considered as money or personal estate and be transmissible accordingly, and the rents and profits until sale be applicable as if the same were income of the proceeds of sale. None of the real estate had been sold, when the testatrix by her will devised and appointed all her real estate to her trustees upon trusts in favour of the defendants, her sister and nephews and nieces, and she made her husband, the plaintiff, her residuary legatee.—Held, upon the construction of the will itself, and with the aid of extrinsic evidence properly admissible to explain terms used when they were not sensible with regard to surrounding circumstances, that the testatrix had intended, under the denomination of her real estate, to dispose of her interest in her father's realty. Higgins v. Dawson (69 L. J. Ch. 789; [1900] 2 Ch. 756; in H.L., 71 L. J. Ch. 132; [1902] A.C. 1) considered. Glassington, In re; Glassington v. Follett, 75 L. J. Ch. 670; [1906] 2 Ch. 305; 95 L. T. 100—Joyce, J.

Secret Trust for Charitable Purposes—Tenant in Common—Death of Testator within Three Months.]—A testator devised certain houses, and also a legacy of 600*l.* charged on the remainder of his property, which comprised landed property, to three persons absolutely, as tenants in common, coupled with a secret trust for charitable purposes. One of the legatees at the time the will was made was informed of the trust, the other two had no knowledge of it until after the testator's death. The testator died within three months of making his will:—Held, that the bequest of the one-third of the property to the trustee who was aware of the trust was invalid, but that the other two-thirds went absolutely to the other two devisees. Geddis v. Semple, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 73—C.A.

Limitations in Strict Settlement—Contingent Remainders or Executory Devises—Remoteness.]

—Testator by his will devised freehold estates to uses in strict settlement in favour of successive tenants for life and their first and other sons successively in tail male, and by a codicil declared that no devisee of the estates devised by his will should have a vested interest therein or be entitled to the possession thereof until the attainment of the age of twenty-four years. The testator died in 1879. The tenant for life in possession died in 1903, leaving a son, the plaintiff next in order of limitation, who was born in 1888, and claimed the estates as tenant in tail male. The next person in order of limitation was born in 1860, and claimed the estates as tenant for life:—Held, that the effect of the codicil was to convert the limitations in the will into executory devises under which the estates did not vest in interest until the attainment of the age of twenty-four years, and that the limitation to the plaintiff and all subsequent limitations failed for remoteness. Wrightson, In re; Battie-Wrightson v. Thomas, 73 L. J. Ch. 742; [1904] 2 Ch. 95; 90 L. T. 748—C.A.

Gift of Property of which Testator was Tenant in Common, and which had not been Partitioned—Tenancy in Common of Interest in New River Company—Separate Receipt of Dividends—No Formal Partition—Extrinsic Evidence—Admissibility.]

R. was tenant in common with his brother C., under their father's will, of an interest in the New River Co. The dividends were paid separately to R. and C., and they were regarded by the company as being each the owner of an undivided share in the interest. No formal partition of the property, however, was at any time effected, and in an agreement between R. and C. relating to the partition of other property of which they were tenants in common it was recited that they had agreed not to partition the interest in the New River Co., but to retain it for the present in their joint ownership. R. afterwards died, having devised to C. all his share and interest of and in all the real estate derived under the will of his father, which he held as tenant in common with C., and which should not, at the date of R.'s death have been partitioned. At the date of R.'s death there was other real estate of which R. and C. were tenants in common under their father's will, and which had not in any way been partitioned. On a summons taken out for the determination of the question whether R.'s share in the interest in the New River Co. passed to C. under the above devise or not,—Held, that in view of the separate receipt of dividends by R. and C. there had ceased to be unity of possession in the interest, that it had been fully partitioned and R. and C. had ceased to be tenants in common of it, and that it therefore did not pass by the devise. Held, also, that the recital in the agreement for the partition of the other property was not admissible as evidence of the testator's intention. Trimmer, In re; Crundwell v. Trimmer, 91 L. T. 26—Joyce, J.

Piece of Land Purchased as Part of One Property, Occupied by Testator as Part of Adjoining Property—Will Speaking from Death of Testator.]

A testator who had purchased two adjoining freehold houses, known as Broad Green Lodge and the Cedars respectively, each having a garden and piece of meadow land in the rear, and had occupied until his death Broad Green Lodge with the garden and meadow land at the rear, and also the piece of meadow land at the rear of the Cedars, and had let the Cedars with its garden, but without the piece of meadow land at the rear, to a tenant for twenty-one years, by his will made prior to the lease by him of the Cedars devised (inter alia) his two freehold houses to trustees upon trust as to his "residence known as Broad Green Lodge" for the residence of his wife for life, and at her death for sale, with a direction that the proceeds should form part of his residuary estate, which he divided amongst his children. And after the death of his wife the testator gave to one of his daughters the income to arise from his "freehold property known as the Cedars":—Held, that the will, as to the property comprised in it, must speak from the date of the testator's death, at which time the piece of meadow land was occupied by him as part of the Broad Green Lodge property, and that the gift of the income of his freehold property known as the Cedars comprised the premises let by him as the Cedars, but not the piece of meadow land at the rear, which formed part of the testator's residuary estate. Potter, In re; Stevens v. Potter, 83 L. T. 405—Cozens-Hardy, J.

Specific Devise—Failure—“Residuary devise”—Restriction as to Tenure.]

A devise of "all other my freehold messuages or tenements at W. and elsewhere" is a good "residuary devise" within section 25 of the Wills Act, 1837, so as to include the subject-matter of a previous specific devise of freehold property which has failed. It is not necessary in order to constitute a good residuary devise that it should apply to real estate of any tenure, copyhold as well as freehold. Mason v. Ogden, 72 L. J. Ch. 152; [1903] A.C. 1; 87 L. T. 622; 51 W. R. 560—H.L. (E.)

Freehold—Devise by Mortgagee in Possession—Mortgage Debt Passing by Devise.]

A devise in fee-simple of "my two houses and stable," of which the testator is mortgagee in possession only, will suffice to pass the mortgage debt secured upon the property in question, where an intention to give all the interest that the testator had in the property can be gathered from the words of the devise; and there is no rigid rule of law to prevent such an intention from being carried into effect. Carter, In re;

Dodds v. Pearson, 69 L. J. Ch. 426; [1900] 1 Ch. 801; 82 L. T. 526; 48 W. R. 555—Cozens-Hardy, J.

Vesting—Contingent Remainder—“If alive.”

—K. devised real estate, of which he was seised in fee farm, in the following terms: “To my daughter for her life, and should her husband survive her he is to have them for his life, and at his decease I bequeath them to my nephew J., if alive; if not, to his next brother E.; and in the case the latter should also be dead, they are to go to the eldest survivor of my brother’s four younger sons.” The testator’s daughter survived her husband and all the testator’s nephews, some of whom, however, including J. and E., were alive at the death of the husband:—Held, that the words “if alive” meant if alive at the deaths of both the daughter and her husband, and that, in the events which happened, upon the death of the daughter in 1895 the estate was undisposed of and passed to the testator’s heir-at-law. Dundalk and Enniskillen Railway, In re; Roebuck, ex parte, [1898] 1 Ir. R. 219—C.A.

Executory Limitation—Devise to A “when she shall attain the age of 25 years”—Controlling Context—Contingency—Vesting.—A devise to A “when she shall attain the age of 25 years,” in the absence of some controlling circumstance, or context, confers upon A an estate in fee-simple contingent upon her attaining that age, and not a vested estate in fee-simple liable to be divested if she die under the age of twenty-five years. Francis, In re; Francis v. Francis, 74 L. J. Ch. 487; [1905] 2 Ch. 295; 93 L. T. 132; 53 W. R. 571—Swinfen Eady, J.

Devise of Personalty—Interest for Life—Absolute Interest.—A devise of personalty to M. H. C. “for her life, with remainder to her issue in tail male, and in default thereof to her daughters,” and in default over:—Held, that M. H. C. took an interest for life only. Cullen’s Estate, In re, [1907] 1 Ir. R. 73—Ross, J.

Yearly Tenancy—Gift of Chattels Real to A for Life, and at his Decease “to his eldest son or heir-at-law.”—A testator devised and bequeathed his lands to A. (held from year to year) to his son J. for life, and at his decease to his eldest son or heir-at-law. J., who had gone into possession of the lands on his father’s death and had an eldest son living, agreed to sell the lands to B. B. objected to the title on the ground that J. took a life interest only under the will:—Held, that J. took only a life interest with remainder to his eldest son or heir-at-law as persona designata, and that therefore the vendor could not make title. Smith v. Butcher (48 L. J. Ch. 186; 10 Ch. D. 113) followed. Bishop and Richardson’s Contract, In re, [1899] 1 Ir. R. 71—M.R.

Gift of Rents—Gift Over on Failure to Fulfil Conditions from Devisee of Rents and His Heirs Male—Equitable Estate in Tail Male.—A devise in a will that trustees should pay the rents of real estate half-yearly to a person named, but, in case such person should incur the lands at any time, that the gift of the rents should be revoked from such person and his heirs male, and that in case of such revocation various remainders over should take effect,—Held, to confer an equitable estate tail on the devisee of the rents. Crumpe v. Crumpe, 69 L. J. P.C. 7; [1900] A.C. 127; 82 L. T. 130—H.L. (Ir.)

“Lessees or holders of the present leases.”—A devise of real estate “unto the lessees or holders of the present leases in the quantities, dimensions, and measurements set forth in their respective leases” includes holders either by the original leases or by assignment of the existing leases of the property. King v. Rymill, 67 L. J. P.C. 107; 78 L. T. 696—P.C.

Devise subject to Condition.—See CONDITION, col. 486.

Executors—Gift to.—See LEGACIES, col. 2864.

(u) Executory Trust.

Direction to Settle—Possibility of Issue.—A testator bequeathed inter alia two legacies of 300*l.* to Mary M. and Elizabeth M. respectively, for their own sole and separate use, free from the control of any husband either might marry; said legacies not to be payable by the trustees and executors of his will until a settlement, to be approved of by them, should be made in reference to same. The testator died in 1866. The legatees never married and had attained the ages of seventy-five and seventy years respectively. No settlement had ever been executed, and the money was retained in the hands of the trustees:—Held, that under the circumstances the legatees were entitled to have the legacies paid over to them by the trustees without any settlement. Jordan’s Trusts, In re, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 119—V.C.

(v) Exoneration of Personalty.

Onerous and Beneficial Property—Aggregate Gift—Incidence of Burden—Right to Disclaim Gift.—When a testator includes all his real estate in one aggregate devise, a lien for unpaid purchase-money on property which the testator has contracted to purchase after the date of his will, and a mortgage, which exceed the value of the property on which they are respectively charged, must be paid, as to the excess, out of the real estate comprised in the aggregate gift and not out of personalty. Kensington (Baron), In re; Longford (Earl) v. Kensington (Baron), 71 L. J. Ch. 170; [1902] 1 Ch. 203; 85 L. T. 577; 50 W. R. 201—Farwell, J.

Leaseholds given upon such trusts as should correspond with the uses of real estate, “or as near thereto as the nature of the premises will permit,” are, for this purpose, included in one aggregate gift with the real estate. Syer v. Gladstone (30 Ch. D. 614) discussed. Ib.

Bequest of “all my personal estate”—Devise of Real Estate subject to Debts, &c.—Expression of Intention.—A specific gift of all a testator’s personal estate to A, followed by a devise of real estate to B and C subject to the payment of his debts, &c., is not an expression of intention sufficient to exonerate the personalty from its primary liability for those payments, especially when in the will a wish is expressed that none of the realty shall be sold while any descendants of testator's name are living. Banks's Trusts, In re; Banks v. Bysbridge, 74 L. J. Ch. 336; [1905] 1 Ch. 547; 92 L. T. 225—Buckley, J.

Exclusion from Original Gift.]—Under an original gift in her will the testatrix appointed a fund in trust for her surviving children other than a daughter whose children were substituted for their mother, and for such of the issue then living of any child dying before the testatrix who being a male should attain twenty-one, or a female should attain that age or be married. By a gift over the shares of children who had no child attaining a vested interest were to be “in trust for the other of my children and their issue to whom or in whose favour I have hereinbefore appointed the money to arise as aforesaid . . . upon the same or the like trusts as are hereinbefore declared concerning the original shares of such children respectively”:—Held, that the children of the daughter who was excluded from the original gift were entitled to share in the gift over. Edyvean v. Archer, 72 L. J. P.C. 85; [1903] A.C. 379; 80 L. T. 4—P.C.

“Die unmarried and without issue.”—By her will a testatrix devised her estate and interest in certain hereditaments in trust for the use of her youngest son H. and his heirs, and (after devising other property in trust for her four youngest daughters, which, on the youngest of them attaining twenty-one, was “to become the property of such of them as shall have remained unmarried in equal proportions”) she provided that if H. should “die unmarried and without issue” the hereditaments devised to him should go over to her sons E. and M. as tenants in common, “the share of either of them dying unmarried to go and become the estate and property of the survivor.” H. married, but his wife predeceased him. He had no children:—Held, that the words “die unmarried and without issue” following the gift to H. must be read in their primary signification as meaning “die without ever having been married and without issue”; that consequently H. became indefeasibly entitled to the hereditaments, and the gift over in favour of the other sons did not take effect. Roberts v. Kulmore (Bishop), [1902] 1 Ir. R. 333—M.R.

In the Event of Death.]—A testator devised all his real estate to his wife for life, and after her death upon trust for four stepsons and a son, or such of them as should be living at the wife's death and should attain twenty-one; and in case all should be living at the wife's death and attain twenty-one, he devised certain specific properties to each of the stepsons and son for life; and in case of the death of any of the five he devised the share to which such person would have been entitled to the use of the person or persons who should then answer the description of heir-general of the person so dying. Two of the stepsons died before their mother, and the appellant was heir to both:—Held, that the appellant was entitled to the two fifth shares to which the two stepsons would have been entitled if they had lived until the period of distribution. Penny v. Commissioners for Railways, 69 L. J. P.C. 113; [1900] A.C. 628; 83 L. T. 182—P.C.

On Death before Legatee Entitled—“Entitled” construed “entitled in possession.”—Where a testatrix directed her trustees to pay the income of the residue of her trust estate to her son's wife for life and after her death to divide such residue amongst all the children of her son; and in the event of either of her grandchildren “dying before becoming entitled” to any share of her estate, the testatrix directed that the child or children of such deceased grandchild should take the parents' share, or if there should be no such child then such share should vest equally in all her surviving grandchildren:—Held, that “entitled” meant “entitled in possession,” and the substitutionary clause operated at any time during the subsistence of the prior life estate, and therefore that the shares of the grandchildren were not indefeasibly vested, but were subject to be defeated so long as the tenancy for life existed. Maunder, In re; Maunder v. Maunder, 71 L. J. Ch. 815; [1902] 2 Ch. 875; 87 L. T. 262; 51 W. R. 31—Joyce, J.

Dying “without leaving any child.”—In a gift over in a will upon death “without leaving any child or children,” it is a well-settled rule of construction that these words will be construed “without having had any child who has attained a vested interest” under the previous gift; and it makes no difference in the application of this rule of construction that the testator knew at the date of the will that the person on whose death the gift over is made in fact had a child then living. Treharne v. Layton (44 L. J. Q.B. 202; L. R. 10 Q.B. 459) followed. Cobbold, In re; Cobbold v. Lawton, 72 L. J. Ch. 588; [1903] 2 Ch. 299; 88 L. T. 745—C.A.

Gift to Widow—Gift Over of Balance, “if any,” of Money.]—A testator bequeathed the residue of his estate to his wife for her sole use and benefit so long as she should remain his widow. In the event of her re-marriage he directed that the balance, if any, of money and farm stock left, not to exceed 400L., should be divided between his brothers and sisters:—Held, that the widow took absolutely except as to a sum of 400L., which went over upon her marrying again, in the event of there being a balance of unexpended residue to that amount on the day of her second marriage. Rowland, In re; Jones v. Rowland, 86 L. T. 73—Swinfen Eady, J.

Estate for Life to Eldest Son—Remainder to Grandchildren—Gift Over to Heir-at-Law.]—The testator devised his freehold estate called P. G. to trustees upon trust for his eldest son for life; and, after making directions as to the disposal of his personal estate among his six children, concluded his will thus: “When my six children shall have all departed this life it is my will and desire that the said estate called P. G. be sold in public sale to the highest bidder, and that the moneys arising from the sale thereof be equally divided among my then surviving grandchildren share and share alike, and in case no grandchild of mine be then living it shall become the property of the heir-at-law”:—Held, that the heir-at-law must be construed as meaning the heir of the testator at his death, and not the person who would have been the heir of the testator if he had died at the death of the last of his children. Frith, In re; Hindson v. Wood, 85 L. T. 455—Joyce, J.

• Vesting — Survivorship — “Either” — “Survivor.”—A testatrix bequeathed her residuary personal estate upon trust to pay the income to her sister Thirza during her life, and after her death to pay and divide the same equally between two other sisters, and if either of my said sisters shall be then dead I declare that my trustee shall stand possessed of the whole of the said trust moneys upon trust for the survivor of my said sisters absolutely.” Both sisters survived the testatrix, and died in the lifetime of the tenant for life:—Held (RIGBY, L.J., dissenting), that the word “either” could not in the present case be construed as meaning “both,” and that, both sisters having died before the tenant for life, the gift over to the survivor did not take effect, and the representatives of the two took equally under the original gift, which conferred vested interests from the death of the testatrix. White v. Baker (29 L. J. Ch. 577; 2 De G. F. & J. 55) distinguished. Pickworth, In re; Snaith v. Parkinson, 68 L. J. Ch. 324; [1899] 1 Ch. 642; 80 L. T. 212—C.A. And see Turney, In re, supra.

Gift Over if before “actual payment” Legatee has Deprived Himself of Benefit of Share—Contingency Definite and Certain—Gift Over not Void for Uncertainty.—Bequest of share of residue to J. G. for his own use absolutely, with a gift over in the event of J. G. being unable at any time prior to the actual payment of the share to give a receipt for the same by reason of his having committed or suffered any act whereby he had deprived himself of the right to the benefit of such share. Before the money was handed over, J. G. had committed an act of bankruptcy, which was followed by a receiving order and adjudication:—Held, that the contingency was described with definite certainty, and that consequently the gift over was not void for uncertainty, but took effect. Goulden, In re; Goulder v. Goulder, 74 L. J. Ch. 552; [1905] 2 Ch. 100; 93 L. T. 163; 53 W. R. 531—Swinfen Eady, J.

(x) Incumbrances.

Direction to Pay — Mortgage on Freeholds—Further Security—Apportionment.—A testator devised freeholds in trust for his daughter and her children, and gave the residue of his estate, both real and personal, in trust for sale and conversion, the clear residue to be divided, after payment of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses and duties, and any incumbrances charged on his said estate. The same freeholds were subject to a mortgage, for which a life policy (which formed part of the residue) had been deposited as further security. Held, that the said mortgage debt must be apportioned according to the respective values of the properties charged, and that the proportion on the policy moneys should alone be paid out of residue. Athill, In re (50 L. J. Ch. 123; 16 Ch. D. 211) followed. Pinon, In re; Sharpe v. Hodgson, 91 L. T. 190; 52 W. R. 648—Farwell, J.

Mortgage Debt — Contrary Intention — Locke King’s Act.—A testator bequeathed his business and the premises in which it was carried on, which were leasehold, to his son W., subject to payment of all debts and liabilities owing in respect of the business; he bequeathed his personal estate on trust for conversion, and directed his funeral and testamentary expenses, debts, and legacies to be paid out of the proceeds; and subject thereto for his children equally. The testator had deposited with his bankers the lease of the business premises to secure a private debt:—Held, that the intention of the testator was that W. should take the business premises subject to the trade debts only; that this was a declaration of intention contrary to Locke King’s Act, and that the business premises were exonerated from liability in respect of the private debt secured by equitable mortgage. Nevill, In re (59 L. J. Ch. 511), considered and followed. Thompson v. Bell, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 489—M.L.

Equitable Tenant for Life with Contingent Remainder in Fee—Lands Subject to Charge—Subsequent Vesting in Tenant—Direction to Sell—Devise of Principal Sum to be Realised by the Sale—Merger.—Under a settlement made in 1871 J. P. was entitled, as equitable tenant for life, to certain lands, with remainder in fee in the event of his dying without issue, subject to the interposed life estate in his wife. At the time of the settlement the lands, which were held under a church lease which in 1873 was converted into a grant in fee, were subject to a charge vested in A. I. In 1878 J. P. made his will, wherein, after reciting that by his marriage settlement he had given his wife a life estate in the lands, he proceeded as follows: “But if it please Providence that I leave no child, then, from and after the decease of my said wife, I will, bequeath and direct that the said lands . . . shall be sold . . . and I hereby leave and bequeath the principal sum to be realized by the sale of said property to . . . the . . . bishops of the diocese of O. . . and to their respective successors . . . in trust to and for the following uses” &c. A. I. died in 1879, having by her will bequeathed the charge on the said lands to J. P., who as her sole executor obtained probate. Subsequently J. P. executed three codicils to his will, by each of which he disposed solely of sums of Government stock, leaving them to his wife for life, and after her death to the bishops, on the trusts declared in his will. J. P. died in 1884. On a question subsequently arising as to whether the charge was still a valid and subsisting charge,—Held first, that, on the evidence, the inference to be drawn was that the testator intended the charge to merge; and secondly, that, apart from this question, the words in the will, “principal sum to be realized by the sale,” were sufficient to pass the entire net proceeds of sale, including the charge. Butlin’s Estate, In re, [1907] 1 Ir. R. 169—Wylie, J.

(y) Investments.

Direction as to "Securities" — Extrinsic Evidence.]—Testator, who described himself as a general broker, by his will dated December 11, 1895, gave a sum of money upon certain trusts, and he declared that "the monies liable to be invested under this my will may be invested in such securities as my trustees in their absolute discretion shall think fit. And I authorise my trustees to continue or leave any monies invested at my death in or upon the same securities".—Held, that there was sufficient in the context of the will to shew that the testator was using "securities" as equivalent to "investments" in both sentences; and that the trustees were authorised to appropriate to the trust legacy out of investments belonging to the testator at his death ordinary stock of the Midland Railway; and to purchase with money belonging to the trust legacy ordinary stock of the London and North-Western Railway. Rayner, In re; Rayner v. Rayner, 73 L. J. Ch. 111; [1904] 1 Ch. 176; 89 L. T. 681; 52 W. R. 273—C.A.

Per VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—Evidence is admissible to shew that expressions used in a will had acquired an appropriate meaning, either generally, or by local usage, or amongst particular classes; and where any doubt arises upon the true sense and meaning of the words themselves, or any difficulty as to their application under surrounding circumstances, the sense and meaning of the language may be ascertained by evidence outside the instrument. Ib. And see Aiken, In re; Bolton v. Gilliland, [1898] 1 Ir. R. 325.

"Pecuniary investment"—Money on Deposit at Bank.]—Money on deposit at a bank is not a "pecuniary investment" in ordinary parlance, and under ordinary circumstances will not pass under a bequest of "pecuniary investments" contained in a will. Evan Price, In re; Price v. Newton, 74 L. J. Ch. 437; [1905] 2 Ch. 55; 93 L. T. 44; 53 W. R. 600—Farwell, J.

Conversion—Wasting Property.]—A testatrix, after giving certain specific legacies, left the rest of her property, both real and personal (which included leaseholds), to her trustees upon trust to pay A an annuity of 250*l.*, and directed the remainder of the income to be derived from her property or the investments representing same, to be paid to her husband during his life and after his decease to B, C, and D, in certain shares. She directed that in the event of A dying without issue the incomes so provided for should be increased by the amount of his annuity; but that if A died leaving issue, the said annuity should be paid for the benefit of his child or children until he or they attained twenty-one, when, out of all her said property, a sum of 4,000*l.* was to be raised and distributed as directed in the will. Subject thereto the testatrix gave all her property to B, C, and D in certain shares.—Held, that there was no sufficient indication of intention on the part of the testatrix that the property should be enjoyed in specie, to exclude the application of the rule laid down in Howe v. Dartmouth, (7 Ves. 137), and that the property should be converted for the benefit of those entitled in remainder. Lyons v. Harris, [1907] 1 Ir. R. 32—C.A. And see Stanier v. Hodgkinson, 73 L. J. Ch. 179; 52 W. R. 260—Buckley, J.

Investment Clause.]—See TRUST AND TRUSTEE, col. 2584.

(z) Issue.

Meaning of.]—There is no rule of construction which compels the Court to construe the word "issue" as meaning "children" in a particular gift where the testator has not used any restrictive language, merely because in a number of other gifts in the same will he has used language so restricting its meaning. Ridgeway v. Munkittrick (1 Dr. & W. 84), Rhodes v. Rhodes (27 Beav. 413), and Harrison's Estate, In re (3 L. R. Ir. 114), not followed. Birks, In re; Kenyon v. Birks, 65 L. J. Ch. 319; [1899] 1 Ch. 703; 80 L. T. 257; 47 W. R. 374—Kekewich, J.

A testator bequeathed 600*l.* on trust to pay the income to his daughter M. for her separate use; and in case of her marrying and leaving lawful issue, then the said interest and principal moneys were to pass to such issue in such manner as was described relative to the issue of her sister J., which was as follows: "In case of the death of my said daughter leaving issue, said interest money to be paid and payable to such issue, if more than one, share and share alike, for their support and education, and on their respectively attaining the age of twenty-one years, such principal sum, and such other sum as they or their said mother may be entitled to in this will shall be divided among them share and share alike." The testator then directed that in case of the death of any of his children leaving lawful issue, the share or shares of such child or children should go respectively to the lawful issue of such child or children, if more than one, share and share alike. M. survived the testator, and having died leaving several children and grandchildren, the question arose whether the 600*l.* was divisible among her children only per capita, or among her children and grandchildren per stirpes.—Held, that the fund was divisible among all her children and remoter issue living at the period of distribution. Berry v. Fisher, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 484—V.C.

Children or Remoter Issue.]—A testator gave twelve pecuniary legacies to various persons with substitutional gifts in favour of the "issue" of the legatees in the event of their respectively dying in his lifetime. In every case except one he used words which, as was admitted, had the effect of limiting the meaning of the word "issue" to "children." In the one remaining case the substitutional gift was to issue simply, without any words to shew in what sense that word was used: Held, that in this case also the word "issue" must be taken to mean "children." Hicks, In re; Kenyon v. Hicks, 50 L. J. Ch. 124; [1900] 1 Ch. 417; 81 L. T. 741—C.A.

Gift of Realty by Husband to Wife and Issue of their Marriage—Gift of Realty and Chattels to Wife and Issue.]—A testator by his will bequeathed a certain farm, held in fee-simple, "to my wife and the issue of our marriage"; and he also bequeathed to his wife "and issue" that part of his land, houses (also held in fee-simple) where he lived, also his cattle and chattel property, &c. His wife and an infant son born in his lifetime survived him:—Held, that the words "of our marriage" had not the effect of taking the first gift out of the general rule of construction applicable to wills, that issue, in the absence of a context shewing a contrary intention, must be held to include all lineal descendants; and that therefore the widow took an estate tail in both gifts. Walsh v. Johnston, [1899] 1 Ir. R. 501—V.C.

Gift to "my surviving children" and their respective issue—Personal Estate—"Issue"
Word of Limitation or of Purchase—Alternative Original Gift—Alternative Substitutional Gift—Division per Stirpes.]—In gifts of personalty "issue" is not prima facie a word of limitation, and the question whether it is so is purely one of construction on each particular instrument. Coulden, In re; Coulden v. Coulden, 77 L. J. Ch. 209; [1908] 1 Ch. 320—Parker, J.

The words "and their issue" or "and their respective issue" can be construed as an alternative gift, although such gift is an original and not a substitutional one. Ib.

A testator directed his real and personal estate to be sold at a certain period and equally divided amongst his then surviving children and their respective issue:—Held, that "issue" was not a word of limitation; that the gift to the issue, though original, was alternative; and that the property was divisible per stirpes among the children of the testator who survived the period of distribution and the surviving issue of children who predeceased it. Ib. And see CHILDREN, col. 2824.

Gift to Children for Lives and then to Grandchildren then Living "or the issue of such as may have died"—Conjunctions "or" and "and"—Original Gift—Joint-Tenancy or Tenancy in Common.]—A testator gave his property to trustees upon trust after the death of the survivor of his children to divide the same between and among his "grandchildren then living equally per stirpes and not per capita, or the issue of such as may have died (such issue taking a parent's share only), so that my grandchildren (or their issue) may take their shares equally in loco parentis":—Held, first, that the gift to the issue of grandchildren was original, and not substitutional, and consequently that a great-grandchild who predeceased his own parent and the last surviving tenant for life took a vested interest; and secondly, that the issue of the grandchildren took as tenants in common, and not as joint-tenants. Martin v. Holgate (35 L. J. Ch. 789; L. R. 1 H.L. 175) followed. Merricks' Trusts, In re (35 L. J. Ch. 418; L. R. 1 Eq. 551), explained. Woolley, In re; Wormald v. Woolley, 72 L. J. Ch. 602; [1903] 2 Ch. 206; 89 L. T. 16—Joyce, J.

Co-parceners or Joint-Tenants.]—A testator who died in 1858 devised real estate upon trust to pay the rents and profits to his niece S. N.

for life, and afterwards for her children on their attaining twenty-one years. And if there should be no such child, then to his right heirs for ever. S. N., who, together with three other ladies who were still living, were the testator's co-heiresses, died in 1898 without issue. A summons having been taken out to ascertain whether these co-heiresses succeeded as joint-tenants or co-parceners:—Held, that, having regard to section 3 of the Inheritance Act, 1833, they took as devisees and not by descent. That co-parceny was an incident of descent, and that there was nothing in the Act to shew an intention to annex it to the estate of devisees. That accordingly the three surviving ladies took as joint-tenants. Baker, In re; Pursey v. Holloway, 79 L. T. 343—Stirling, J.

Settlement of Share—Death in Testator's Lifetime of Legatee of Share.]—Where a testator gives residuary estate in trust for daughters in equal shares, and then directs the shares to be settled on each daughter jointe with remainders over to her husband and children, if, on the construction of the whole will, the daughters take only tenancies for life, the share of a daughter who dies in the testator's lifetime leaving a husband or children will not lapse. Pinkhorne, In re; Moreton v. Hughes (63 L. J. Ch. 607; [1894] 2 Ch. 276), followed. Roberts, In re; Tarleton v. Bruton (53 L. J. Ch. 1023; 30 Ch. D. 234), distinguished. Powell, In re; Campbell v. Campbell, 69 L. J. Bequest of Leasehold House—Tenant for Life and Remainderman—Rent—Repairs—Liability.]—Where a testator has bequeathed a leasehold house, held under a lease granted to him, to a beneficiary for life, with a gift over on death, the tenant for life will not be bound to fulfil any of the covenants in the lease as to payment of rent, repairs, or otherwise. The liability under the covenants is a burden cast upon the testator's estate. Courtier, In re; Coles v. Courtier (56 L. J. Ch. 350; 34 Ch. (i.) Generally.

"Household furniture and effects"—Whether Including Jewellery, Horses and Carriages.]—A testator gave his household furniture, books, pictures, paintings, engravings, plate, linen, china, and other effects to A. & P. in equal shares:—Held, that, following the rule in Parker v. Marchant (1 Y. & C. C.C. 290), the word "effects" must be limited to things of the same kind as previously enumerated. That jewellery therefore did not, but that the carriages and horses did, fall under that description. Hammersley, In re; Heasman v. Hammersley, 81 L. T. 150—Stirling, J.

"Furniture and other personal effects"—Articles of Personal Use and for Business Purposes—Tenant's Fixtures.—Bequest of "all the furniture and other personal effects belonging to me and which at the time of my death are at the Roebuck Hotel," the testator being yearly tenant of the hotel.—Held, to pass furniture and personal effects, whether used for the hotel business or testator's personal use, but not tenant's fixtures. Seton-Smith, In re; Burnand v. Waite, 71 L. J. Ch. 386; [1902] 1 Ch. 717; 86 L. T. 322; 50 W. R. 456—Buckley, J.

Farming Stock—Articles "quæ ipso usu consumuntur."—Farming stock bequeathed by a tenant farmer to his wife so long as she remained his widow, the proceeds of which were upon her decease or re-marriage to be equally divided ~~amongst~~ against his children, and the will containing no declaration that she should not be liable to account for any diminution or depreciation, does not fall within the doctrine relating to things quæ ipso usu consumuntur, and the widow cannot dispose of it as though her interest in the bequest were absolute. Myers v. Washbrook, 70 L. J. K.B. 357; [1901] 1 K.B. 840; 83 L. T. 633—D.

Chose in Action—Chattels—Local Description—Bond Payable to Bearer—Shares.—A testator bequeathed the residue of his personal estate and effects "within the United Kingdom" to one set of trustees, and his personal property, estates, and effects "in Natal and the Orange Free State and elsewhere in South Africa" to another set of trustees:—Held, that bonds of the Port Elizabeth Waterworks Co., payable to bearer, fell under the rule that debts are to be considered as locally situate where the debtor lives. Held also, that shares in companies which were registered in South Africa, but which shares could be transferred in England and of which the certificates were in England at the testator's death, must be regarded as locally situate in England. Clark, In re; McKechnie v. Clark, 73 L. J. Ch. 188; [1904] 1 Ch. 294; 89 L. T. 736; 52 W. R. 212; 20 T. L. R. 101—Farwell, J.

"Money in bank."—A husband bequeathed to his wife "all moneys at my death in the house or in the Bank of Scotland, or the City Bank of London, or in any other bank or banks in my name." At his death he held, in addition to money in his account current with the Bank of Scotland, a deposit receipt for 2,000*l.* with the Queensland National Bank, Ltd., repayable four years after its date:—Held, that the deposit receipt was included in the bequest to the testator's wife. Harper's Trustees v. Bain, 5 F. 716—Ct. of Sess.

Legacy "In addition to the sums owing"—No Sums Legally Due—Falsa Demonstratio.—A bequest to a legatee of "the sum of 300*l.* in addition to the sums owing to her from my late husband's estate" in a will which consists entirely of devises and bequests, where no money was actually owing to the legatee by the husband, but he had given to the legatee an I O U for 500*l.* and a promissory note for 500*l.* without any consideration, and the testatrix knows those circumstances, and is herself in possession under his will of the whole of her late husband's estate, and therefore the person who must decide whether those sums are to be paid or not, is a gift to the legatee of the sums specified in the I O U and promissory note in addition to the 300*l.* Rowe, In re; Pike v. Hamlyn, 67 L. J. Ch. 87; [1898] 1 Ch. 153; 77 L. T. 475; 46 W. R. 357—C.A.

Sum "sufficient to pay and discharge all estate duty"—Claim of Limited Owner to Charge Settled Estates in Respect of Estate Duty.—A testator, by a codicil to his will executed after the passing of the Finance Act, 1894, bequeathed to his eldest son, to whom entailed estates would pass on the testator's death, a sum of money "sufficient to pay and discharge all estate duty" which might be payable by him. The residuary legatee claimed that the legacy was impressed with a trust to pay the estate duty, and that the legatee consequently lost his right to recoup himself by a charge on the settled estates under section 9, sub-section 6 of the Act, the object of the gift being to discharge the estate duty and so to free the settled estates from liability. The legatee, on the other hand, claimed that the legacy was one for his own benefit, being a gift to him measured by the amount which he would have to pay for estate duty:—Held (dissentiente STIRLING, L.J.), that, there being no words indicative of a desire on the part of the testator to give the legatee absolute property, the inference could not be drawn that he should take the legacy unfettered by any purpose of the testator; and that this was not a legacy with a motive added, but an imperative direction, the purpose here, as distinguished from a motive, being the discharge of the estate duty. Mexborough, In re; Savile v. Mexborough, 86 L. T. 331—C.A.

Gift to Grandchildren during their Lives—Implied Gift to Survivor.—A testator was possessed of a perpetual annuity of 33*l.* 4*s.* 8*d.* out of the lands of L. By his will the testator bequeathed to each of his grandchildren M., F., and B., 11*l.* 1*s.* 7*d.* yearly during their lives, and directed that after the death of all his said grandchildren, the L. annuity of 33*l.* 4*s.* 8*d.* was to devolve upon his son W. The annual sum of 11*l.* 1*s.* 7*d.* was one-third of the L. annuity. M. and F. died, leaving B. and W. surviving:—Held, that the annual sums of 11*l.* 1*s.* 7*d.* payable to M. and F. were not undisposed of after their deaths, and that B., the surviving grandchild, was entitled to them during her life. McDermott v. Wallace (5 Beav. 142) followed. Lill v. Lill (23 Beav. 446) distinguished. Jennings v. Hanna, [1904] 1 Ir. R. 540—M.R.

Gift of "any money that may be in my possession at my death"—Reversionary Interests in Personality.—Where a testatrix, entitled at her death to certain reversionary interests in personality, after directing payment of debts, funeral and testamentary expenses out of a particular fund, and after making certain bequests, gave absolutely "any money not mentioned in the aforesaid bequests that may be in my possession at my death after payment of my debts funeral and testamentary expenses," the reversionary interests were held to pass under the gift of "money . . . in my possession." Egan, In re; Mills v. Penton, 68 L. J. Ch. 307; [1899] 1 Ch. 688; 80 L. T. 153—Stirling, J.

Stock—Shares—Uncertainty of Subject of Bequest.—By his will made in 1878 a testator directed his trustees "to transfer" to the A. C. Curling Club "two five per cent. guaranteed shares of 100l. each of the G. & S. W. Railway Co." No part of the capital of that company consisted of guaranteed shares of 100l. each, but the testator held 460l. ordinary stock, 310l. preference consolidated stock, and 70l. perpetual guaranteed stock, interest at the rate of 5 per cent. being payable on the latter two stocks. The testator died in 1884. Between the date of his will and his death the testator borrowed money on the security of his estates, and executed an inter vivos trust-disposition and assignation under which his whole estates, including the railway stocks above-mentioned, were realised, the surplus, after payment of his debts, being handed over in 1896 to his testamentary trustees:—Held, first, that the bequest was not a specific legacy, but a legacy of such sum as might be required at the date of the testator's death to purchase the stock described in the will; and secondly, that the expression "guaranteed" as used by the testator meant other than ordinary, and included preference stock, and that the bequest was not therefore void for uncertainty. Barr's Trustees v. Ardrossan Castle Curling Club, 3 F. 903—Ct. of Sess.

"My 140 shares"—Larger Number, Some Fully, Some Partly Paid-up—Right of Selection.—Testatrix gave "my 140 shares in the C. Brewery" to trustees in trust for A for life with remainder over. At the date of her will and death testatrix had forty fully paid shares of 5l. each, and 240 similar shares on which 2l. 10s. only had been paid:—Held, that direct extrinsic evidence of intention was inadmissible to shew which of the shares the testatrix intended. Held also, that A had no right of selection, but that, having regard to the surrounding circumstances, the intention of the testatrix as shown by her will was to bequeath 140 partly paid shares. Tapley v. Wagleton (12 Ch. D. 683) distinguished. Asten v. Asten (63 L. J. Ch. 834; [1894] 3 Ch. 260) approved. Cheadle, In re; Bishop v. Holt, 69 L. J. Ch. 753; [1900] 2 Ch. 620; 83 L. T. 297; 49 W. R. 88—C.A.

Direction to Pay Legacies in Favour of Females Free of Legacy Duty—Gift of Residue to Males and Females as Tenants in Common.—After giving certain legacies to males and females, the testatrix declared that all legacies, devises, and bequests thereinbefore or thereafter given or made in favour of females should be free to legacy duty, the residue being given to three males and three females as tenants in common:—Held, that the legacy duty in respect of the shares of the females in the residue fell to be paid out of their respective shares. Dabrymple, In re; Bircham v. Springfield, 49 W. R. 627—Kekewich, J.

"Securities"—Primary and Secondary Meaning.—A testatrix made a bequest of "all securities for money standing invested in my name." Her personal property comprised the following items: Mortgage bonds, India stock, perpetual debenture stocks, perpetual preference stocks, and shares in a limited company. After the testatrix's death a list in her handwriting containing the above items and headed "Securities" was found. Upon summons to determine whether any of the items passed under the phrase "securities for money standing invested in my name,"—Held, upon the construction of the will, that all the items passed. The legal and general signification of the term "security" considered and explained. Johnson, In re; Greenwood v. Robinson, 89 L. T. 84—Kekewich, J. Affirmed, 89 L. T. 520—C.A.

Bequest to Trustees for the Benefit of Certain Persons and their Children—Direction to Carry on Testator's Business.—A testator gave all his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust as to one fourth part for the children of A. E. L., as to another fourth for A. B. F., as to another fourth the income thereof to P. H., and as to the remaining fourth for W. H., in each case for their lives, and he declared that if any of them died without issue their share should form part of his residuary estate:—Held, that the rule in Howe v. Lord Dartmouth (7 Ves. 137) was not applicable to any share except that given upon trust for P. H., and that, the testator having directed his trustees to carry on his business, the beneficiaries other than P. H. were entitled to the profits thereof as they arose. Hammersley, In re; Heasman v. Hammersley, 81 L. T. 150—Stirling, J.

Legacies Bequeathed by Predecessor in Title of Owner in Fee—Release.—A was the owner in fee of lands subject to (amongst other incumbrances) five legacies under the will of A's predecessor in title. These legacies were in equal priority inter se. A, through her agent B, raised money to pay off three of the legacies. No assignment or release was executed as to one of them. The other two legatees executed deeds releasing A and the lands from their legacies. A was not an executing party to these deeds, and made an affidavit stating that she had no notice that the charges so paid off by her were not to be kept alive for her benefit, and never intended that they should be extinguished:—Held, that the three legacies were subsisting charges for A's benefit. Bayly's Estate, In re, [1898] 1 Ir. R. 383—Ross, J.

Profit-Costs—Power to Charge—Solicitor-Trustee.—Where a solicitor is appointed executor and trustee of a will, and is empowered by his testator to make professional charges as solicitor to the estate, he will not be entitled to his profit-costs as against the creditors if the estate proves insolvent. The right to charge profit-costs is a legacy, and is liable to legacy duty. White, In re; Pennell v. Franklin, 67 L. J. Ch. 502; [1898] 2 Ch. 217; 78 L. T. 770; 46 W. R. 676—C.A.

Gift of Income to Two Persons "so that each shall receive half during their lives"—Gift Over—Death of One Person—Implied Gift to Other.—By his will a testator gave the income of his residuary estate to E. and H. "in equal parts—that is to say, that they shall each receive the half amount of the interest during their natural lives." After "their deaths" the income was given over to other persons:—Held, that on the death of E., H. took by implication the income of the whole fund during her life. Telfair, In re; Garrioch v. Barclay, 86 L. T. 496—Farwell, J.

Residuary Gift to Executor.—The presumption that a legacy to an executor is prima facie given to him in that character for his trouble does not arise if the gift is of residue. Griffiths v. Pruett (11 Sim. 202) followed. Maxwell, In re; Eivers v. Curry, [1905] 1 Ir. R. 386—C.A.

Testator Solicitor in Partnership—Bequest to Partner of "all my share and interest in the business"—Whether Undrawn Capital and Profits Included.—Testator carried on the business of a solicitor with C. under partnership articles, C. being the active partner. The capital was a fixed sum, the profits to be divided equally after C. had taken 400*l.* a year. Accounts were submitted annually to the partners, but were not signed by them. In these circumstances the testator made his will, whereby he gave to C. all his share and interest in the business conditional on his acting as solicitor to his estate free of charge. At his death moneys were standing to the credit of the testator's capital account, and there were undrawn profits:—Held, that as goodwill had been held in such a business to be practically non-existent (Arundell v. Bell, 52 L. J. Ch. 537), to include that only would be to give no effect to the gift, and that accordingly, having regard to the facts known to the testator, his intention was that the gift should pass both the share of capital and the undrawn profits. Beard, In re; Simpson v. Beard (57 L. J. Ch. 887), distinguished. Barfield, In re; Goodman v. Child, 84 L. T. 28—Farwell, J.

Gift of Shares in Business—Rule in Howe v. Dartmouth (Earl).—For the purpose of the application of the rule in Howe v. Dartmouth, (Earl) (7 Ves. 137; 1 Wh. & T. L.C. (7th ed.), p. 68) there is no difference in principle between a trade involving risk and a leasehold burdened with onerous covenants. Stanier v. Hodgkinson, 73 L. J. Ch. 179; 52 W. R. 260—Buckley, J.

A testator, after giving to his wife "all my real and personal estate for her use as long as she remains a widow and at her death all to be divided" among his children, proceeded: "Also my shares and interest in the New Hem Heath Mining Company and the New Rose Vale Brick and Tile Company," which were two colliery businesses carried on by him in partnership with other persons:—Held, upon a consideration of the authorities and the construction of the will, that the rule in Howe v. Dartmouth (Earl) (supra) did not apply, and that the wife was entitled during widowhood to the profits of the shares of the business in specie. Kirkman v. Booth (18 L. J. Ch. 25; 11 Beav. 273) discussed. Ib.

Gift of Sums Exceeding 100*l.* each—Gift by Subsequent Codicil of 50*l.* Additional "so that each receives 100*l.*"—A testator bequeathed

1,000*l.* equally among "his godchildren." By a subsequent codicil he gave "50*l.* additional to each of my godchildren . . . so that each receives 100*l.*" The testator had nine godchildren living at his death:—Held, that the amount of the legacies was not limited to 100*l.*, but that each godchild was entitled to the legacy of 50*l.* in addition to his or her share of the 1,000*l.* Dictum of Lord HARDWICKE in Milner v. Milner (1 Ves. sen. 106) questioned. Segelecke, In re; Ziegler v. Nicol, 75 L. J. Ch. 494; [1906] 2 Ch. 301; 54 W. R. 624; 95 L. T. 708—Joyce, J.

Bequest for Education—Whether Minor Legatee Entitled to Capital as well as Income.—A testatrix bequeathed 250*l.* to A "for her education; should A die under age, to be given to her sister":—Held, that A was entitled during her minority as well to the capital as to the income of the legacy, so far as properly required for her education. Falls v. Alford, [1907] 1 Ir. R. 486—C.A.

To Servants—"One year's wages."—A testator bequeathed one year's wages to all servants who should be in his employment at his death, and should have been in his employment for five years previously thereto:—Held, that servants hired at a weekly wage paid monthly or fortnightly were not included in the bequest. Blackwell v. Pennant (22 L. J. Ch. 155; 9 Hare, 551) followed. Ravenworth, In re; Ravenworth v. Tindale, 74 L. J. Ch. 353; [1905] 2 Ch. 1; 92 L. T. 490; 21 T. L. R. 357—C.A.

Persons in Testator's Employment for a Named Period—Non-employment at Death.—S., by will, directed his trustees to pay to each man who should have been in his employment in London over ten years the sum of 10*l.* for each year beyond the said ten years:—Held, that a man who had been fifteen years in the testator's employment, but was not in such employment at the date of the testator's death or at the date of the will, was entitled to a legacy of 50*l.* Sharland, In re; Kemp v. Rozey (No. 1), 65 L. J. Ch. 280; [1896] 1 Ch. 517—North, J.

To Attesting Witness—Codicil.—A person to whom a gift is made by a will to which he is an attesting witness, and whose title to the gift is revived by a codicil which refers to the will but to which he is not an attesting witness, does not lose the benefit so conferred upon him by his attesting a subsequent codicil referring to and confirming the will and the preceding codicil. Trotter, In re; Trotter v. Trotter, 68 L. J. Ch. 363; [1899] 1 Ch. 764; 80 L. T. 647; 47 W. R. 477—Byrne, J.

Legacies to be Settled on Marriage on Daughters and on their Demise on their Issue—Issue read Children.—A testator bequeathed to each of his four unmarried daughters 10,000*l.* New Government Stock, to be paid and assigned to each as a marriage portion on their respective marriages, and 20,000*l.* Old Government Stock, to be settled on each marriage strictly on his said daughters, and on their demise on their lawful issue, share and share alike, not to be subject to the control of any husband his daughters might marry, and in case any of his said daughters dying and leaving no lawful issue to attain twenty-one or got married, then such share of old stock to be divided, share and share alike, between the survivors of his said four daughters:—Held, that the word "issue" should be restricted to children. Harris v. Loftus, [1899] 1 Ir. R. 491—V.C.

Erroneous Recital of Indebtedness—Account.]

—A testator in his will recited that a son, to whom he had previously given a share of residue, was indebted to him in the sum of 5,000*l.*, and that he (the testator) was desirous of reducing the amount of such indebtedness to 3,000*l.*, and then proceeded to forgive the son the balance of his debt over and above 3,000*l.*, and to declare that the said sum of 3,000*l.*, or so much thereof as should remain unpaid at the period of distribution, should be deducted and taken into account as part of his son's share of residue. The recital was erroneous, and the son, in fact, was never indebted to his father in the sum of 5,000*l.* or any other sum as stated, the only sum his father had ever advanced on his account being a sum of 80*l.* for an indenture of apprenticeship:—Held, that on the true construction of the will, the testator only intended the son to bring into account so much, not exceeding 3,000*l.*, of the sum which the son owed the testator and as remained unpaid at the period of distribution. The only sum, therefore, for which the son was liable to account was the sum of 80*l.* Taylor's Estate, In re; Tomlin v. Underhay (22 Ch. D. 495), followed. Kelsey, In re; Woolley v. Kelsey, 74 L. J. Ch. 701; [1905] 2 Ch. 465; 93 L. T. 662; 54 W. R. 136—Swinfen Eady, J.

"Testamentary expenses"—Intestacy—Costs of Administration—Costs of Probate Action—Estate Duty.]—Under a direction by a testator to his executors to pay the "testamentary expenses" of his widow out of his residuary estate, which consisted of personalty, the executors are entitled to pay—first, the costs of, and incident to, and in connection with the administration of the estate of the widow, who died intestate; secondly, the costs of a probate action instituted by one of the next-of-kin of the widow, and incurred for the benefit of her estate; and thirdly, the estate duty payable on the death of the widow. Clemow, In re; Yeo v. Clemow, 69 L. J. Ch. 522; [1900] 2 Ch. 182; 82 L. T. 550; 48 W. R. 541—Kekewich, J.

The word "testamentary" is applicable to the administration of an estate, whether there is a testament or not. Id.

— Identity of Legatees—Costs.]—The costs of ascertaining the identity of the legatees of pecuniary bequests are "testamentary expenses," and where there is a general direction to pay funeral and testamentary expenses out of the residuary estate they are payable thereout, and not out of the pecuniary legacies. Baumgarten, In re; Bevan v. Rosenbaum, 82 L. T. 711—Farwell, J.

Directions as to Investment, Accumulation, and Survivorship—Residue.]—A testator bequeathed pecuniary legacies to four persons—Jane G., Matthew G., Margaret G., and Thomas G., respectively, and left the residue of his property to Thomas G. and Robert G., and their children in equal shares. He added certain directions, with reference to the legacies, as to investment, accumulation, and survivor-ship:—Held, that the word "legacies" could not be extended so as to include the residue, and that therefore the directions as to investment &c. applied only to the pecuniary legacies. Aiken, In re; Bolon v. Gilliland, [1898] 1 Ir. R. 335—V.C.

Legacies Given by Will Free of Duty—Additional Legacies by Codicil, including One to a Legatee not Named in the Will—Duty on such Legacy.]—By her will a testator gave a number of legacies, and directed that "all the legacies and bequests given by this my will be paid and given free of all deduction for legacy or other duty." By codicil she said: "I give and bequeath the following legacies in addition to those named in my will." Then followed a number of legacies to legatees of the will and this legacy to a legatee not named in the will, and she added the words, "given in addition to those already bequeathed":—Held, that the legacy to the legatee not named in the will was also free of duty. Early v. Benbow (2 Coll. 342) and Byne v. Currey (2 Cr. & M. 603) discussed. Sealy, In re; Tomkins v. Tucker, 85 L. T. 451—Farwell, J.

Beneficial Interest or Trust.]—A testatrix bequeathed all her property to her "dearly beloved husband," whom she appointed sole executor, "to be applied" by him to the maintenance and education of her children:—Held, that the testatrix's husband took all the property so bequeathed to him as a trustee for the children, and not beneficially. Delahunty, In re; O'Connor v. Butler, [1907] 1 Ir. R. 507—C.

Estate Duty—General Power of Appointment by Will.]—Where a testatrix has made a will in exercise of a general testamentary power of appointment over a fund, and has directed her "testamentary expenses" to be paid by her executors, although the appointed fund will not be deemed to pass to the executors "as such," the estate duty payable in respect of it must be paid out of the residuary estate of the testatrix as a "testamentary expense," and not be charged upon the appointed fund. Clemow, In re; Yeo v. Clemow (69 L. J. Ch. 522; [1900] 2 Ch. 182), followed. Treasure In re; Wild v. Stanham, 69 L. J. Ch. 751; [1900] 2 Ch. 648; 83 L. T. 142; 48 W. R. 696—Kekewich, J.

(ii.) Specific Legacies.

"Moneys owing" to Testator at Death—Deposits in Banks—Withdrawable on Demand or by Notice.]—A bequest of "all moneys owing to" testator at death will pass moneys standing to his credit on deposit account with a banker, for the relation between them is that of debtor and creditor. This is so whether the moneys be withdrawable on demand or by notice, for in each case they are due, though not payable. Derbyshire In re; Webb v. Derbyshire, 75 L. J. Ch. 95; [1906] 1 Ch. 135; 94 L. T. 138; 54 W. R. 135—Buckley, J.

"Ready money" — Money on Deposit.]—Money on deposit at a bank which can be withdrawn on fourteen days' notice will not pass under a bequest of "ready money." Mayne v. Mayne ([1897] 1 Ir. R. 324) followed. Weller, In re; Hankinson v. Hayter, 73 L. J.

Money in banks after paying any lawful residue.—A testatrix by her will, after paying of certain special legacies, provided: "Any money in banks after paying my lawful debts, funeral expenses, etc., to be over to my stepdaughter." The will contained no other directions as to the disposal of the residue. After the date of the will she was not entitled to a legacy left to her by her father, but, owing to her state of health, she was not aware of it. The amount of the legacy deposited in bank by the law-agents of her father's executors in their own names in trust for the testatrix:—Held, that the bequest of money in banks after paying my lawful debts, etc., could not be construed as a bequest of the money left to the testatrix by her father, and that it fell to her next-of-kin as intestate succession. Masson v. Smellie, 6 F. & M. 201—Ct. of Sess.

All securities for money standing invested in my name.—A testatrix made a bequest of "all securities for money standing invested in my name." Her personal property comprised the following items: Mortgage bonds, India stock, perpetual debenture stocks, perpetual preference stocks, and shares in a limited company. On the testatrix's death a list in her handwriting containing the above items and headed "securities" was found:—Held, that the words of the bequest referred to the investments generally which were standing in the testatrix's name at the time of her death, the word "invested" referring to the word "money"; and that therefore all the stocks and shares were included in the bequest. Johnson, In re; Greenwood v. Johnson, 89 L. T. 520—C.A.

Picture—Use and Enjoyment—Letting Furd Flat.—A testator gave his pictures to his son upon trust to permit L. W. to have the use and enjoyment thereof during her life. She had some of the pictures in a flat, which was let furnished for a short time:—Held, that she was entitled to let the pictures together with her flat, and was not restricted to personal enjoyment. Williamson, In re; Murray v. Williamson, 94 L. T. 813—Swinfen Eady, J.

Use, Furniture, and Whatever is in House—of Money in House at Death.—By his will a testator bequeathed "my house, furniture, and whatever is in the house I now dwell in, and the house adjoining, so far as it belongs to, to my sister R." By codicil the testator directed the bequest to M., and substituted for a bequest in identical terms to M. the testator (amongst other legacies) gave 500*l.* to R. and M., and there was a residuary clause in the will by which the testator directed the residue of his property, which he valued at "over 5,000*l.*," should be divided amongst the pecuniary legatees in proportion to the amount bequeathed to them respectively. The testator was in the habit of keeping in a box in his house various sums of money, amounting in amount, and after his death a sum of 320*l.* in cash was found in this box:—Held, that the sum of money found in the box at the testator's house at his death did not pass under the bequest to M., but fell into the residue. O'Brien, In re; O'Brien v. O'Brien, [1906] 1 Ir. R. 649—C.A.

"Other articles of household or domestic use and ornament"—Words ejusdem generis.—A testator by his will bequeathed "All my household furniture, plate, linen, china, glass, printed books, musical instruments, wines, liquors, horses, carriages, and other articles of household or domestic use or ornament" to his widow; he gave the residue of his property to trustees upon trust for sale and conversion, and to hold the proceeds of sale upon trust to provide an annuity for his widow, and subject to such annuity to divide the same among certain children of his deceased sisters. The testator died possessed of a large and valuable collection of orchids, which were kept outside the curtilage of his dwelling-house. It was proved that from time to time some of the plants were brought into the dwelling-house for ornament, and such plants were from time to time replaced by others. The orchids were sold for 3,271*l.*:—Held, that an enquiry must be directed as to what plants were from time to time used for ornament, and that the testator's widow was entitled to the proceeds of the sale of such plants. Owen, In re; Peat v. Owen, 78 L. T. 643—Stirling, J.

"All my household furniture and effects in my residence"—Wool in Store Forming Part of Residence.—A testator bequeathed his house in Abbey Street to his son for life, and bequeathed to him "all my household furniture and effects in my residence, Abbey Street aforesaid." At the time of the testator's death there was a large quantity of wool, part of his stock-in-trade, stored in a store which was at the rear of and admittedly formed part of his residence. The will contained a residuary bequest:—Held, that the wool did not pass under the bequest to the son, but was included in the residuary gift. MacPhail v. Phillips, [1904] 1 Ir. R. 155—Barton, J.

Plate in One Mansion-house at Testator's Death Given to One Legatee—Similar Gift to Another Legatee of Plate in Another Mansion-house—Plate Usually in One House Temporarily in the Other at Testator's Death.—A testator by his will gave all his pictures, plate, &c., in each of his two mansion-houses, Enville Hall and Bradgate House, to trustees upon trust to permit the same respectively to go along with and be used and enjoyed by the persons respectively for the time being entitled under the will to the possession of the respective mansion-houses in or about which the said pictures, plate, &c., should be at the time of the testator's death. The testator directed an inventory to be made of the said pictures, plate, &c., belonging to each of the mansion-houses, one copy to be kept by the trustees of the will and the other by the person entitled for the time being to the enjoyment of the same. Enville Hall was the testator's principal place of residence, Bradgate House being used by him during the hunting and shooting season. It was the testator's custom when he went to Bradgate House to take a quantity of plate from Enville Hall with him, and at the end of his residence at Bradgate House the plate was returned to Enville Hall. The plate taken on those occasions was not always the same. A large quantity of plate which had been taken from Enville Hall was in this way in Bradgate House at the date of the testator's death, which took place at Bradgate House. Soon after the testator's death the plate was sent back to Enville Hall and kept there:—Held, on the construction of the will, that the whole of the plate actually in Bradgate House at the date of the testator's death passed to the devisee of that house. Stamford (Earl), In re; Hall v. Lambert, 22 T. L. R. 632—C.A.

"Money invested in" Lambeth Waterworks Co.—Transfer of Undertaking to Water Board—Metropolitan Water Stock—Will Speaking from Death—Ademption.]—A testator bequeathed to his wife "the interest during her life arising from money invested in" (amongst other things) the Lambeth Waterworks Co. At the date of his will in 1904 the testator was possessed of certain Lambeth Waterworks Co. 10l. per Cent. Stock. At the date of his death in 1905 the undertaking of the Lambeth Waterworks Co. had been transferred to the Metropolitan Water Board, and the testator's holding in the Lambeth Waterworks Co. 10l. per Cent. Stock had been converted into Metropolitan Water Stock, issued as compensation in accordance with a scheme made under the Fourth Schedule to the Metropolitan Water Act, 1902:—Held (KENNEDY, L.J., hesitante), that by virtue of section 24 of the Wills Act, 1837, the will must be construed as to the property comprised in the specific bequest as if it had been made immediately before the testator's death, and that the Metropolitan Water Stock was not comprised in the bequest. Held, also (KENNEDY, L.J., dubitante), that, if the will for this purpose was to be construed as at the date of the execution, then the bequest of the Lambeth Waterworks Co. 10l. per Cent. Stock had been adeemed. Slater, In re; Slater v. Slater, 76 L. J. Ch. 472; [1907] 1 Ch. 665; 97 L. T. 74—C.A.

"Stock or shares" in specified Railway Company—Testatrix Possessed of Stock in Distinct Undertaking—Misdescription.]—A testatrix by her will dated January 2, 1900, bequeathed to certain legatees "all the preference stock or shares in the Dublin, Wicklow, and Wexford Railway Co. of which I may at the time of my death be possessed." She died in March, 1901. The testatrix never had any stock or shares in the named railway, but she had at the time of her death a sum of 1,460l. capital stock of the Dublin and Kingstown Railway, which was not expressly dealt with by her will. She became entitled to this stock in 1871. In 1856 the Dublin and Kingstown Railway leased all their interest in their railway to the Dublin, Wicklow, and Wexford Railway at a rent; and the line from Dublin to Kingstown was managed and worked by the last-named company, forming an integral part of their railway system. It was stated on affidavit that the public did not as a rule distinguish between the two companies, and in previous testamentary documents the testatrix used the two designations interchangeably:—Held, that the 1,460l. capital stock held by the testatrix passed under the specific bequest to the legatees, and did not fall into the residuary gift contained in the will. Flood v. Flood, [1902] 1 Ir. R. 538—M.R.

VOL. II.

Insufficient Description — Ambiguity.]—A testator bequeathed "twenty Northern Bank shares" to a legatee. At the date of his death the testator was possessed of fifty-one "A" Northern Bank shares of the value of 26l. each, and seventy-two "B" Northern Bank shares of the value of 13l. each:—Held, that the legatee was entitled to select twenty of the "A" shares as constituting her legacy. O'Donnell v. Welsh, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 115—M.R.

Specific Bequest of Heritage—Sale of Subject-matter under Statutory Powers.]—A testator directed his trustees to convey to A. certain heritable subjects including certain property in N. Street, Glasgow, "so far as the same shall belong to me at my death, but under all burdens affecting the same." After the date of his will notice to acquire the property in N. Street was served on the testator by the Glasgow Corporation acting under statutory powers, and he thereafter sold the property to the corporation with entry at Martinmas following, but he died (before Martinmas) without having executed a conveyance to the corporation. After his death his trustees executed a conveyance in favour of the corporation, and received payment of the price:—Held, that, as the testator had died without executing a conveyance in favour of the corporation, the property in N. Street belonged to him at the time of his death under the burden of completing the sale to the corporation; that A.'s right under the will was a right to a conveyance of the subjects by the trustees under the same burden; and therefore that the trustees were bound to make over the price to him. Pollok's Trustees v. Anderson, 4 F. 455—Ct. of Sess.

(iii.) Payment of Legacies.

Direction to pay Legacy "six years after my decease"—Death of Beneficiary before Time for Payment—Lapse.]—A testator declared that his trustees should stand seised and possessed of his residuary personalty and realty upon trust to retain legacies to themselves, and to "pay the following legacies: To my brother, G. E., the annual sum of 50l. for the term of five years from my decease and the legacy of 1,000l. six years after my decease." The testator died on July 6, 1900, and G. E. on May 9, 1903:—Held, that, there being no gift except in this direction to pay, everything depended upon the expiration of six years, and that, G. E. not having survived this period after the testator's death, his estate did not take the 1,000l. Eve, In re; Belton v. Thompson, 93 L. T. 235—Kekewich, J.

Trust for Payment of Legacies in Futuro—Interest Thereon.]—A testatrix directed the trustees of her will to hold her residuary estate upon trust for investment thereof and to pay one moiety of the annual income to a niece during her life and the other moiety thereof to another niece during her life, with certain directions as to such income, her intention being that the income of each should not exceed 250l. per annum; and, subject to the payment of the income as aforesaid, she directed the trustees to hold her residuary estate upon trust thereout to pay certain legacies; and she directed the trustees to hold the ultimate residue upon trust for certain named persons:—Held, that no special period was fixed by the will for the payment of the legacies; and that, therefore, interest thereon was payable from the end of one year after the testatrix's death. Vates, In re; Throckmorton v. Pike, 96 L. T. 758—C.A.

Legacy—Time Fixed for Payment—Interest.]—

A married woman, in exercise of a general power of appointment given by her marriage settlement over a trust fund subject to the life interest of her husband, appointed that after his death the trust fund should be held by the trustees upon trust to pay a number of legacies to various persons, some absolutely and some for life with remainders over, and appointed her husband residuary legatee. Her husband survived her. Upon his death the trust fund was transferred by the trustees of the settlement to her executor, who proceeded to pay the legacies. The executor of the husband, who was also executor of the wife, claimed that interest was not payable upon the legacies until the expiration of one year from the death of the husband. Held—first, that a time was fixed by the will for payment of the legacies—namely, at the date of the death of the tenant for life, and that, therefore, interest ran from that date; and secondly, that, even if no time was fixed by the will for payment of legacies, the fund out of which they were payable being a reversionary one the period of grace given to the executor for payment of legacies was extended from one year after the death of the testatrix to the date at which the reversionary fund fell into possession, and that interest began to run from the date of the death of the tenant for life. Gibbon v. Chaytor, [1907] 1 Ir. R. 65—M.R.

Contingent Legacy without Interest—Appropriation—Validity.]—Where a contingent legacy is given by a will, but interest is not given in the meantime, the executor is not entitled to invest the amount of the legacy and appropriate the investment to it in such a way that the legatee would receive any profit or bear any loss arising from the investment before the happening of the contingency. He can set apart and invest a reasonable sum to secure payment of the legacy if it should become payable, but the investment and the income thereof will, until the contingency happens, remain part of the estate of the testator. Hall, In re; Foster v. Metcalfe, 72 L. J. Ch. 554; [1903] 2 Ch. 226; 88 L. T. 619; 51 W. R. 529—C.A.

Infants—Appropriation—Payment into Court—Interest.]—A testator by his will, after giving a number of pecuniary legacies to infant legatees, gave all the residue of his estate to his trustees upon trust for sale and conversion, with a provision that they might in their absolute discretion postpone sale and conversion and payment of legacies; but he declared that all legacies not paid within a year from his decease should carry interest at 4 per cent.:—Held, that the provision for payment of 4 per cent. interest was operative until payment to the legatees of their legacies or payment into Court under section 42 of the Trustee Act, 1893, and that the trustees could not appropriate trust funds to meet the legacies so as to free the residue from liability to interest. Salaman, In re; De Pass v. Sonnenthal, 76 L. J. Ch. 419; [1907] 2 Ch. 46; 96 L. T. 809—Kekewich J.

Bequest of Moneys Due on Specified Mortgages “after payment of my just debts and funeral expenses and the expense of proving this my will”—Subsequently Acquired Personality—Intestacy—Legacies—Fund Applicable for Payment—Ambiguity—Extrinsic Evidence.]—A testator bequeathed “the residue and remainder” of two specified sums due on mortgage “after payment of my just debts and funeral expenses and the expense of proving this my will.” After the date of the will he became entitled to further personal estate. There was no bequest of residue; but there were legacies and an annuity:—Held, that the legacies and annuity were not to be paid out of the mortgage debts, which were subject only to the payment of debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and, there being no ambiguity, that extrinsic evidence was not admissible. Higgins v. Dawson, 71 L. J. Ch. 132; [1902] A.C. 1; 85 L. T. 763; 50 W. R. 837—H.L. (E.)

Interest on Legacy—Gift to Adult—Obligation to Maintain Infants.]—A gift of a sum of money to be held on trust to pay the income to a widow during widowhood, subject to her maintaining and educating her infant children, does not carry interest from the testator's death. Raven v. Waite (1 Swanst. 553) followed. Leslie v. Leslie (Ll. & G. t. Sugd. 1) and Richards, In re (L. R. 3 Eq. 119), distinguished. Crane, In re; Adams v. Crane, 77 L. J. Marshalling Assets—Personalty Insufficient for Payment of Debts—Pecuniary Legatees and Specific devisees.]—Where a will contains a general direction for the payment of debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and the unbequeathed personality and undisposed-of realty are insufficient to pay the same, pecuniary legatees are entitled to have the assets marshalled as against specific devisees of the real estate. *Stokes, In re; Parsons v. (ee) Life Interest.

Successive Limitations—Life Estates.]—A testator by his will devised “all my real estate to P. H. for his life, with remainder to his first and other sons successively in tail, with remainder to the eldest and every other son of C. H. for life, with remainder to the first and other sons of such sons of C. H. in tail, with remainder to my own right heirs." C. H. had several sons, of whom P. H. was the second. P. H. died without issue:—Held, that the first and other sons of C. H. took successive life estates one after the other, and that the remainder to the first and other sons of the eldest son of C. H. did not take effect till after the deaths of all the successive tenants for life. Honywood v. Honywood, 92 L. T. 814—H.L. (E.)

Gift to Some of Several Co-heiresses after Death of A—Life Estate—Necessary Implication.]—A gift of real estate after the death of A to persons who are some, but not all, of the co-heiresses of the testator does not confer upon A a life estate by necessary implication. Hutton v. Simpson (2 Vern. 722) and Willis v. Lucas (1 P. Wms. 472) examined and explained. The reasoning in Ralph v. Carrick (48 L. J. Ch. 801; 11 Ch. D. 873) applied. Willatts, In re; Willatts v. Artley, 74 L. J. Ch. 269; [1905] 1 Ch. 878; 92 L. T. 195; 21 T. L. R. 194—Farwell, J. See s.c. in C.A., 74 L. J. Ch. 564; [1905] 2 Ch. 135; 93 L. T. 256; 21 T. L. R. 571.

Life Rent—Property given to Wife for Life—Optional Power to Sell given to Life Tenant—Intention for Enjoyment in Specie.]—A testator who was, at his decease in 1901, entitled to freeholds and leasehold houses, held at a ground rent and let to weekly tenants, for a term of which thirty-nine years was unexpired, after bequeathing legacies, gave to his widow a life rent of all his property with power to sell and re-invest the proceeds on good security, after her death his property to be divided amongst his children:—Held, that, although no indication of the testator's intention could be drawn from the use of the expression "life rent," which merely indicated the testator's intention to give his widow a life interest in his property, yet that, according to the rule in Pitcairn, In re; Brandreth v. Colvin (65 L. J. Ch. 120; [1896] 2 Ch. 199), the optional power of sale given to the widow, the life tenant, furnished sufficient indication of the testator's intention that she should enjoy his leasehold property in specie to exclude the operation of the rule of conversion in Howe v. Dartmouth (Earl) (7 Ves. 137). Bentham, In re; Pearce v. Bentham, 94 L. T. 307—Kekowich, J.

Discretionary Trust for Benefit of Person for Life—"Accumulation" of Surplus Rents—Devolution—Income or Capital of Residuary Estate.]—Where a testator, who died in 1865, gave certain freehold houses to his trustees upon trust to receive the rents, and after making certain payments thereout to apply the residue at their discretion for the benefit of his daughter for her life, and after her decease to stand seised of the premises with any surplus or accumulation of rents that might not be applied for the benefit of his daughter in trust for her children with limitations over in default of children, and he also gave his residuary real and personal estate to his trustees upon trust for, amongst other persons, his daughter for life, and after her decease upon trust for other persons, it was held that by means of the Accumulations Act, 1800, the surplus rents after the expiration of twenty-one years from the testator's death formed part of the capital of the testator's residuary estate, and must be invested, and that the income only of such investment was payable to the tenants for life. Pope, In re; Sharp v. Marshall, 70 L. J. Ch. 26; [1901] 1 Ch. 61; 49 W. R. 22—Farwell, J.

To direct the accruing income of a fund to be invested and the income of the investment to be paid to a tenant for life is not to direct an accumulation. Ib.

Gift in Will to Father for Life—Remainder to his Children—Revocation by Codicil of all Gifts "to or for the benefit of" Father—Acceleration of Children's Interest.]—A testator directed the trustees of the will to carry on his business during the minority of his sons for their benefit, with liberty to employ any of his sons in the business at a salary; and subject thereto to hold the business in trust for the sons equally when the youngest attained twenty-one. If any of the sons should then be unwilling to join in the business, or be dead, the testator gave the other sons an option to purchase his share. The testator devised certain freeholds on trust as to one equal fourth part or share for his son G. W. for life, with remainder to his children, and as to the other three fourth shares on similar trusts for his other sons and their children. By a codicil reciting that he was dissatisfied with G. W., and had ceased to employ him in his business, he revoked each and every devise, bequest, gift, and legacy contained in the will to or for the benefit of G. W., and every provision and benefit thereby given, intended, or made to or for him, and directed that every clause of the will purporting to entitle G. W. to share any part of the estate with any other person or persons should be construed and the directions and trusts carried out as if G. W.'s name had never appeared therein. The testator further gave by the codicil 500*l.* for the maintenance or benefit of G. W.'s children:—Held, that the words "for the benefit of" G. W. were satisfied by the power given to the trustees to employ the sons in the business, and by the option to purchase; that the revocation of gifts to G. W. extended only to his life interest, and not to the interests of his children, which remained and were accelerated; and that the gift of the 500*l.* to them was additional and not substitutional. Love, In re; Green v. Tribe (47 L. J. Ch. 783), and Alt v. Gregory (8 De G. M. & G. 221) applied. Tabor v. Prentice (32 W. R. 872) distinguished. Whitehorne, In re; Whitehorne v. Best, 75 L. J. (ff) Next-of-Kin.

Foreign Law—Whole and Half Blood—Next-of-Kin of a German Subject.]—The expression

next-of-kin means, in English law, the nearest blood relations in an ascending and descending line, whether of the whole or half blood, and this construction will be placed on that expression in the will of an English testator giving a legacy to the next-of-kin of a legatee who is a subject of a foreign State, under the law of which relations of the half blood are not deemed next-of-kin. Fergusson's Will, In re, 71 L. “Desire” — Annual Allowance.]—Testatrix by will gave her property equally between her two daughters for their own absolute use, and expressed her “desire” that each of them should during the lifetime of her son pay to him one-third of the respective incomes of her said two daughters accruing from the moneys and investments under her will:—Held, that the will created no trust enforceable by the son. *Oldfield, In re; Oldfield v. “In full confidence” — Gift in Default of Disposition.]—A testator gave to his wife the whole of his real and personal estate “absolutely in full confidence that she will make such use of it as I should have made myself, and that at her death she will devise it to such one or more of my nieces as she may think fit; and in default of any disposition by her thereof by her will or testament, I hereby direct that all my estate and property acquired by her under this my will shall at her death be equally divided among the surviving said nieces”:—Held (LORD LINDLEY dissenting), that there was a gift in favour of the surviving nieces on the widow's death, subject to a power of testamentary appointment by the widow to one or more of the nieces, who in default of appointment were to share equally; and that if the nieces predeceased the widow the latter would become absolutely entitled. Comiskey v. Bowring-Hanbury, 74 L. J. Ch. 263; [1905] A. C. 84; 92 L. T. 241; 53 W. R. 402; 21 T. L. R. 252—H.L. (E.)

Secret Trust Binding Part of Residue—Payment of Debts.]—Where residuary personal estate has been given by will and a specific part of it is bound in the hands of the residuary legatee by a secret memorandum of trust not executed as a will, the Court will, as between the residuary legatee and the beneficiary, give effect to the secret trust as if the part of the residue bound by it had been specifically bequeathed. Maddock, In re; Llewellyn v. Washington, 71 L. J. Ch. 567; [1902] 2 Ch. 220; 86 L. T. 644; 50 W. R. 598—C.A.

Testatrix gave her real estate and residuary personal estate to W., whom she appointed one of her executors, and by a subsequent memorandum (admitted by W. to create a valid trust) directed that a specific part of the residuary personal estate should be held in trust for other persons. The residuary personal estate, exclusive of the part bound by the memorandum, was insufficient for the payment of debts. There was real estate:—Held, that (as between W. and the beneficiaries under the memorandum) the residuary personal estate unaffected by the memorandum was primarily liable, and that the deficiency must be borne rateably by the part of the residuary personal estate bound by the memorandum and real estate. Id.

— Gift to Legatee “to be distributed as he thinks right.”]—A testator bequeathed personalty to O. “to be distributed as he thinks right.” He appointed no executor. O. was the person who prepared the testator's will and was verbally informed at the time of its execution by the testator that he wished him to do “as he thought fit with the money, to distribute it after payment of debts, &c.” among five named persons. O. accepted the trust:—Held, that O. was under the terms of the will entitled for his own benefit, but that, as a secret trust had been accepted by him, he took on a trust enforceable by the Court for the beneficiaries named by the testator. O'Brien v. Condon, [1905] 1 Ir. R. 51—M.R.

— Absolute Bequest—Joint Tenants—Communication of Trust to one Joint Tenant only after Execution of Will.]—A secret trust intended to affect an absolute bequest to two persons as joint tenants, and communicated after the date of the will to and accepted by one of them only, will not be binding on the other if he has no notice of the trust until after the testator's death, because his interest in the bequest is not tainted with any fraud in procuring the execution of the will. Stead, In re; Whitham v. Andrew, 69 L. J. Ch. 49; [1900] 1 Ch. 237; 81 L. T. 751; 48 W. R. 221—Farwell, J.

Secus when the will is made on the faith of an antecedent promise to perform the trust by one alone of two joint tenants, for in that case the other joint tenant, although ignorant of the trust until after the testator's death, cannot claim an interest under a fraud committed by his co-legatee. Id.

Trust for Sale beyond Limits—Beneficiaries Ascertained within Limits—Conversion—Election to take Real Estate as Realty.]—Testator, who died in 1854, by his will made in 1848 gave his real and leasehold estates upon trust, in the events which happened, to pay the income thereof to his daughter during her life, and after her death to her then or any future husband who should survive her, during his life, and after the death of the survivor of his daughter and any husband of hers, and the failure of the children of his daughter, upon trust for sale, and to hold the proceeds thereof upon trust for certain persons in the will designated. There was no express gift of the income of the property pending sale to the persons to whom the proceeds of sale were given. The daughter and her husband were both dead, and there was no issue of the daughter:—Held, that the trust for sale was bad, as the sale might take place beyond the period allowed by law, but the will shewed an intention to benefit the particular persons designated who were ascertainable and ascertained within the period, and the gift to them was good and remained unaffected by the failure of the trust for sale, which was mere machinery for passing the property; and the persons entitled took the property in the form in which it was without conversion. Appleby, In re; Walker v. Lever; Walker v. Nisbet, 72 L. J. Ch. 332; [1903] 1 Ch. 565; 88 L. T. 219; 51 W. R. 455—C.A.

Ch. 54; [1893] 3 Ch. 421), and dictum of JESSEL, M.R., in Goodier v. Johnson (51 L. J. Ch. 369, 370; 18 Ch. D. 441, 446), approved and applied. Id.

Gift to Grandchildren "Absolutely" upon Attaining Twenty-five—Gift over—Power of Maintenance—Vesting.]—Testator gave a sum of 12,000*l.* upon trust for a daughter for life, and after her death upon trust for all her children "when they shall attain the age of twenty-five years but not before," and in case there should not be "any such child," the fund was to fall into residue. Until the said sum was invested as directed, interest was to be paid to his daughter or her children "on their respective portions." The testator also gave one moiety of his residuary real and personal estate upon trust for his son N. for life, and after his death upon trust "for his child or children absolutely upon their attaining the age of twenty-five years, and in the event of the death of either or all the children of my said son before attaining the age of twenty-five years, then upon trust to pay the share of the child or children so dying" to testator's son H. absolutely. The will contained a power for the trustees to apply all or any part of the income of the expectant share of a grandchild of the testator, after the death of the preceding owner for life of such share, for the maintenance and education of the grandchild:—Held, that the grandchildren of the testator took vested interests, and the gifts were not void for remoteness. Turney, In re; Turney v. Turney, 69 L. J. Ch. 1; [1899] 2 Ch. 789; 81 L. T. 548; 48 W. R. 96—C.A.

Fox v. Fox (L. R. 19 Eq. 286) approved—per LINDLEY, M.R., and SIR F. H. JEUENE. Semble, the suggestion in Wintle, In re; Tucker v. Wintle (65 L. J. Ch. 863; [1896] 2 Ch. 711), that the decision in Fox v. Fox was not good law, is not warranted. Id.

Gift Over—Splitting up—Absolute Gift—Cutting down—Void Limitations.]—A testator, after giving a life interest to his wife, gave two-fifths of his residuary personal estate to S. D., and declared that the portion so given should remain in trust for her during her life, and after her death for the benefit of any child or children of hers, who being a son or sons should attain twenty-five, or being a daughter or daughters should attain twenty-one or marry under that age, and in default of any such issue should be divided among the children of his brother C.:—Held, first, that the gift over was void for remoteness; and secondly, that the gift to S. D. was an absolute gift in the first instance, and the settlement by which it was sought to restrict it having failed, the absolute gift remained and the share belonged to S. D.'s personal representatives. Evers v. Challis (29 L. J. Q.B. 121; 7 H.L. C. 531) distinguished. Hancock v. Watson, 71 L. J. Ch. 149; [1902] A.C. 14; 85 L. T. 729; 50 W. R. 321—H.L. (E.)

Gift of Minerals "if they should be worked"—Condition Precedent.]—A testator, who died in 1858, by his will dated in 1845, devised certain freehold property to his son for life, with remainder to his grandson in fee. Subsequently the testator became entitled to the payment of a sum of money for certain lands taken by a railway company for the purposes of their undertaking. Accordingly, by a codicil dated in 1857, the testator bequeathed this sum to his son and his two daughters in equal shares, and he directed that "if the minerals" under the devised property "should be worked," the same should "be divided in the same manner as before mentioned in three parts equal shares":—Held, that the gift of the minerals to the testator's son and daughters, not being a present one, so that the minerals should pass to them immediately, but a conditional one, the division of the proceeds depending on the working and sale of the minerals, which condition might not happen within the period allowed by law, the gift was void under the rule against perpetuities. Thomas v. Thomas, 87 L. T. 58—C.A.

Repair of Tomb—"Longest period allowed by law"—Twenty-one Years from death of Survivor of all Persons living at Testator's Death—Void Gift—Uncertainty—Perpetuity.]—A testatrix bequeathed a legacy to trustees upon trust for the maintenance and repair of a tomb "for the longest period allowed by law, that is to say until the period of twenty-one years from the death of the last survivor of all persons who shall be living at my death":—Held, that, whether the bequest was void as a perpetuity or not, it was, at any rate, void for uncertainty. Moore, In re; Prior v. Moore, 70 L. J. Ch. 358; [1901] 1 Ch. 936; 84 L. T. 501; 49 W. R. 484—Joyce, J.

—Out of Income of Legacy—Remainder of Income Given for Good Charitable Purpose—Object Partly Illegal—Whole of Income Applicable to Charity.]—Where a legacy has been given to trustees upon trust to apply the income in keeping a tomb in repair, and as to the remainder of the income for valid charitable purposes, then, the trust for repair of the tomb being void, the result of the failure of that trust is that the whole of the income of the fund becomes applicable for the charitable purposes.

(ii) Residue.

General Residuary Gift of Property "not hereinbefore disposed of"—Second Residuary Clause—Lapsed Legacies and Devises.—A testator, after several legacies and devises of land which failed, devised and bequeathed to his executors on certain trusts "the remainder of his property which he described as follows: "All my railway and other shares, stock and interest in companies, moneys in the funds, dividends and debts due to me at the time of my death, and also the rest of my estate and effects, real and personal, not hereinbefore disposed of, and all securities, bonds, coupons, cash in bank or elsewhere." At the end of his will he appointed C. S. his residuary legatee:—Held, that the words of the first general residuary clause were sufficiently wide to capture not only property undisposed of, but also lapsed legacies and devises, although there was apparently in that case nothing left for the second residuary clause to operate upon. Jones v. Wilson, [1900] 1 Ir. R. 342—V.C.

"What is left"—Intestacy during Life of A.]—A testator gave his household effects to his wife absolutely, and directed that at his death his wife was to have power to sell all property and land belonging to him, and that at her death "what is left" was to be divided between two out of his five daughters:—Held, that the words "what is left" meant the net residue after payment of debts and costs of realisation, and that the testator died intestate during the life of his widow as to his personal estate (other than his household effects) and as to all his real estate. Willatts, In re; Willatts v. Artley, 74 L. J. Ch. 269; [1905] 1 Ch. 378; 92 L. T. 195; 21 T. L. R. 194—Farwell, J. See s.c. in C.A., 74 L. J. Ch. 564; [1905] 2 Ch. 135; 93 L. T. 256; 21 T. L. R. 571.

"Estate and effects"—Trusts—Real Estate Passing.]—A testator "gave and bequeathed" all his ready-money, securities for money, stocks, and all the rest of his "estate and effects," upon certain trusts for his wife and children, with a gift over. Trusts were declared of the "interests dividends and annual proceeds" or "produce" "of the said trust moneys stocks funds and securities," "the income of the said trust moneys stocks funds and securities," and "the said trust moneys." There was no power of sale. Power was given to vary "the securities of the trust money." On appointment of new trustees "the said trust moneys stocks funds and securities" were to be transferred:—Held, that real estate passed under the residuary gift and that the trusts applied to it. Kirby-Smith v. Parnell, 72 L. J. Ch. 468; [1903] 1 Ch. 483; 51 W. R. 493—Buckley, J.

"Remainder of my property"—Residuary Legatee Appointed—Destination of Lapsed Pecuniary Legacy.]—Where, in a will, pecuniary legacies are followed by a gift of "the remainder of my property" to one or more, this is a good residuary bequest, and is not revoked by the subsequent appointment of a residuary legatee in the will. Isaac, In re; Harrison v. Isaac, 74 L. J. Ch. 277; [1905] 1 Ch. 427; 92 L. T. 227—Buckley, J.

A lapsed pecuniary legacy will fall into the first, and not the second of such residuary dispositions; but a lapse, in whole or in part, of the first residuary disposition will ensure for the benefit of the person entitled under the second. Ib.

Named Person—Lapse—Limited Survivorship Clause—Revocation of Gift by Codicil.]—A testatrix left her residuary estate to four named persons, A, B, C, and D, "as tenants in common, and if only one of them shall survive me, then to such one absolutely." By a codicil, after referring to the death of D, the testatrix revoked whatever interest D had in her will. A, B, and C survived the testatrix:—Held, that the gift of survivorship was intended to be general, and not confined to the case of only one legatee dying, and that in any event the revocation clause of the codicil must be construed as directing the residuary bequest of the will to be read as if D was not one of the residuary legatees; and, consequently, that in the events that had happened D's share was not disposed of, but went to the other legatees. Radcliffe, In re; Young v. Beale, 51 W. R. 409—Buckley, J.

"Residuary legatee"—After-purchased Real Estate—Extrinsic Evidence.]—The words "residuary legatee" in a will, being prima facie referable to personal and not to real estate, do not in the absence of a context sufficient to modify that prima facie reference constitute a residuary devise of real estate not otherwise disposed of by the will, even where the property in question is shown to have been acquired after the date of the will. Gibbs, In re; Martin v. Harding, 76 L. J. Ch. 238; [1907] 1 Ch. 465; 96 L. T. 423—Joyce, J.

The fact that at the date of the will the testator has no real estate other than that of which the will contains a specific and complete disposition may and must be borne in mind in considering whether the naming of a residuary legatee constitutes a residuary devise. Ib.

Gift of Residue without Words of Severance—Power of Advancement—Joint Tenancy or Tenancy in Common.]—A testator devised the residue of his property to trustees for the benefit of six of his children, with power to his said trustees to advance such sum or sums as they might think fit for the education and advancement in life of his said children:—Held, that the power of advancement given to the trustees was inconsistent with a joint tenancy, and that consequently a tenancy in common was created in the residue. L'Estrange v. L'Estrange, [1902] 1 Ir. R. 372—V.C.

Gift of Residue to Six Children now Living—

All but One Dead at Date of Will—False Enumeration—Mistake—Intestacy.—Testator gave the residue of his estate to five persons and the six children of S. F. O. in equal shares as tenants in common. By a codicil he declared that by the words "the six children" he meant "the six children now living." Five of the children died before the date of the will:—Held, that there was no intestacy, but that the residue was divisible between the five other persons and the surviving child in equal shares. Sharp, In re; Maddison v. Gill, 77 L. J. Ch. 251; [1908] 1 Ch. 372—Joyce, J.

Contingent Gift—Intermediate Income.—The testator made a residuary gift in trust for all the children of his sister who being sons should attain the age of twenty-one years, or being daughters should attain that age, or marry under that age, in equal shares, and if there should be only one such child, the whole to be in trust for that one child; and in the event of his sister not having any children or child who should attain a vested interest then over. The sister had never had any children who lived more than a few hours, and was forty-six years of age:—Held, that the gift carried with it the intermediate income, and that the income undisposed of must be accumulated for twenty-one years from the testator's death, or until the fund became divisible. Love, In re; Green v. Tribe (47 L. J. Ch. 783), dissented from on this point. Taylor, In re; Smart v. Taylor, 70 L. J. Ch. 585; [1901] 2 Ch. 184; 84 L. T. 758; 49 W. R. 615—Cozens-Hardy, J.

Lapsed and Revoked Shares of Particular Residue—Gift to Wife and Children then Living—Class.—A testator bequeathed certain articles consisting of works of art, &c., specifically to individuals, and directed that all his furniture, objects of art, and household goods not by his will or any codicil thereto otherwise bequeathed, should be sold within six months after his decease, and that the money arising from the sale should be divided equally between his wife and all his children then living, share and share alike; and after other dispositions he bequeathed the residue of his property to one of his children. By a codicil he revoked all gifts to another child, D. The specific legatees and the testator's wife died in his lifetime:—Held, first, that the specific legacies fell into the particular residue; secondly, that the shares of the wife and D. of that residue did not pass to the general residuary legatee, but went to the children other than D. living at the period of distribution. M'Kay v. M'Kay, [1900] 1 Ir. R. 213—V.C.

Gift of Residue Subject to Annuities—Children—Advances—Hotchpot—Rate of Interest.—Where a testator, having by his will given his residuary estate subject to annuities to his children, has made advances to children in his lifetime and directed the same to be brought into hotchpot, interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, and not 3 per cent. per annum, is to be calculated on such advances as from the date of the death of the testator. Stewart v. Stewart (49 L. J. Ch. 763; 15 Ch. D. 539) and Hargreaves, In re; Hargreaves v. Hargreaves (86 L. T. 43), followed. Whiteford, In re; Inglis v. Whiteford (72 L. J. Direction that Share of Residue shall Sink into Residue—Mode of Distribution—Accrued Shares.

—A testator gave his residuary estate upon trust for conversion and investment, and as to one fourth part thereof upon trust for the separate use of his daughter M. during her life, and after her decease upon trust for the children or child of his said daughter living at her decease, provided that, if any one or more of the children of his said daughter should die in her lifetime leaving lawful issue, such issue should be entitled to the share which their parent would have been entitled to if he or she had survived the testator's daughter. And he gave one other fourth part of his residuary estate upon similar trusts for the benefit of each one of his three daughters C., S., and E., and their respective children and issue. And he declared that if any one or more of his said four daughters should die without leaving any child or the issue of a child living at their respective deceases the shares or share of his said daughters or daughter so dying should fall into and become part of his residuary estate, and be held and disposed of on the same trusts as were therein before declared thereof:—Held, that, on the death of a daughter of the testator without issue her share ought to be divided into thirds, and one third held upon trusts for the benefit of each one of the surviving daughters and her children and issue similar to those declared by the will as to her original share; and on the death of another daughter without issue her share, both original and accrued, ought to be divided into halves, and one half held upon similar trusts for the benefit of each of the remaining two daughters and her children and issue, and so on, so that in the event of there being issue of one daughter only such issue would ultimately take the whole residue. Palmer, In re; Palmer v. Answorth (62 L. J. Ch. 988; [1893] 3 Ch. 369), which overruled Humble v. Shore (33 L. J. Ch. 188n.; 7 Hare, 247; 1 H. & M. 550n.), followed. Allan, In re; Dow v. Cassaigne, 72 L. J. Ch. 159; [1903] 1 Ch. 276; 88 L. T. 246; 51 W. R. 403—C.A.

Division between Two Unequal Classes—Mode of Distribution.—A testator gave his residuary estate upon trust as to three equal seventh parts for three members of a class in equal shares, and as to four equal seventh parts for four members of another class in equal shares; and he directed that in a certain event which happened the share of one of the three should lapse and form part of his residuary estate:—Held, that each of the remaining six members took an equal seventh share, and that the lapsed share must be divided as the residue was directed to be divided, three sevenths of it going to the two of the first class in equal shares and four to the four of the second in equal shares. Ward, In re; Escrib v. Ward, 76 L. J. Ch. 253; [1907] 1 Ch. 391; 96 L. T. 425—Swinfen Eady, J.

Sum Directed to be Set Apart out of Residue—Devolution—Gift Over of Residue as a Whole.—If the will of a testator shews an intention that the entirety of his residue should go over as a whole, a sum directed to be set apart out of residue will, on the failure of the trusts affecting it, fall back into and follow the destination of the remainder of the residue, and will not devolve upon the next-of-kin of the testator. Skrymsher v. Northcote (1 Swanst. 566; 1 Wils. C.C. 248) observed upon. Parker, In re; Stephenson v. Parker, 70 L. J. Ch. 170; [1901] 1 Ch. 408; 84 L. T. 116; 49 W. R. 215—Farwell, J.

Advance—Hotchpot—Interest—Rate.—A testator gave annuities to his wife and his residue in trust for two of his three sons and the persons entitled under the marriage settlement of the third, in thirds, and declared that, as he had settled 4,000*l.*, and covenanted to settle further 6,000*l.* within six months of his death on the trusts of the marriage settlement of the married son, the sum of 10,000*l.* should on payment of the 6,000*l.* be brought into hotchpot. The 6,000*l.* was paid within six months of his death. Payments were made from time to time in respect of the shares of the two unadvanced sons, as between whom and the testator's trustees part was regarded as capital and part as income.—Held, on the distribution of the money which had been set apart to answer the wife's annuities, that as to the advanced son, 4,000*l.* and 6,000*l.* must be brought into hotchpot with interest from the testator's death and date of payment respectively; and as to the two unadvanced sons, the payments made to them must be accounted for (without distinction between capital and interest) with interest from the respective dates of payment. Rees, In re; Rees v. George (50 L. J. Ch. 328; 17 Ch. D. 701), Dallmeyer, In re; Dallmeyer v. Dallmeyer (65 L. J. Ch. 201; [1896] 1 Ch. 372), and Lambert, In re; Moore v. Middleton (66 L. J. Held, also, that the rate of interest must be 3 per cent. Hargreaves, In re; Hargreaves v. Hargreaves (86 L. T. 43), dissented from. Ib.

Gift of Income of Residue to Children for Life Subject to Annuity to Widow—Death of Widow—Advances—Hotchpot—Interest on Advance.—A testator by his will and codicil dated May 5, 1880, and July 12, 1882, respectively, after giving certain legacies, devised and bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees upon trust to pay out of the income thereof the annual sum of 2,000*l.* to his widow during her life, and subject thereto to divide the residuary estate into as many shares as there should be children living at his death, and to pay the annual income of such shares to his children; and then upon trusts therein expressed. The testator provided that, as to certain advances already made to some of his children, and as to any future advances to his children exceeding at any one time the sum of 1,000*l.*, these advances should be treated as capital of the original shares, and be brought into hotchpot and accounted for accordingly. The testator died on July 3, 1887, and left surviving him six children; of whom three had received advances and three had not. The widow died in March, 1900.—Held, that, in bringing the advances into hotchpot for the purpose of determining the respective shares of the six children, the shares of the advanced children must respectively be debited with 4 per cent. on the amount of their respective advances from the testator's death down to the time when the estate ought, or should be deemed, to have been divided. Hargreaves, In re; Hargreaves v. Hargreaves, 86 L. T. 43—Joyce, J.

Direction to Divide Residue among Children on Death of Life-renter, and subsequent Direction to Retain Shares till Death of another Person—Accumulations—Repugnancy.—A testator in his settlement directed his trustees, on the expiry of a life-rent, to divide his estate among the children of his brothers and sisters; further, by a codicil, he directed his trustees to retain in their own hands the shares destined to the children of his sisters, and to pay to them neither the capital thereof nor the revenues (which meantime were to be accumulated) so long as their fathers should be alive. On the expiry of the life-rent, more than twenty-one years after the death of the testator.—Held, by a majority of the whole Court (dis. Lord Young and Lord Moncreiff), that the sisters' children had an unqualified and indefeasible right of fee in their shares, and were entitled to demand immediate payment thereof, notwithstanding that their fathers were still alive. Yuill's Trustees v. Thomson, 4 F. 815—Ct. of Sess.

Gift of Residue with an Exception—Failure of Exception—Passing by Residuary Gift.—A testator gave his residuary estate to his wife absolutely, except as to a sum of 1,000*l.*, in which he gave her a life interest, with remainder as to 500*l.* to "my nephew James Jupp," and as to the other 500*l.* to certain other nieces and nephews. It appeared from the evidence that the testator had, so far as was known, no nephew named James Jupp, and though he had a brother of that name the brother had predeceased him.—Held, that, the gift to James Jupp failing, the beneficiaries of the wife were entitled to the 500*l.* bequeathed to him, subject to a liability to refund it should a nephew of the testator bearing that name establish a claim. Jupp, In re; Gladman v. Jupp, 87 L. T. 739—Joyce, J.

Exception.—The doctrine of Blight v. Harcourt (52 L. J. Ch. 672; 23 Ch. D. 218)—namely, that where specific property is expressly excepted from a residuary bequest for the purpose of bequeathing it to a particular legatee, the property so excepted will, if the particular bequest fails to take effect, fall back into the residue—does not apply where the particular legatee dies in the lifetime of the testator, who then makes a codicil referring to such legatee's death and confirming his will containing the exception. Fraser, In re; Lowther v. Fraser, 73 L. J. Ch. 481; [1904] 1 Ch. 726; 91 L. T. 48; 52 W. R. 516; 20 T. L. R. 414—C.A.

Administration—Insufficient Personalty for Debts, &c.—Specific Bequest—Secret Trust.—Where residuary personalty has been given by will, and a specific part of it is found in the hands of the residuary legatee by a secret memorandum of trust not executed as a will, the property comprised in the memorandum does not pass by way of specific bequest, but dehors the will, and must therefore bear its proportion of the debts of the testator rateably with the other residue. Maddock, In re; Llewellyn v. Washington, 70 L. J. Ch. 660; [1901] 2 Ch. 372; 85 L. T. 12; 50 W. R. 54—Kekewich, J.

Appointment of Executors—Direction for Sale and Division of Household Property, including Leasehold House—Residuary Personal Estate.]

—A testatrix by her will appointed executors and trustees, and, after giving certain specific legacies, continued: "With the exception of the above legacies, I direct that the remainder of my household property, including house in W., should be sold, and, after paying funeral, testamentary expenses, and debts, be equally divided" as therein mentioned. The testatrix's personal estate comprised two leasehold houses, shares, money on deposit at the bank, and household furniture:—Held, that under the above bequest the entire residue of the testatrix's personal estate passed. Johnson, In re; Sandy v. Reilly, 92 L. T. 357—Farwell, J.

Gift of Residue to Executors—Implied Trust for Next-of-Kin—Secret Trust—Parol Evidence—Admissibility.]

—A testator by his will bequeathed to his executors legacies for their trouble in administering his estate, and disposed of the residue as follows: "I bequeath all the residue of my property of every kind to my executors, to apply the same as they shall think fit, and I appoint as my executors A. and B." The testator's next-of-kin were his brother T. and the ten children of his late brother C. After the execution of the will one of the executors asked the testator how he would like the residue spent. The testator replied that he would like the six younger children of his late brother C. to get it, and that he did not wish the elder children of C. to get any, and that he would not like his brother T. to get a penny. The six younger children of C. claimed that the above conversation created a secret trust of the residue in their favour, to the exclusion of the rest of the next-of-kin:—Held, that, upon the face of the will, the executors did not take beneficially, but upon an implied trust for the next-of-kin; that such a trust could not be varied by a conversation between the testator and one of the executors after the execution of the will, and that the doctrine of secret trust had no application to the facts of the case. Balfe v. Halpenny, [1904] 1 Ir. R. 486—Barton, J.

Receipt of Residuary Estate by Testatrix—Payment into Bank—Exercise of Control over Fund.]

—By a codicil to her will a testatrix devised and bequeathed "all monies and property devolving upon or receivable by me under the will of W." to A and B upon trust to pay certain legacies. During her lifetime the testatrix received a sum of 693*l.* in respect of the residuary estate of W., and thereupon opened an account with a bank and lodged the money to her own credit. She from time to time drew out sums of money for the payment of the testamentary expenses of W., for making gifts to persons (some of whom were beneficiaries under the trust in her codicil), and for other purposes of her own. Previous to this lodgment of 693*l.* the testatrix had no banking account. After the payments to her there remained a balance to her credit of 149*l.* Subsequently a further sum of 151*l.* was received by the testatrix in respect of the residuary estate of W., and this was lodged by her in the bank, making in all the sum of 300*l.*, which remained intact to the credit of her account at the date of her death:—Held, that the bequest of A and B was admeasured only as regards money paid out of the bank to the testatrix, but that as regards the sum of 300*l.* remaining intact at her death, to the credit of her account there was no ademption, and that the same passed under the bequest in her codicil. Toole v. Hamilton, [1901] 1 Ir. R. 383—M.R.

(jj) Restraint on Anticipation.

Married Woman—Rule against Perpetuities—Severance of Class.]

—A restraint on anticipation, imposed by a general clause in a will upon all the shares of daughters of the testator's children, is good as to the shares of those members of the class who are born in the testator's lifetime, though void as to the shares of those born afterwards. Herbert v. Webster (49 L. J. Ch. 620; 15 Ch. D. 610) followed. Michael's Trusts, In re (46 L. J. Ch. 651), and Ridley, In re (48 L. J. Ch. 563; 11 Ch. D. 645), not followed. Ferneley's Trusts, In re, 71 L. J. Ch. 422; [1902] 1 Ch. 543; 86 L. T. 413; 50 W. R. 346—Swinfen Eady, J.

—Remoteness—Duration of Restraint.]—A testator by his will gave his residuary estate to his wife, two daughters, and a son for life, the interests of the wife and daughters to be without power of anticipation, and after the death of the survivor he gave his estate to the then and future children of his son in equal proportions. By a codicil the testator declared that the bequests to any female taking any beneficial interest under his will should be for her separate use, but so that she might not anticipate any part of the property to which she might become entitled; and he also declared the receipt of any female taking an interest under his will should be a good and sufficient discharge to his trustees for the money after the same should have actually accrued due. The survivor of the wife, daughters, and son died in January, 1902. The son left five children living at his death, of whom two were married women:—Held (following Herbert v. Webster, 15 Ch. D. 610), that the restraint on anticipation was valid, not being void for remoteness, but that it only lasted during the existence of the prior life interests both as to income and corpus, and determined when the property fell into possession in January, 1902. Millward, In re; Steedman v. Hobday, 87 L. T. 476—Joyce, J. And see col. 988.

(kk) Satisfaction.

Bequest of Legacies to Several Persons of Sums Equal to Debts Secured by Promissory Notes—

Time for Payment of Legacies.]

—Pecuniary legacies, which by the express terms of the will were not payable until a period of four years after testator's decease, are not a satisfaction for debts of equal amount secured to the legatees by a negotiable instrument made by the testator. Roberts, In re; Roberts v. Parry, 50 W. R. 469—Byrne, J.

Legacy to Creditor—Debt Bearing Interest—

Creditor also Executrix.]

—A testatrix bequeathed to her executrix a legacy of 400*l.* No time was specified for the payment of this legacy, and no mention was made of interest. The will contained no direction to pay debts. At the time of her death the testatrix was indebted to her executrix in the sum of 150*l.*, payable on demand. The debt bore interest at 5 per cent.

per annum, payable half-yearly:—Held, that the debt was satisfied by the legacy. Rattenberry, In re; Ray v. Grant, 75 L. J. Ch. 304; [1906] 1 Ch. 667; 94 L. T. 475; 54 W. R. 311; 22 T. L. R. 249—Swinfen Eady, J.

Abatement—Legacy in Satisfaction of Debt—Forgiveness of Debt—Specific Legacy.]

—A legacy given to a creditor in satisfaction of the testator's debt to him abates with the general legacies in case of insufficiency of assets. A debt forgiven by a will is a specific legacy, and does not abate with the general legacies. Wedmore, In re; Wedmore v. Wedmore, 76 L. J. Ch. 486; [1907] 2 Ch. 277; 97 L. T. 26; 23 T. L. R. 547—Kekewich, J.

Father and Child—Absolute Legacy—Settled Legacy—Subsequent Settlement on Legatee's Marriage.]

—A father bequeathed a legacy of 20,000*l.* to his daughter, a spinster—as to 5,000*l.* to her absolutely and as to 15,000*l.* upon trust for her for life with remainder to her children, and in default of children upon trust for her next-of-kin. Subsequently, upon her marriage, he settled a sum of about 7,000*l.* upon trusts in favour of her and her children, with ultimate trusts in default of children, not corresponding with the trusts of the settled legacy:—Held, that the marriage settlement fund must be taken in satisfaction pro tanto of the settled portion of the legacy, and that the daughter was entitled to the 5,000*l.* absolute legacy without diminution. Furness, In re; Furness v. Stalkartt, 70 L. J. Ch. 680; [1901] 2 Ch. 346; 84 L. T. 680—Joyce, J.

Particular Purpose—Satisfaction by Gift.]

A testator bequeathed "To the trustees of the endowment fund" of a hospital 10,000*l.* After the date of his will he sent a cheque for 10,000*l.* to the chairman of the trustees of the hospital. Shortly before sending the money the testator had written to the chairman, "I am desirous of redeeming a promise which I think I made some time ago, viz., to advance a sum of 10,000*l.* (ten thousand pounds) in addition to the sum I have already advanced to endow the hospital in which I am interested at Stourbridge." There was also some evidence that the testator regarded the latter gift to have been made in satisfaction of the legacy:—Held, that the legacy was a legacy for a particular purpose, and was adeemed by the gift of the same amount in the testator's lifetime. Corbett, In re; Corbett v. Cobham (Viscount), 72 L. J. Ch. 775; [1903] 2 Ch. 326; 88 L. T. 591; 52 W. R. 74—Farwell, J. And see ADEMPITION, col. 2811.

Secret Trust.]—See PRECATORY TRUST, col. 2881.

Chattels to go with Mansion-house—Proviso that Chattels not to Vest Absolutely in Tenant in Tail until Twenty-one—Gift Over.]—Where there is a strict settlement and chattels are directed to go with the mansion-house, and there is also a proviso that the chattels are not to vest absolutely until some tenant in tail attains twenty-one, then if a tenant in tail comes into existence and dies under twenty-one the chattels are carried over to the persons entitled to the mansion-house for the time being until some tenant in tail becomes absolutely entitled to them. Dayrell, In re; Hastie v. Dayrell, 73 L. J. Ch. 795; [1904] 2 Ch. 496; 91 L. T. 373—Joyce, J.

Altering Words in Will—"Of" Read for "Or."]—The word "or" will be read "of" in order to effectuate the obvious intention of the testator. Id.

Hotchpot Clause.]—A testator directed his executors and trustees to convert his whole estate into money, and to stand possessed of the clear residue in trust for his two children in equal shares. In the case of his son, he had covenanted with the trustees of the son's marriage settlement that his executors would pay to them 10,000*l.* to be held upon trust for the son for life, with remainder to the son's wife for life, with remainder as to the capital for the children of the marriage, and in case of there being no child the capital was to be in trust for the testator absolutely. By a hotchpot clause in the will, any sum given "to or with any child" on his or her marriage was to be taken in or towards satisfaction of the share of such child, and brought into hotchpot. The son died without issue:—Held, that the testator's trustees must specifically appropriate and allot to the son's share under the will the testator's contingent reversionary interest in the 10,000*l.*, not under the hotchpot clause, but under the directions in the earlier part of the will, as the only way to effect an equal division as directed between the son and the daughter. Wheeler v. Humphreys, 67 L. J. Ch. 499; [1898] A.C. 506; 78 L. T. 799; 47 W. R. 17—H.L. (E.)

Successive Limitations—Life Estates and Estates Tail.]—By his will a testator made the following gifts: "I devise all my real estate to my godson P. C. H. for his life with remainder to his first and other sons successively in tail, with remainder to the eldest and every other son of the said Sir C. H. for life with remainder to the first and other sons of such sons of Sir C. H. in tail, with remainder to my own right heirs." The testator died in 1859. Sir C. H. had several sons, of whom P. C. H. was the second and Sir J. W. H. the eldest. P. C. H. died in 1902 without ever having been married. Sir J. W. H. thereupon became entitled to the estates for his life. He had three sons. C. J. H., the eldest son of Sir J. W. H., had attained the age of twenty-one years and had disentailed, or purported to disentail, his father joining in the deed, and, by virtue of that deed and of a transfer of the life interest of his father, he now claimed to be entitled in fee-simple in possession to the hereditaments comprised in the testator's will, and petitioned for a declaration accordingly:—Held, that the gift in remainder to the eldest and every other son of Sir C. H. for life, being expressed to be to the eldest and other sons, imported a succession; that accordingly, applying the reasoning of Jewis d. Ormond v. Waters (6 East, 336), and Craddock v. Craddock (4 Jur. N.S. 626), the eldest and every other son of Sir C. H. took successive life estates; that the remainder to the first and other sons of such sons of Sir C. H. in tail also imported succession, and that such first and other sons took successive estates tail in remainder one after the other; but that the limitations did not enable the first and other sons of the eldest son of Sir C. H. to take until after the death of all the tenants for life. Honywood v. Honywood, 89 L. T. 378—C.A.

Bequest of Chattels in Trust for Person in "actual possession" of Settled Estate—Bequest of Trust Funds in Trust for Person in Possession of Settled Estate—Death of First Tenant in Tail in Remainder—Vesting.]—Real estate was devised (in the events which had happened) upon trust for the plaintiff for life, and subject thereto upon trust for her first or other sons successively according to seniority in tail. The testator bequeathed his pictures, plate, and other chattels to the trustees upon trust to go along with and be used and enjoyed so far as the rules of law and equity would permit, by the person who should for the time being be in actual possession or entitled to the receipt of the rents and profits of the settled land. He further bequeathed his residuary personalty and a legacy of 70,000*l.* to the trustees upon trust to pay or apply the annual income thereof to or for the benefit of the person for the time being entitled to the possession or receipt of the rents of the settled land, and otherwise to hold the same upon such trusts that the annual income thereof should as far as possible be enjoyed in like manner as if it had formed part of the rents and profits of the settled land, it being the testator's intention that the said income should assist in keeping up and be in augmentation of the rents and profits of the settled land. The plaintiff had three sons. The eldest, the first tenant in tail in remainder, died in her lifetime, a bachelor and intestate, and without having executed a disentailing assurance:—Held, first, following Scarsdale (Lord) v. Curzon (29 L. J. Ch. 249; 1 J. & H. 40) and Angerstein In re; Angerstein v. Angerstein (65 L. J. Ch. 57; [1895] 2 Ch. 883), that the chattels did not vest absolutely in the deceased tenant in tail in remainder, as he never came into "actual possession" of the rents and profits; and secondly, that there was no expression of intention in the will sufficient to oust the application of the general rule established by Moley v. Burnell (1 Bro. C.C. 274; 4 Bro. P.C. 319) and Scarsdale (Lord) v. Curzon (supra); that accordingly the residue and legacy became absolutely vested in the first tenant in tail in remainder at birth; and that his legal personal representative was now entitled to them, subject to the plaintiff's interest therein. Fothergill's Estate, In re; Price-Fothergill v. Price, 72 L. J. Ch. 164; [1903] 1 Ch. 149; 87 L. T. 677; 51 W. R. 203—Swinfen Eady, J.

Trust for Sale and Conversion—Postponement—Wasting Security—Mixing Royalties—Notional Conversion—Apportionment between Tenant for Life and Remainderman—Rate of Interest to Tenant for Life—Income on Invested Surplus.]—Where wasting property settled by a will has been retained by the trustees under a power to postpone conversion, the tenant for life of such property will now only be entitled to interest at the rate of 3 per cent. upon the estimated value thereof at the death of the testator. The surplus income from the retained investment must be invested as capital for the remainderman, and the income paid to the tenant for life.

Ch. 562; [1900] 2 Ch. 107) followed. Woods, In re; Gabellini v. Woods, 73 L. J. Ch. 204; [1904] 2 Ch. 4; 90 L. T. 8—Kekewich, J.

Covenant to Settle Sum of Money—Gift by Will.]—Where a settlor covenanted to settle a sum of money on the usual trusts for his daughter, her husband, and their children, the daughter taking the first life interest, and he subsequently bequeathed to his daughter a third share of his residuary personalty absolutely, this gift of residue was held to be a satisfaction of his daughter's life interest in the sum covenanted to be settled. Blundell, In re; Blundell v. Blundell, 75 L. J. Ch. 561; [1906] 2 Ch. 222; 94 L. T. 818; 22 T. T. R. 570—Swinfen Eady, J.

—After-acquired Property Clause—Double Portions—Election—Persons Derivatively Entitled.]—Although the gift of residue to the settlor's daughter was bound by her covenant to settle after-acquired property and went upon similar trusts to those of the settled fund, the interests of the children of the marriage in the sum covenanted to be settled were held not satisfied by the bequest because they took no interest under the settlor's will, but were only derivatively entitled. Id.

Covenant on Marriage of Daughter to Pay Share of Estate to Trustees—Subsequent Will Confirming Covenant—Election by Life Tenant against Will—Satisfaction of Ulterior Interest—Differences in Limitation—Acceleration of Subsequent Interests.]—V. on the marriage of his daughter covenanted with the trustees of her settlement that his heirs, executors, and administrators would, within twelve calendar months after his decease or that of his wife, pay to them a share (which ultimately became one-sixth), ascertained by the number of his children, of his real and personal estate upon trusts for his daughter for life for her separate use without power of anticipation, then to her husband J. H. for life, and subject to a joint power of appointment among their issue, and in default of such appointment as the survivor should appoint, to the children of the marriage at twenty-one or marriage. The settlement contained an agreement and declaration that any share passing to the daughter under her father's will should, if she elected to claim under the will, be a satisfaction of the covenant. The father subsequently made a will, whereby he confirmed the covenant in the settlement, and, after a trust for payment of his debts, directed his trustees to stand possessed of an equal share of his residuary estate upon trust for his daughter for life, and then for her children at twenty-one or marriage, in default of children for any husband of his daughter for life and subject thereto such share to fall into residue. The daughter having elected against the will, the question arose whether her husband and children could claim under the will and as to their rights having regard to the provisions of the settlement and will:—Held, following a dictum of Bacon, V.C., in Bennett v. Houldsworth (40 L. J. Ch. 646; 6 Ch. D. 671), that the liability under the covenant in the settlement was not a debt within the meaning of Chichester v. Coventry (36 L. J. Ch. 673; L. R. 2 H.L. 71) to be deducted before ascertaining the testator's residue. That on the construction of the agreement and declaration in the settlement there was no satisfaction of the covenant. That having regard to the recital by the testator of his covenant in his daughter's marriage settlement and its confirmation by his will, and to the substantial distinctions between the limitations in the settlement and will, an intention was manifested that the covenant should not be abrogated by the will, and that the testator intended to perform it, and that there was no satisfaction as regards any of the parties claiming under the settlement, the children of the daughter not being put to their election. Tussaud's Estate, In re; Tussaud v. Tussaud (47 L. J. Ch. 849; 9 Ch. D. 363), followed. Vernon, In re; Garland v. Shaw, 95 L. T. 48—Kekewich, J.

Per CURIAM.—The result of the daughter not claiming under the will was not to accelerate the interests of those claiming in remainder as if she had been an attesting witness to the will, and as before the event she could not be regarded as leaving or not leaving children there was held to be an intestacy as regards her life interest under the will. Id. And see SETTLEMENT, col. 2261.

(mm) Shifting Clause.

Exception of Eldest Son Entitled to other Estates.—Testator devised his real estates to the use of his nephew for life, with remainder to all and every the son and sons of the nephew born in the testator's lifetime, or in due time afterwards ("other than and except an eldest or only son for the time being entitled to the possession or to the receipt of the rents issues and profits of certain estates" situate at C. "after the decease" of the nephew, "as tenant for life or any greater estate or interest whatsoever"), severally and successively in remainder, one after another for their respective lives. The nephew's eldest son, who was tenant in tail of the C. estates in remainder expectant on the death of his father, joined with his father in disentailing them. They were sold, and the proceeds of sale settled upon trusts, in which the eldest son took some benefit. He subsequently became bankrupt, and his interest in the proceeds was sold:—Held, that on the nephew's death his eldest son was not within the exception, and was entitled to the first life interest, after his father's death, in the estates devised by the testator's will. Law Union and Crown Insurance Co. v. Hill, 71 L. J. Ch. 602; [1902] A.C. 263; 86 L. T. 773—H.L. (E.)

(nn) Substitutional Gift.

Children—Gift over "failing such issue"—Death "leaving no issue"—Vested Interest.—Testator gave his estate to trustees on trust to sell and pay the income to his widow for life, and after her death directed that his estate should be transferred to his younger daughter, but if she should be then dead, then to any child or children of his younger daughter, and "failing such issue" then to his elder daughter, but if she should be then dead then to any child or children of his elder daughter; but should his two daughters be then both dead "leaving no issue" then, in case of each or either of them leaving a husband surviving, the testator's estate was to be transferred to their husbands or the survivor of such husbands. The widow was living. The younger daughter was living and had three children. The elder daughter was dead leaving a husband and child, who brought this action for administration:—Held, that on the true construction of the will the children of the younger daughter took vested substitutional interests at birth not liable to be divested by their deaths in such daughter's lifetime, and that, as either the younger daughter or her children must take absolutely in remainder on the widow's death, the plaintiffs had no interest to maintain the action. Treharne v. Layton (44 L. J. Q.B. 202; L. R. 10 Q.B. 459) followed and applied. Bradbury, In re; Wing v. Bradbury, 73 L. J. Ch. 591; 90 L. T. 824—C.A.

— Provision for Grandchildren in Case any Child "shall" Die—Child Dead at Date of Will, Leaving Children.—A testator gave the residue of his estate "in trust for all or any of my children who shall be living at my death, and being a son or sons attain the age of twenty-one years, or being a daughter or daughters attain that age or marry under that age, and if more than one in equal shares, provided that in case any one or more of my children shall predecease me leaving any child or children living at my death, then such child or children of any deceased child shall take the share which his, her, or their parent would have taken if such parent were living, and over the age of twenty-one at my decease." One of the sons, referred to in the will as "my deceased son," was dead at the date of the will, and left children:—Held, that the children of the deceased son were not entitled to share in the residue. Gorringe v. Mahlstedt, 76 L. J. Ch. 527; [1907] A.C. 225; 97 L. T. 111—H.L. (E.) — Die Without "leaving" Issue.—A testator gave his residuary personal estate upon trust for his two daughters in equal shares during their respective lives, with remainder to their children as they should appoint, and in case either should "die without leaving lawful issue or being such none of such issue shall live to attain the age of 21 years," then he gave the share of his daughter so dying to her surviving sister; and in case both should "die without leaving lawful issue as aforesaid," then he gave his said estate to all his nephews and nieces in equal shares. One daughter died, after the death of the testator, unmarried; the other, having married, had one child, a son, who had now attained twenty-one:—Held, that according to the rule laid down in Maitland v. Chalie (6 Madd. 243), the words "die without leaving" must be read "die without having" lawful issue, and that the son of the married daughter was therefore entitled, to the exclusion of such nephews and nieces as were before the Court. Ball, In re; Slattery v. Ball (58 L. J. Ch. 232; 40 Ch. D. 11), explained. Barkworth v. Barkworth, 75 L. J. Ch. 754—Joyce, J.

"Instead of"—Revocation—Whether Total or Partial only—Substitutionary Bequest.]—A trust declared by codicil of residuary personal estate, and expressed to be "instead of" an absolute bequest thereof by will to a legatee, who was the first tenant for life under the trust, construed, not as revoking the bequest altogether, but only as modifying the nature of the legatee's enjoyment to the extent shewn by the codicil, so that, upon failure of the trust, the original absolute bequest took effect. Wilcock, In re; Kay v. Dewhirst, 67 L. J. Ch. 154; [1898] 1 Ch. 95—Romer, J.

Gift out of Proceeds "on any sale"—Repugnancy.]—An absolute gift of property in a will was followed by a direction that, on any sale by the beneficiary, sums were to be paid to other persons out of the proceeds of such sale:—Held, that the direction was repugnant and void. Elliott, In re; Kelly v. Elliott, 65 L. J. Ch. 753; [1896] 2 Ch. 353—O'Harty, J.

On Death Leaving Issue—Period of Vesting.]—Testator directed that subject to the payment of the income of the proceeds of the conversion of his residuary real and personal estate to his wife during widowhood, and of an annuity to her on re-marriage, and subject also to the maintenance of his children until the youngest living should attain twenty-one, or being a daughter attain that age or marry, the trust fund and the income thereof, and all accumulations of income, should be held "in trust for all my children who being a son or sons shall attain the age of 21 years or being a daughter or daughters shall attain that age or marry to whom I give and bequeath my residuary real and personal estate in equal shares. I direct that if any of my children shall die leaving issue such issue shall take his or her deceased parent's share equally as tenants in common." The testator died, leaving surviving him his wife and three children. Two of the children had attained twenty-one, one of them having attained that age at the date of the will:—Held, that the divesting clause in the event of death leaving issue referred to the death at any time of a child of the testator, and might take effect upon the death of a child not only during the lifetime of the widow, but also after her death. O'Mahony v. Burdett (44 L. J. Ch. 56n.; L. R. 7 H.L. 388) followed. Schnadhorst, In re; Sandkuhl v. Schnadhorst, 71 L. J. Ch. 454; [1902] 2 Ch. 234; 86 L. T. (426; 50 W. R. 485)—C.A.

Death "before becoming entitled" to a Share—Entitled in "Possession" or in "Interest."]—In a substitutional gift in a will "in the event of either of my grandchildren dying before becoming entitled to any share of my estate,"—Held, upon the construction of the will, without reference to any authorities, that "becoming entitled" meant becoming entitled in possession, not becoming entitled in interest. Maunder, In re; Maunder v. Maunder, 72 L. J. Ch. 367; [1903] 1 Ch. 451; 88 L. T. 280; 51 W. R. 549—C.A.

Revocation by Codicil—Gift by Implication.]—By his will dated October 19, 1867, M. devised the lands of N. to trustees upon trust to the use of his son D. M. and his heirs upon his attaining the age of twenty-six, and in the meantime, and until his said son should attain that age, to apply the rents and profits for his maintenance. The will also contained a power of advancement. The will then provided that in case D. M. should die before he attained twenty-six, then from and immediately after his death to the use of the testator's eldest son W. M., and the testator appointed his daughter residuary legatee and devisee. By a codicil dated July 15, 1868, the testator revoked all the gifts in his will to D. M. and in lieu thereof gave him a rentcharge charged upon all the testator's real estate in the county of D., and the testator declared the same to be in full substitution of all absolute and reversionary interests to which his said son or his heirs would or might have been entitled under his said will, which the testator thereby confirmed in all respects, save in so far and as to such parts thereof as were thereby revoked. The testator died on February 8, 1899. At the date of the codicil D. M. was under twenty-six, but he had attained that age at the date of the testator's death:—Held, that W. M. did not take any interest in the lands of N., but that the same passed under the residuary clause in the will. M'Kay v. M'Kay, [1901] 1 Ir. R. 109—C.A.

Fideicommissum.]—A testator bequeathed the residue of his property to his two sons; but in the event of either of them dying before the other without legitimate issue his share was to become the property of the other:—Held, that the event contemplated was not the death of one of the sons in the testator's lifetime, but death at any time; and that the sons were entitled equally, but "subject to a fideicommissum in the events and in favour of the objects mentioned in the clause of substitution." Duffill v. Duffill, 72 L. J. P.C. 97; [1903] A.C. 491; 89 L. T. 82—P.C.

Gift of Real and Personal Estate to Son for Life—Remainder to his Children "or their heirs"—Substitutional or Alternative.]—The testator, by his will dated in 1877, devised and bequeathed unto his wife absolutely all his real and personal estate, and, at the death of his said wife to his two sons J. and H. to be divided equally between them, and at their death their or his portions or portion if married to their or his child or children or their heirs. The testator died in 1890; his wife had died in 1879. J. died in 1895; he had two children—M. G., now living, and L. L., who died in 1888. L. L. had one child S., born in 1888 and now living:—Held, that S. was not entitled under the will, and that accordingly M. G. was absolutely entitled to the share in which J. had a life estate. Ibbetson, In re; Ibbetson v. Ibbetson, 88 L. T. 461—Joyce, J.

Gift to Issue of Deceased Brothers and Sisters—Sister Dead at Date of Will Leaving Issue—Substitutional Gift.]—A testator gave the residue of his estate upon trust for his brothers and sisters. The share of one brother was directed to be settled, and this clause was immediately followed by a proviso that "if any of my other brothers or sisters shall die in my lifetime leaving issue any of whom shall be living at my death, such issue so living shall take equally amongst themselves if more than one the share which such other brother or sister would have taken if then living":—Held, that the gift to issue was substitutional, and that the children of a sister who was dead at the date of the will were not entitled to share in the residuary. Offiler, In re; Offiler v. Offiler, 38 L. T. 758—Buckley, J.

(oo) Survivorship.

"Surviving."—A testator gave on trust for each of his children certain real and leasehold property for life, and then for such child's children or grandchildren, if there were no children then living; and in case any of his children should die, childless, the testator directed that such child's share should go over to his or her "then surviving brothers and sisters" in equal shares for life, and after them to their children:—Held, that the words "then surviving" must be construed literally, and that the children of a predeceased child were not entitled to share. Inderwick v. Tatchell, 72 L. J. Ch. 893; [1903] A.C. 120; 88 L. T. 399—H.L. (E.)

There is no general rule as to the construction of the word "survivors" or "surviving" in the terms of the third proposition laid down by KAY, J., in Bowman, In re; Lay, In re; Whytehead v. Boulton (41 Ch. D. 525, 531)—namely, that the children of a predeceased tenant for life "participate, although there is no general gift over, where the limitations are to A, B, and C, equally for their respective lives, and after the death of any to his children, and if any die without children to the surviving tenants for life and their respective children, in the same manner as their original shares." Harrison v. Harrison (70 L. J. Ch. 551; [1901] 2 Ch. 136) approved. Inderwick v. Tatchell; Inderwick v. Linder; Inderwick v. Inderwick, 71 L. J. Ch. 1; [1901] 2 Ch. 738; 85 L. T. 432; 50 W. R. 100—C.A.

"Survivors"—Life Estate—Absolute Gift—Restriction as to Mode of Enjoyment—Settlement.]—A testator bequeathed to each of his four unmarried daughters 10,000*l.* New 3½ per cent. Government Stock to be paid on marriage; and 20,000*l.* Old 3½ per cent. Government Stock to be settled on marriage strictly on each daughter, and on her demise on her lawful issue; and in case any of his four daughters should die without leaving lawful issue who should attain the age of twenty-one or get married, then her 20,000*l.* Old 3½ per cent. Stock was to be divided between the survivors of his four daughters. The longest liver of the four daughters was a widow aged eighty-one without children. On her marriage a settlement was executed, the ultimate limitation of which was to the persons who, by virtue of the will, should be entitled to the same:—Held, that, in the events which had happened, she was absolutely entitled to the 20,000*l.* Stock bequeathed by her father's will and put in settlement on her marriage. Olphert v. Olphert, [1903] 1 Ir. R. 826—M.R.

Survivor—Other—Gift Over—Context.]—By his will a testator gave legacies in trust for his three illegitimate children, 400*l.* for T., 300*l.* for R., and 400*l.* for E., a married woman, for her separate use. The will then provided as follows: "And in case of the decease of any or either of them, the said T., R., and E., without issue, or leaving issue who shall not live to attain his, her, or their age of twenty-one years, I order and direct that the said several and respective sum and sums of money so hereby left and bequeathed to and for them, the said T., R., and E., shall go and be equally divided between the survivors and survivor of them, for and during the term of their natural lives, and to their issue after their respective deaths who shall live to attain the age of twenty-one years." There was no gift over in the event of all the three legatees dying without issue. The will appointed a brother of the testator (who predeceased him) residuary legatee. R., who was unmarried, predeceased the testator. A suit was brought for the administration of testator's estate, and the assets were lodged in Court, and proved insufficient to pay the legacies, which had to abate rateably. E. died in 1865, leaving children, all of whom attained twenty-one. T. died in 1900 unmarried. At the date of T.'s death the funds in Court represented a moiety of the legacy of 300*l.* given to R., with a bequest over, and the legacy of 400*l.* originally bequeathed to T. with a gift over. The children of E. applied for payment out of the funds in Court:—Held, on the construction of the will, that the children of E. took no interest in the funds in Court, in which T. had a life interest, because their mother did not survive him, and that the word "survivor" must be read in its ordinary signification, and not as meaning "other," with the result that there was an intestacy as regards these funds. Garland v. Smyth, [1904] 1 Ir. R. 35—C.A.

"Surviving"—Tenants for Life—Settled Shares—Stirpital Survivorship.]—A testatrix gave a life interest in a one-third share of a money fund to each of her three daughters, M., C., and E., with remainder to the children of each tenant for life surviving their mother and attaining twenty-one, with a gift over on the death of any tenant for life without leaving such children to the "surviving" tenants for life for their lives, and then to the children of the "said surviving" tenants for life in like manner as their original shares were given, with an ultimate gift over on the failure of issue of all the tenants for life. E. survived her sisters, and died without leaving children. At her death there were living two of M.'s children who had attained twenty-one, but no children of C., although she had left two children surviving her, both of whom had attained twenty-one before their death:—Held, adopting the reasoning of LORD SELBORNE in White v. Littlewood (42 L. J. Ch. 275; L. R. 8 Ch. 70), and of SIR GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., and COTTON, L. J., in Lucena v. Lucena (47 L. J. Ch. 203; 7 Ch. D. 255), that the word "surviving" must be construed neither in its strict sense, nor as meaning "others," but as meaning "surviving by issue," and that consequently M.'s children were alone entitled to the accruing share. O'Brien v. O'Brien ([1896] 2 Ir. R. 459) not followed. Bilham, In re; Buchanan v. Hill, 70 L. J. Ch. 518; [1901] 2 Ch. 169; 84 L. T. 499; 49 W. R. 483—Joyce, J.

Gift of Defeasible Interest to Daughter A.—

Devise and Bequest to "my two nieces" Equally—Death Leaving no Issue—Share to the "Survivor."—A testator devised certain freeholds and bequeathed shares, stock, and moneys to his daughter L. D., and, in case she should happen to die leaving no issue (which event happened), he bequeathed the whole of his real and personal estate to his two nieces H. J. and R. A., their heirs and assigns, equally to be divided between them share and share alike for their separate use, "and, in case either of my said two nieces shall happen to die leaving no issue," he directed that "the part or share of her so dying shall go to the survivor." L. D. died leaving no issue, having outlived both nieces, of whom H. J. had died leaving issue in the lifetime of R. A., who, however, left no issue. The question being whether the moiety of R. A. passed on her death to the other niece, H. J., under the will, went as on an intestacy, or was not divested, — Held, that the use of the word "survivor" imported the contingency of there being a survivor into the gift to R. A., and that, there being no survivor, although she died without leaving issue, her moiety was not forfeited, but the two nieces took absolutely. Deacon's Trusts, In re; Deacon v. Deacon, 95 L. T. 701—Kekewich, J.

Cross-remainders by Implication—"Survivor or survivors," when to be construed "other or others."—A gift of property to take effect "after the death of my son C. and my daughters E. and S. A.," as to one-third thereof to the children of C., another third to the children of E., and the remaining third to the children of S. A., must not be construed to mean upon their respective deaths or after the decease of each of them, according to the rule referred to in Hutchinson's Trusts, In re (21 Ch. D. 811), when the application of the rule (having regard to the context of the will) might have the effect of cutting down by one-third a clear gift of the income in favour of tenants in common for life manifest in the earlier part of the will. Upon the death of a tenant for life of a share in income before the period of distribution, the accumulations of income of such share follow the destination of the corpus, provided the time described by statute for accumulations of income is not exceeded. Rubbins, In re; Gill v. Worrall, 78 L. T. 218—Stirling, J.

Life Gifts to A, B, and C—Remainders to Respective Children—Referential Gifts to Survivors and Respective Issue—Intestacy.—A testator bequeathed three shares in his property to his three sons respectively for their respective lives, and after the death of any of them the testator directed that the share of the one so dying should go to such of his children as should attain the age of twenty-one years or (being females) marry, with a proviso that, in case any of his said sons should die without leaving issue who should acquire a vested interest in the share of their father, then the share of such son should go to the surviving sons and their respective issue "upon such and the like trusts and to and for such and the like intents and purposes . . . as are herein declared with respect to their respective original" shares. There was no general gift over on the death of all three sons without issue. A and B predeceased C, each of them leaving issue. C died without ever having had issue:—Held, that, on the true construction of the will, there was an intestacy as to the share of C on his death. Harrison v. Harrison, 70 L. J. Ch. 551; [1901] 2 Ch. 136; 85 L. T. 39; 49 W. R. 613—Cozens-Hardy, J.

The third rule of construction laid down by KAY, J., in Bowman, In re; Lay, In re; Whythead v. Boulton (41 Ch. D. 525), examined and dissented from. Hodge v. Foot (84 Beav. 349); Arnold's Estate, In re (89 L. J. Ch. 875; L. R. 10 Eq. 252), and Walker's Estate, In re; Church v. Tyacke (48 L. J. Ch. 598; 12 Ch. D. 205), not followed. Id.

"Heirs and assigns" of Survivor for Ever.—A testator by will devised a farm, after the determination of terms of ninety-nine years previously created, to the use of a nephew, and the four sons of such nephew, with an ultimate devise upon trust to and for the use of the heirs and assigns of the survivor of the four sons for ever. The survivor of such sons, during his lifetime, sold and conveyed the farm in fee-simple to the defendant, and died leaving the plaintiff his heiress-at-law. In an action by the plaintiff to recover possession of the farm, — Held, that, as the ultimate limitation to the heirs and assigns of the survivor of the four sons must be construed as being one to the heirs of the survivor and their assigns, the plaintiff, as heiress-at-law of the survivor of such sons, was entitled to succeed. Quested v. Michell (24 L. J. Ch. 722; 1 Jur. (N.S.) 488), Tapner v. Merlott (Willes, 177), and Brookman v. Smith (40 L. J. Ex. 161; L. R. 6 Ex. 291) considered. Milman v. Lane, 70 L. J. K.B. 731; [1901] 2 K.B. 745; 85 L. T. 180; 49 W. R. 545—C.A.

(pp) Vesting.

Gift of Moiety Contingent in Terms—Discretionary Gift of Income of Whole as Maintenance.—Although a testamentary gift of property contingent in its terms, coupled with a gift of the income of the property till the happening of the contingency, will be construed as conferring a vested interest, yet a testamentary gift of property to A and B in equal moieties on their attaining twenty-one, coupled with a direction that the income of the property during their respective minorities shall be applied for the maintenance of A and B, will not be construed as conferring vested interests on A and B before they attain twenty-one, since this direction is not equivalent to a gift to A and B of the income of their respective moieties within the meaning of the rule above stated. Fox v. Fox (L. R. 19 Eq. 286) distinguished. Gosling, In re; Gosling v. Elcock, 71 L. J. Ch. 680; [1902] 1 Ch. 915; 87 L. T. 63—Swinfen Eady, J.

Gift on Attaining Twenty-one—Gift of Income as Maintenance.—Testator by will gave his residuary real and personal estate in trust to pay and divide the same between his two children by name on their severally attaining the age of twenty-one years, the income during the respective minorities of his said two children to be applied in and towards their maintenance and support; and he also conferred a power of advancement on the trustees:—Held, that on the true construction of the will the gift of income for maintenance was a gift of the income attributable to each share, and not an indiscriminate gift of the whole income, and therefore, according to the well-settled rule, each child took a vested interest though dying under the age of twenty-one years. Gossling, In re; Gossling v. Gossling, 72 L. J. Ch. 433; [1903] 1 Ch. 448; 88 L. T. 279—C.A.

Severance—Interest—Direction to Set Apart—Direction for Payment at Subsequent Dates.]—A testatrix directed her executors to set apart the sum of 200*l.* for a legatee, to be paid as to part at twenty-one, a further part at twenty-five, and the balance at thirty. The legatee survived the testatrix, and died before the age of twenty-five, having received part payment on attaining twenty-one:—Held, that the legacy vested absolutely at the death of the testatrix, and was payable at twenty-one, with interest from one year after her death. Gosling v. Gosling (Johnson, 265) followed. Couturier, In re; Couturier v. Shea, 76 L. J. Ch. 296; [1907] 1 Ch. 470; 96 L. T. 560—Joyce, J.

Gift to Life Tenants, then to their Respective Children or Legal Representatives—Alternative Gift.]—By his will a testator gave to two of his daughters three shares each of the twenty shares into which he directed his residuary estate to be divided, to be secured to them for the term of their lives, and after their deaths their respective three shares were “to be equally divided between their respective children or legal representatives.” One daughter had no children, the other had children who survived the testator, but all predeceased their mother. Upon the death of the mother,—Held, that the words “or legal representatives” referred to the legal representatives of the deceased tenant for life and not of her children, and that these words had not the effect of a substitutionary or divesting clause, but constituted an alternative gift to arise in the event of there being no child who took a vested interest. Consequently the children of the testator’s daughter took vested interests which passed to their legal personal representatives. Roberts, In re; Percival v. Roberts, 72 L. J. Ch. 597; [1903] 2 Ch. 200; 88 L. T. 505—Joyce, J.

Direction to Convey at Postponed Period—Gift over to Survivors and Issue of Predeceasing—Vesting in Issue.]—A testator directed his trustees, on the death or second marriage of his widow, to pay the residue to such of the children as had arrived at the age of twenty-one, or as they respectively reached that age, declaring that the issue of children dying leaving issue should be entitled “to the shares, original and accruing, which their parent would have taken by survivorship,” and that the share of any child dying without leaving issue should be divided among the surviving children and the issue of such children as might have died leaving issue, equally per stirpes. A, a son of the testator, survived the testator, but predeceased the widow, leaving a child, B. It was found that no right had vested in A:—Held, that the share destined to A did not vest in B on the death of her father, the issue of children predeceasing the period of payment being substituted to their parent and being subject to the contingencies as regarded survivorship which qualified his right; and that vesting in B was postponed until the death or second marriage of the widow, but not until B attained twenty-one. Martin v. Holgate (35 L. J. Ch. 789; L. R. 1 H.L. 175) distinguished. Banks’s Trustees v. Banks’s Trustees, [1907] S.C. 125—Ct. of Sess.

Life Rent—Issue Predeceasing Parent.]—A testator bequeathed to trustees a fund upon trust to pay the income thereof equally to each of his daughters, and directed as follows: “On the death of my said daughters respectively, leaving lawful issue, I hereby direct my trustees to divide equally amongst the issue of each of my said daughters” the fund of which such daughter was life-rentrix. One of the daughters had four children, two of whom died before their mother:—Held (Lord Watson and Lord HERSHELL dissenting), that the predeceasing children took a vested interest in the fund which passed to their representatives. Hickling v. Fair, 68 L. J. P.C. 12; [1899] A.C. 15—H.L. (Sc.). And see ABSOLUTE GIFT, supra.

Future Gift—Discretionary Trust of Intermediate Income.]—Where a testator directed his trustees to hold a third share of his residuary estate in trust to pay the income thereof, or such part thereof as they should think fit, to his son for his advancement, preferment, or benefit, by equal weekly instalments, until he should attain the age of thirty-five years, and then directed his trustees to pay the corpus of such share of residue to his son on attaining that age, it was held that upon the death of the testator the son took an immediate vested interest, although he had not then attained the age of thirty-five years. The rule of law enunciated by SIR G. JESSEL, M.R., in Parker, In re; Barker v. Barker (16 Ch. D. 44, 46), approved and applied. Williams, In re; Williams v. Williams, 76 L. J. WORK AND LABOUR.

Building Contract—Penalties—Building Owner to make Allowances for Delay—Default by Building Owner.—By a building contract certain matters causing delay and "other causes beyond the contractor's control" were to be submitted to the board of directors of the owners of the building, who were to "adjudicate thereon and make due allowance therefor if necessary, and their decision shall be final":—Held, that the exclusive jurisdiction of the board did not extend to delay caused by interference by the building owners or their architect with the conduct of the works, by default in not giving the contractors possession of the premises, and in not providing plans and drawings in due time; and so, such interference and defaults being made out, the building owners could not recover penalties. Wells v. Army and Navy Co-operative Society, 86 L. T. 764—Wright, J.

— Reputed Ownership—Order and Disposition.—A clause in a building contract whereby it is provided that "all plant work or materials brought to and left upon the ground by the contractor shall be considered the property" of the building owners, does not constitute them the true owners thereof for the purpose of consent to reputation of ownership by the contractor. Keen, In re; Collins, ex parte, 71 L. J. K.B. 487; [1902] 1 K.B. 555; 86 L. T. 235; 50 W. R. 334; 9 Manson, 145—D.

— Default of Builder—Re-entry of Landowner—Damages.—A builder having made default under a building agreement, the landowner exercised the right reserved to him in such case by the agreement to re-enter and take possession of the land and premises, with all the buildings, plant, and materials thereon:—Held, that an action would lie at the suit of the landowner against the builder to recover damages for the builder's breach of the agreement. Marshall v. Mackintosh, 78 L. T. 750; 46 W. R. 580—Kennedy, J.

— Delay in Giving Possession—Damages.—By a contract entered into between the plaintiff and defendant, and dated July 4, the former contracted to pull down certain old houses and erect new ones on the site, the work to be completed within six months. By the contract all the brickwork for the whole houses was to be built up simultaneously, no part being raised more than five feet higher than the remainder. The plaintiff agreed, at the request of the defendant, to a delay of a fortnight from July 4 in getting possession, but it was not till some weeks after the expiration of the fortnight that possession of a part of the property was given, and not till about five months thereafter that possession of the whole was given. In an action to recover damages for breach of contract, —Held, that there was to be implied in the contract a term that the defendant would give possession forthwith, but that the agreement to allow a fortnight's delay relieved the defendant from that obligation, and substituted a reasonable time, and that possession not having been given within a reasonable time the plaintiff was entitled to damages for loss sustained by him by reason of the delay. Freeman v. Hensler, 64 J. P. 260—C.A.

— Surveyor's Fees for Taking Out Quantities

—Custom of Building Trade.—The defendant, desiring to build certain houses, employed an architect to make out plans. The architect having done so, instructed the plaintiff, a quantity surveyor, to take out quantities, and when these were completed the architect invited tenders, all of which exceeded the limits of the defendant's proposed expenditure. No tender was accepted. It did not appear that the defendant had authorised the application for tenders. The plaintiff sued for the amount of his charges for taking out the quantities, and relied on the alleged custom in the building trade throwing on the building owner the liability for the surveyor's fees where no tender is accepted, or for other reasons the work is not proceeded with. The jury found at the trial that the employment of the surveyor was neither within the scope of the architect's authority nor sanctioned by the defendant, and that there is no custom authorising such employment without the consent of the building owner:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to judgment. Per O'Brien, J., and Gibson, J., that the custom relied on was not one of which the Court must take notice; that even if the alleged custom was reasonable, as to which quære, the verdict against the custom could not be interfered with. Antisell v. Doyle, [1899] 2 Ir. R. 275—Q.B. D.

— Abandonment of Contract by Builder before Completion—Completion by Building Owner —Action on Quantum Meruit.—The plaintiff, a builder, in consideration of a lump sum to be paid to him by the defendant, agreed to erect certain buildings upon the defendant's land. Before the completion of the buildings the plaintiff abandoned the contract, and thereupon the defendant took possession of the buildings which had been erected and completed them himself. In an action by the plaintiff, in respect of so much of the agreed work as had been executed before the abandonment of the contract, to recover as for the value of work done and materials provided,—Held, that, in the absence of evidence of a fresh agreement by the defendant to pay the plaintiff the value of the work done and materials provided prior to the abandonment of the original contract, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover; and that the mere fact of the defendant taking possession of the buildings and completing them himself was not evidence from which such a fresh agreement could be inferred. Sumpter v. Hedges, 87 L. J. Q.B. 545; [1899] 1 Q.B. 673; 78 L. T. 378; 46 W. R. 454—C.A.

— Alleged Wrongful Cancellation—Contract Preventing Contractor from Carrying out Contract.]—The plaintiff sued the defendants for having prevented him carrying out his part of a certain contract entered into between them to construct a dock, and for wrongfully renouncing the contract. The defendants pleaded that it was a term of the contract that the manager named therein had power to cancel the contract if dissatisfied with the works, and that he did cancel the contract on that ground. Replication that the manager's dissatisfaction was caused by the defendant's default in not giving the plaintiff possession of the site of the proposed dock so as to enable him to perform the contract:—Held, that the plaintiff on this replication was bound to prove that the specific matter therein alleged—that is, the not giving possession of the site—was the cause of the delay in carrying out the contract which in fact operated on the manager's mind and caused him dissatisfaction, and that as there was no evidence of that or of the plaintiff's readiness and willingness to perform the contract, the defendants were entitled to a verdict. Mort's Dock and Engineering Co. v. Wade, 22 T. L. R. 61—P.C.

— Non-fulfilment—Work Done Equivalent to Work Contracted for.]—Where a contract provides for stipulated work at a lump sum, and such work is not done, but its equivalent or better work is effected, no claim for such substituted work can be sustained. Forman v. The "Liddesdale", 69 L. J. P.C. 44; [1900] A.C. 190; 82 L. T. 331; 9 Asp. M.C. 45—P.C.

Authority of Agent—Variation—Ratification.]—Where there is a provision that there is to be no alteration or deviation from the agreed specification or claim made for extras without the written sanction of an agent, work so ordered must be within the scope of the agent's authority to order. Id.

The fact that the owner of the chattel thus repaired has sold it at a price enhanced by such unauthorised labour does not amount to acquiescence on his part or acceptance of liability for the work done. Id.

Representations not Intended to be Solely Acted upon—Provision as to Verification by Contractor of Matters which could Influence Tender.]—In a contract to execute certain sewage works the plaintiffs covenanted to do the works described in the drawings and specifications according to the drawings, specifications, &c., and the defendants covenanted to pay for the works on the receipt of the certificate in writing of their engineer as provided by the conditions. The specification provided that (4) the drawings and specifications were to be considered explanatory of each other, and any discrepancies should be explained by the engineer; (5) the contractor should sink trial holes, &c., and set out and keep correct the works; (38) provisions as to the engineers' certificate of completion; (39) all disputes as to the works, the construction of the contract, &c., were to be referred to the engineer, whose decision should be final, other differences to be referred to arbitration; (43) the contractor should satisfy himself, as to the levels, character, and nature of all existing works, &c., of the nature of the strata, &c., and should obtain his own information on all matters which could in any way influence his tender; no charge for extra work, or otherwise, was to be allowed in consequence of any incorrect information or inaccuracies in the drawings, specifications, or estimate of quantities; (46) the contractor was to verify for himself the particulars of existing matters shown on the drawings; (48) the information given as to existing walls, &c. was given as the best in the defendants' possession, but the defendants did not hold themselves in any way responsible for its accuracy. On completion the plaintiffs claimed 36,574l. from the defendants on the grounds—First, That the plans shewed a certain existing wall extending nine feet below the Ordnance datum line which could be utilised for the purposes of the works; that this wall did not exist, and that consequently the plans for the works had been altered, and the plaintiffs, at the direction of the engineer, had completed the works at this extra cost. Secondly, That the defendants had fraudulently misrepresented the structure and existence of this wall, and had thereby induced the plaintiffs to enter into the contract to their detriment. The defendants relied on the absence of a certificate from their engineer and on the conditions of the specification, and they denied the making of any representation and any fraud:—Held, that clause 43 and other like clauses in the specification did not protect the defendants from liability. Held, also, that the defendants, though innocently delivering the plans and specifications to the plaintiffs, could not escape liability for any fraudulent representations made by their agents therein. Cornfoot v. Fowke (6 L. J. Ex. 297; 6 M. & W. 358) explained. Pearson v. Dublin Corporation, 77 L. J. P.C. 1; [1907] A.C. 351—H.L. (Ir.)

Fraudulent Representation—Principal and Agent—Clause Disclaiming Responsibility for Representations Made—Questions for the Jury.]—A clause in the contract by which the employer disclaims responsibility for the accuracy of the statements and information with which he supplies the contractor, and as to which the contractor is to satisfy himself, does not confer exemption on the employer for statements fraudulently or recklessly made by the employer or his agent. Whatever be the form of the contract, the party who makes an allegation of fraud is entitled to have the question submitted to a jury. Pearson v. Dublin Corporation, 77 L. J. P.C. 1; [1907] A.C. 351; 97 L. T. 645—H.L. (Ir.)

Builder and Building-owner—Completion of Building at Given Date—Delay by Default of Sub-contractors and Specialists—Rights of Parties.]—Where a builder contracts with a building-owner to complete a building for one entire sum, and to enter into sub-contracts for certain portions of the work and materials with sub-contractors and specialists appointed by the building-owner, but to be paid by the builder out of the contract price, and as a basis of the whole contract the builder accepts the primary obligation of completing the building at a given date, there is no implied promise on the part of the building-owner that the sub-contractors' or specialists' work shall be performed and materials supplied by them without unreasonable delay, nor is any duty cast upon the building-owner to provide against such delay; so that where, under such a contract, the completion of a building has been delayed by the default of the sub-contractors and specialists, the builder cannot maintain an action for damages against the building-owner upon the footing that there was an obligation upon the building-owner to see that the work was done and materials supplied by the sub-contractors and specialists within a reasonable time. Mitchell v. Guildford Union, 1 L. G. R. 857; 68 J. P. 84. — Phillimore, J.

Architect—Contract for Designing and Carrying out Building Operation—Plans—Property in Building Owner.]—An architect was employed by a building owner to do all the things which were necessary to be done by an architect for the purpose of designing and carrying out certain building operations, at a remuneration of 5 per cent. upon the contract price of the work. In pursuance of the employment the architect prepared plans and duly carried out the work, and the building owner paid him the agreed remuneration:—Held, that the property in the plans was in the building owner, and that the architect was not entitled to retain them. Gibbon v. Pease, 74 L. J. K.B. 502; [1905] 1 K.B. 810; 92 L. T. 433; 53 W. R. 417; 69 J. P. 209; 3 L. G. R. 461; 21 T. L. R. 365—C.A.

— Certificate—Building Contract—Architect in Position of Arbitrator—Negligence.]—A building owner employed an architect for reward to supervise the erection of certain houses by a contractor. The building contract provided for payments on account of the price of the works during their progress, and for payment of the balance after their completion, upon certificates of the architect, and that a certificate of the architect, shewing the final balance due or payable to the contractor, should be conclusive evidence of the works having been duly completed, and that the contractor was entitled to receive payment of the final balance:—Held (ROMER, L.J., dissenting), that the architect, in ascertaining the amount due to the contractor and certifying for the same under the contract, occupied the position of an arbitrator, and therefore was not liable to an action by the building owner for negligence in the exercise of those functions. Chambers v. Goldthorpe, 70 L. J. K.B. 482; [1901] 1 K.B. 624; 84 L. T. 444; 49 W. R. 401—C.A.

— Finality—Claim by Employer against Contractor for Defective Materials—Decision of Architect that Contractor ought not to be Paid—Arbitration Clause.]—A building agreement provided that the contractor should be entitled under certificates to be issued by the architect to payment by the employer by instalments, but that "no certificate of the architect shall be considered conclusive evidence as to the sufficiency of any work or materials to which it relates, nor shall it relieve the contractor from his liability to make good all defects as provided by this agreement." It further provided that, save as to certain specially excepted matters, any dispute or difference arising between the employer and the contractor as to the construction of the contract, or as to any matter or thing arising thereunder, should be referred to arbitration, and that the arbitrator should have power to open up, review, and revise any certificate, opinion, decision, requisition, or notice (save as to the specially excepted matters), and to determine all matters submitted to him, as if no such certificate, opinion, &c., had been given. The architect by the agreement had power during the progress of the works to order the removal and re-execution of any work executed with materials or workmanship not in accordance with the drawings and specification, and any faults appearing within twelve months from the completion of the works arising in the opinion of the architect from materials or workmanship not in accordance with the drawings or specification were, upon the directions in writing of the architect, to be amended and made good by the contractor at his own cost, unless the architect should decide that he ought to be paid for the same. The architect gave his final certificate as to what was due by the employer under the contract:—Held, that this certificate was not conclusive as to the rights of the parties, and that the employer was entitled to set up a counter-claim for damages in respect of alleged defective work and the supply of improper materials under the contract. Robins v. Goddard, 74 L. J. K.B. 167; [1905] 1 K.B. 294; 92 L. T. 10; 21 T. L. R. 120—C.A.

— Deviations from Contract—Architect's Authority.]—A having contracted with B to use cement mortar in building the walls of a house which he was erecting for B, —Held, that B's architect had not authority, without B's consent, to sanction the use of milled lime instead of cement mortar. Steel v. Young, [1907] S.C. 360—Ct. of Sess.

Engineer to Fix Price of Work Done—Death of Engineer—Successor.]—Under a contract with a local authority, "J. M., of the firm of J. M. & Sons, or other the engineers of the corporation," was appointed to fix the price of extra work done. During the contract J. M. died, and his son, E. M., a member of the firm of J. M. & Sons, was appointed by the local authority as his successor:—Held, that E. M. could fix the price of work which had been begun before he was appointed, and that in doing so E. M. was bound to act as arbitrator and not as a servant of the local authority. Kellett v. Stockport Corporation, 70 J. P. 154—Walton, J.

Contractors—Power to Dismiss—Determination by Engineer as to Performance of Contract—Reference of Matters to Arbitrator.]—On a motion to restrain the defendants from acting on a notice given by them or their engineer pursuant to a contract between plaintiffs and defendants from entering on or taking possession of works in course of execution under such contract and for damages, it appeared that the defendants were carrying out a scheme for a water supply, and had contracted with the plaintiffs to sink certain wells. The work was to be performed to the satisfaction of the de-defendants' engineer, and any dispute was to go to arbitration, and if in the judgment of the engineer sufficient dispatch was not used the council or their engineer might dismiss the contractors and their workmen. Difficulties having arisen in carrying out the work, and delay being thereby occasioned, the council gave notice dismissing the contractors and their men:—Held, that the terms of the contract were consistent as a whole, and that the reference to arbitration was engrafted upon them, and that the contractors were not bound to give up to the engineer the decision of every question. That the Court ought to imply that the defendants would not act upon the summary clauses until the arbitrators had affirmed the judgment of the engineer. Injunction granted accordingly to preserve the status quo until trial or an award should be made. Foster v. Hastings Corporation, 87 L. T. 736—Farwell, J.

Contract to Execute Works—Wrongful Seizure of Works by Defendants—Plaintiff Entitled to Determine the Contract.—Where the appellants, having guaranteed the due performance of a contract made with a municipal corporation for the execution of works on its land, agreed on the contractor's default with the respondent to complete the execution of the works on the terms of the original contract, and in effect delegated the supervision of the contract and all incidental arrangements to the corporation, and the corporation, according to the findings of the jury, improperly prevented the respondent from proceeding with the stipulated expenditure and wrongfully seized the works and extruded the respondent,—Held, that, the appellants, having by their conduct constituted the corporation their agents and the delay being attributable to their acts, could not justify the seizure and re-entry; and that the respondent was entitled to treat the contract as at an end and sue on a quantum meruit. Lodder v. Slowey, 73 L. J. P.C. 82; [1904] A.C. 442; 91 L. T. 211; 53 W. R. 181; 20 T. L. R. 597—P.C.

Contract in Two Separate Parts—Breach—Penalty or Liquidated Damages.—A contractor agreed with the owner of a house to carry out certain work for an electric light installation in the house in accordance with a certain specification for a fixed sum, and consented to pay 5*l.* as liquidated damages for each day exceeding the number of days within which the work had to be completed. By the specification the wiring was to be handed over to the owner of the house in faultless condition within twenty days from the signing of the contract, and the fittings (which the house-owner was to supply) were to be fixed and handed over in similar condition within fourteen days of their delivery by the owner of the house to the contractor:—Held, that the 5*l.* was agreed upon as liquidated damages for each day's delay in executing each part of the contract, the times limited in the contract being two separate periods, at the expiration of each of which the damages began to accrue. Stegmann v. O'Connor, 81 L. T. 627—C.A.

Partly Performed Contract—Amount Recoverable—Penalty.—In an action on a contract, and alternately on a quantum meruit, to recover the price of certain specified work, if the contract is not properly carried out, the plaintiff can only recover the real value of the work done and the materials supplied. Chapel v. Hickes (2 C. & M. 214) followed. A contractor undertook to deliver up the whole of certain work in connection with wiring and blocks for electric light within twenty days of signing the contract; and, further, to properly fix and connect the fittings within fourteen days of the delivery to him of such fittings. He then wrote: "I undertake to carry out the work in connection with the cables, wires, and fittings in strict accordance with the specification and schedule within the times stated in the said specification for the sum of 76*l.* 10*s.*, and I consent to pay the sum of 5*l.* for liquidated damages and not as a penalty for every day exceeding the number of days within which the work has to be completed":—Held, that 5*l.* per day was payable for delay at either stage of the contract. Stegmann v. O'Connor, 80 L. T. 234—D.

Arbitration Clause in Principal Contract Incorporated in Sub-Contract.—A contractor, who had contracted with a railway company for the construction of certain works, entered into a sub-contract for the execution of part of the work. In the contract between the principal contractor and the sub-contractor it was stipulated that the work was to be executed "according to plans and specifications," which included a "general specification," forming part of the contract between the principal contractor and the railway company. This "general specification" contained a clause providing that disputes were to be submitted to arbitration. In an action by the sub-contractor against the principal contractor for certain sums alleged to be due under the sub-contract, the principal contractor pleaded that the claims made in the action fell within the arbitration clause of the "general specification," which he maintained was imported into the sub-contract:—Held, that the arbitration clause of the general specification—while it was incorporated in the sub-contract to the effect of making the decisions of an arbiter in questions between the railway company and the principal contractor binding upon the sub-contractor—was not incorporated in the sub-contract quoad matters which concerned only the rights inter se of the principal contractor and the sub-contractor. Goodwins, Jardine & Co. v. Brand, 7 F. 995—Ct. of Sess.

Plant and Materials on Premises—Lien of Building Owner after Notice—Judgment against Builder—Seizure of Plant and Building Materials in Execution—Notice by Building Owner Subsequent to Seizure—Rights of Parties to Plant.—By a building contract it was provided that, if the builder should fail to proceed with due diligence with his part of the contract, the employer might give the builder notice to proceed with the work, and that after such notice had been given the builder should not remove from the site any plant or building materials placed thereon for the purpose of the work, and that the employer should have a lien upon the plant and building materials from the date of the notice, and that, in the event of the builder not proceeding with the work within seven days, the employer might enter upon the site and take possession of all the plant and building materials, when all the building materials should become the property of the employer absolutely, and he should have a lien upon the plant until the works were completed. A judgment having been obtained against the builder, the sheriff entered upon the works and seized the plant and building materials under a writ of fi. fa. Two days afterwards the employer gave the builder notice to proceed with the work, and, upon non-compliance with the notice, claimed that he was entitled to the building materials and had a lien upon the plant in priority to the execution creditor. The County Court Judge decided in his favour only in respect of the building materials:—Held, that the employer had no interest in the plant until the notice was given; and that, therefore, at the time when the plant was seized it was free from any lien or incumbrance. Byford v. Russell, 76 J. J. K.B. 744; [1907] 2 K.B. 522; 97 L. T. 104—D.

— Default of Contractor in Executing Works—Rights of Employer.—A building contract based on the theory that the employer is to be put in possession of completed works, and providing that all plant and materials brought on the ground by the contractor shall be considered the property of the employer until the completion of the contract has been duly certified, and that on default of the contractor the employer may enter upon and take possession of the works, materials, and plant, and the expense incurred in completing the works shall be a debt due from the contractor, vests the plant and materials in the employer at law subject to a condition that upon the due completion of the contract the contractor shall be at liberty to remove them. Therefore, if the contractor makes default in performing his part of the contract, and the works are in consequence never completed, neither he nor his trustee in bankruptcy can recover the plant or materials from the employer. Hart v. Portgait Harbour, 72 L. J. Ch. 426; [1903] 1 Ch. 690; 88 L. T. 841; 51 W. R. 461—Farwell, J.

The effect of such a contract is to provide not only machinery to enable the employer to secure the performance of the contract, but also a security for the employer that the work shall be performed, of which security the employer is entitled to avail himself if, by the default of the contractor, the work is not performed at all. Ib.

— Extraordinary Expenses—Indemnity by Contractor in Respect of Damage to Property.—Under a contract for the construction of a reservoir made between a contractor and a water company, the contractor was to be absolutely and solely responsible for “injury or damage to person and property of any description whatever which may be caused by, or result from, the execution of the works”:—Held, that under this clause the contractor was liable to reimburse the water company the expenses recovered from them by the district council in respect of damage done to the roads over which extraordinary traffic had passed in connection with the work of construction of the reservoir. Croydon Rural Council v. Sutton District Water Co., 71 J. P. 513; 6 L. G. R. 35—D.

5. — Lien of Coachbuilder—Hire-purchase Agreement—Authority of Hirer of Carriage to Employ Coachbuilder to Repair Carriage.—A person who hires a dogcart under a hire-purchase agreement, and undertakes “to keep and preserve the said dogcart from injury,” has implied authority from the owner to employ a coachbuilder to do necessary repairs to the dogcart, and, if he does so, will create a lien in favour of the coachbuilder not only as against himself, but also as against the owner of the dogcart. Keene v. Thomas, 74 L. J. K.B. 21; [1905] 1 K.B. 136; 92 L. T. 19; 53 W. R. 336; 21 T. L. R. 2—D.

— Gas-pipes—Damage to, in Execution of Sewerage Works—Indemnity by Contractor.—Under a contract for the execution of certain sewerage works (which had to be carried out under the direction of the district council's engineer) the contractor agreed to “save the district council harmless and indemnified from all claims and actions for or in respect of any damage or injury to persons or property arising from or occasioned by the neglect, default, or misconduct of the contractor, or of any person employed by the contractor or otherwise howsoever from or by the execution of the works.” In the course of the work damage was caused to the gas-mains for which the district council were held liable to the gas company, whereupon the council claimed to be indemnified by the contractor. At the trial the jury found that the injury to the gas-mains was due to the nature of the work and not to the mode in which it was executed:—Held, that the district council was not entitled to be indemnified by the contractor in respect of such damage. Ilford Gas Co. v. Ilford Urban Council, 67 J. P. 365—C.A.

— Railway Company—Contractors—Agreement for Construction—Completion—Interest on Shares—Payment out of Penalties Due from Contractors.—By a contract for making the line of the plaintiff railway, it was to be completed to the satisfaction of the engineer of the company in two years from the commencement of the works. The contract price was to be paid in debentures and shares of the company, which were to be issued at the request of the contractors to their nominees, or offered for public subscription. The contractors, having requested the debentures and shares to be offered for public subscription, entered into an agreement to pay to the company interest on the debenture and preference stock issued by the company until the railway was completed. The works were commenced on January 15, 1890, but the time for completion was afterwards extended to May 31, 1892. They were not completed for more than a year after the time fixed. Interest on the debentures and preference stock in the meantime became due which was not paid by the contractors, and was therefore paid by the company. This action was afterwards brought, and certain of the matters in dispute were referred to arbitration, but the award was to be enforced only in the present action:—Held, that the contractors had not completed the line within the time fixed, and were liable to pay the interest between October 1 and December 31, 1892; but that the arbitrator having found that the company were liable for not taking over the line when it was completed, the contractors were entitled to have the amount for which the company were so liable applied in reduction of the interest, but that the contractors were not liable for the interest between January 15 and May 31, 1892, between which dates the time for completion was extended:—Held also, that it was not ultra vires the company to apply penalties due from the contractors in payment of interest on shares, as such penalties were not capital, and dividends can be paid out of other money besides profits. Alcoy and Gandia Railway v. Greenhill, 79 L. T. 257—C.A.
